In this Interval the Archbishop held his ⁵ Provincial Council by his own Metropo- ⁶ litical Authority, August the 20th. The Occasion of it was to treat about the ⁷ Papal Schism, and Other Matters which concern'd the State of the Church. For ^{Reg. Langley Dunelm. fol. 22. a.} this the Archbishop Order'd not only the Usual Members to be Summon'd to it; but such other Persons of Great Learning, as the Bishops should think useful in that Case, to come Personally to this Synod. But to this, as I take the Provincial Council of Canterbury to have given the Occasion, so will the design of it be best understood, by what I come now to observe concerning that Synod.

On ⁶ July the 23d the Archbishop of Canterbury held a Provincial Synod for the ⁷ Union of the Church, and in Order to make up the breach between the Pope and ⁸ Cardinals. For this Cause, and no other, He tells his Clergy he then called them ⁹ together. At the ¹⁰ second Session, the Cause of the Convocation being declar'd, ¹¹ and the Inferior Clergy (they are the Words of the Register, lest Dr. A. should ¹² think I dealt too Familiarly with them) being separated from the Greater Pre- ¹³ lates in the Schools of Divinity under the Chapter House of St. Pauls; juxta Assig- ¹⁴ nationem Domini Archiepiscopi; The Upper House chose six Bishops, and twelve Abbots, to deliberate about the Union of the Church: The Clergy, at the same time, chose Twenty Four of their Body; " & ejusdem Electionis processum ¹⁵ " Statim, ut decuit, domui Superiori retulit; as the Register speaks. ^{Regi Arundel. Par. i. fol. 71. a. b. See the Mandate. Append. ad Ann. 1408. Reg. ib. fol. 72, 73.}

Upon Sunday July the 29th, being agreed on their expedient, the King came to the Chapter House, and the Archbishop there declared the Resolution of the Synod to Him. The King, as much as in him Lay, approved of, and confirmed it, and ordered that it should be publish'd by the Archbishop before Sermon at Paul's Cross, as corroborated by him. ¹⁶ The conclusion was that the King ¹⁷ should in his own Name, and in the Name of all the Prelates, and Lords, ¹⁸ Clergy and Commons of the Realm send solemn Ambassadors to the Pope with their ¹⁹ Resolutions, not to suffer any more Mony to be transmitted out of England, while the Schism lasted; for whose Charges a Penny Farthing out of every Pound of their Ecclesiastical Benefices was agreed to be paid. This being thus settled July the 29th; was, I conceive, sent down to Those of the Other Province, who I make no doubt at their meeting in August agreed to it. ^{Reg. Repyn- don. Lincoln. fol. 31.}

It was not long after this, before the Cardinal of Bourdeaux came hither, with Letters and Authority to invite our Bishops and Prelates to the Council of Pisa, to be held upon Lady-day next, in order to the Concluding of the so much desir'd Union, in the (then acknowledged and supposed) Head of the Church. ²⁰ This Obliged our Archbishop to hold another Synod the Morrow af- ²¹ ter Hilary, January the 14th. In this they agreed upon the Persons who should ²² go to the Council, out of this Province; and upon the Allowance that should be ²³ made to them for their Expence. And having thus dispatcht what they prin- ²⁴ cipally met about, the Archbishop, with the Council and Assent of the Prelates, ²⁵ at the Petition of the Clergy, publish'd the Provincial Constitutions, which he had ²⁶ before set forth in his Provincial Council at Oxford. The manner of which be- ²⁷ ing remarkable, I shall give a brief Account of it. ^{Reg. Arundel. Par. ii. fol. 7, 8. See the (Reg. Beauford. Wint. fol. 6.) Mandate, Append. ad Ann.}

" ²⁸ Whereas in our Provincial Council lately held at Oxford, we set forth cer- ²⁹ tain Provincial Constitutions with you, and the rest of our Brethren, and Suf- ³⁰ fragans Counsel and Advice, at the instant Petition of the whole Clergy of ³¹ our Province of Canterbury; and afterwards in our last Council, Celebrated ³² in the Church of St. Paul London, the said Constitutions there rehears'd before ³³ you,

K. HENRY^{the IV. th.} you, and our Venerable Brethren and Clergy afore said, did by a repeated
 "Promulgation Publish; We considering that Laws are in vain made, unless they
 "be also put in due Execution, do herewith transmit the said Constitutions, to be "publish'd by you, that no One may pretend Ignorance of them: Willing and "Enjoining you to send, under your Seal, and with your Letters (containing "the Tenour of these) Copies of the said Constitutions to All and Singular our "Venerable Brethren and Suffragans of our said Province; and to Enjoin them, by "our Authority, as by these Presents we do Enjoin them, to Publish, or cause "to be Publish'd, in Every their Cities, and Diocesses, as it shall appertain to "every one, the afore said Constitutions, in their Synods and Chapters, according "to the Canonical and Provincial Constitutions set forth for that purpose. This was the Substance of the Archbishop's Mandate; and in it we see after what manner these sort of Constitutions were wont to be publish'd; and what care was taken for the due Performance of it.

Thus pass'd this busy Year; towards the latter of the next, a Parliament was call'd to meet first at ¹ Bristol; and then at Westminster, on the Munday fortnight after Hilary, January the 27th. It continued sitting ² to the 15th of March, the Eve of Palm Sunday; when it was adjourned to April the 7th; a Fortnight after Easter. ³ Then the Session was Resumed and Continued to May the 9th; as appears by the Rolls of Parliament. Let us see how the two Convocations Attended upon these Sessions.

On the ⁴ Third of January the King issued out his Writs to the two Archbi-shops for their Convocations to meet some time before the 15th of February following. The ⁵ Archbishop of Canterbury Assembled his Province February the 17th.
 The ⁶ Archbishop of York, more punctually, that of his Province, February the 15th both about the Middle of the former Session of the Parliament. How long that of our Province sate, I cannot certainly tell: Those of the other being met at Beverley before the Archbishops Commissioners (for he was himself at London at the Parliament) refused to Grant any supply to the King. Upon this they were adjourn'd to the Conventual Church of Clementhorp by York; April the 11th. There the Archbishop appear'd in Person with them; yet neither then would they Grant any thing. From thence they were Adjourn'd again to May the 23d, a Fortnight after the Parliament was Dissolved: and then (at last) they Granted a Tenth, at the Earnest Prayers, and Request of the Archbishop: as the Certificate of their Concession speaks. By this Unwillingness to grant any Subsidy, the Clergy of this Province met, within both the Sessions of the Parliament. But they did but meet; for immediately they were Adjourn'd; and thereby shew'd that their Assembling was for some Other Purpose, than that of Attending upon a Parliament, at 150 Miles distance from them.

The Year following the King ⁷ Summon'd his Parliament to meet at Westminster the Morrow after All-Souls, November the 3d, It met according to the Summons, and ⁸ continued till the 20th of December following. ⁹ In this Parliament the famous Cause between the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Chancellor and Proctors of the University of Oxford was settled and confirm'd by the Authority of the King and his Lords there, and order'd to be Enroll'd among the Rolls of Parliament. Archbishop Arundel being in his Visitation of the Diocess of Lincoln, came in his Way to visit the University, within the Limits of it. They insisted upon their Exemption by Papal Authority; and refus'd to submit to his Visitation. The Archbishop urged the Sentence given against them in this same Cause by King Richard the 11d, but in vain; They stood upon their Exemption, and referr'd themselves (in which the Archbishop also agreed with them) to the present King's Judgment; Their Cause was heard before the King, at Lambeth, September the 17th, and Sentence given for the Archbishop, and his Visi-tatorial Power over them. And this whole Process, and Sentence, at the Archbishop's Petition, was now ratified, and Enrolled in Parliament, to prevent any future Disputes upon that Subject hereafter.

Upon this the Archbishop of York put in his Claim for the Exception of the College, called Queen-Hall, in the said University: The result of which was this; that "The Archbishop of Canterbury in presence of the King and of the Lords in "the said Parliament promised, that if the Archbishop of York could sufficiently "shew any Priviledge, or Specialty of Record, wherefore the said Archbishop of "Canterbury might not Use nor Exercise his Visitation of the said College, He would

"would then abstain; saving to him always the Visitation of the said Scholars K. HENRY the IVth.
 "abiding in the said College, according to the Judgments and Decrees made "and given by the said King Richard, and by our Lord the King that now is,
 "as in the Record thereof made more plainly is declared.

Whether this Proce lture of the Archbishop encouraged them or no, I cannot tell, but in this Parliament we find the Gentlemen of Oxfordshire and Berke,¹ Ib. Rot. num. 32. with the Mayor and Burgesses of the Town of Oxford, again renewing their Petition, against the Priviledges granted by the King's Charter to the same University. But the Petition was now entirely laid aside with the Roy s' Advisers: and not referr'd to Council to consider of, as it had been twice before.

Not long after the Writs went out for this Parliament, the King issued out² Rot. Claus. 12 Hen. iv. m. 1. dorf. Others for the Two Convocations to be held within the Octaves of St. Martin, that is, within little more than a Fortnight after the Parliament was to meet.³ Reg. Arundel. Par. ii. fol. 22. The Archbishop of Canterbury appointed his to Assemble upon the 1st of December. Being come together the King, by his Chancellor, and other Commissioners,⁴ Ib. fol. 23. demanded a Subsidy of them for the carrying on of his War with the French King. Then the Archbishop commanded the Proctors of the Clergy that if they had any Grievances which needed a Reformation, they should before the Fryday next lay them before him in Convocation.

The Proctors of the Clergy, hereupon in (another Session) declared that they found themselves under so many, and great Grievances, that unless they were put in Writing they could not easily repeat them. Whereupon being withdrawn, and call'd in again, the Archbishop commanded them to put their Grievances in Writing. Accordingly upon Munday, December the 7th. Mr. Henry Ware, Official of the Court of Canterbury, and Mr. Philip Morgan, Dr. of Laws, Exhibited their Grievances in Writing in the name of the Clergy; Cujus gerebant Organa Vocis, say the Records. From henceforth we meet with nothing but Prorogations made by the Archbishop, upon the Account of his Attending in Parliament: so that how long this Convocation continued, or what it granted, I am not able to say.

To go on therefore to that of the Other Province: The King, as I before Observ'd, had by his Writ order'd the Clergy of York to meet at the same time he did those of Canterbury. And by⁵ the Register of the Church of Durham, it appears that they were Summon'd accordingly on the Tuesday next after the Feast of St. Martin, within the Octaves of it. But their Session was soon at an End; and nothing, I suppose, done by them at that time. For by a⁶ New Writ dated the 21st of December (the day after the Parliament rose) the Archbishop was Ordered to Summon them again, within a Fortnight after Hilary: So that their meeting was, Evidently, not in Attendance upon the Parliament, for then they must have sat on; but for the Other Occasion which the King had for them; of Granting a Subsidy, and which at that Meeting they seem to have refused to do.

In pursuance of this Second Writ, the Archbishop called them together to York, January the 18th. But neither then were they disposed to do any thing. However after a short Adjournment of two Days; by great importunity, they were prevail'd with to agree to a Half Tenth; provided that the Clergy of that Province should not in any wise be Taxed, or Otherwise molested in their Possessions by Reason of the Grant made to the King by the Lords and Commons in the last Parliament; nor be compelled to the Payment of the 15th with the Laity; nor while this half Tenth was paying, be otherwise burden'd with any Other Payments.

Such were the Assemblies of the Clergy this Year, The next following, the last of this King; the Parliament was call'd to meet the day after the Purification, February the 3d; During the Session of which March the 20th the King dyed, and so by his death put an End to it.

On⁷ the 19th of January, a Fortnight before the Session began, the Convocation Writs were issued out to the two Archbishops to Assemble their Clergy within the Octaves of the Purification. The Archbishop of Canterbury Summon'd his to meet at St. Paul's London, March the 6th. four Weeks after he knew the Parliament was to meet at Westminster; and therefore to be sure not with any thought of its being Obligated by our Constitution to Attend upon it. From thence he Prorogued it to March the 15th: then to the Munday Three Weeks after Easter: Then

K. HENRY the Vth. Then to the 6th of June : When I suppose they gave their Subsidy to the New King, and so were Dissolved.

It does not appear that the Archbishop of York had Executed the King's Writ before he came to Parliament : and most probable it is, that he intended to have done it after his return to his Province, when he should have seen what the Result of our Clergies Meeting would be. By this means the King dying it did not assemble at all.

King HENRY the Vth.

No sooner was the Young King come to the Throne, but within two days He issued out new Writs for the Parliament to Meet Three Weeks after Easter ; the very day to which the Archbishop of Canterbury had Adjourn'd his Convocation. So that it may now be thought that this Parliament was rather an Attendant upon that Assembly ; than That, upon the Other. But indeed had there been any such relation at all between them as is now pretended, the Convocation must have Expired with the King, as the Parliament did ; and have Ended with it as well as Attended upon it. The Parliament thus called¹ continued till the 9th of June ; and upon the 6th of that Month, the Convocation sat again at Lambeth, upon its last Adjournment. So that here we see these two Assemblies continued together ; and as they begun on the same day ; so they must have Ended almost as near with each Other.

But the irregularity of the Other Province spoiled all : which not having met by the Old Kings Writ, was therefore now Summon'd by its self, by a² fresh Writ from the New one. And to make it still the worse, this Writ was dated June the 9th, the very day that the Parliament was Dissolved ; instead of being issued so early out, that the Convocation might have Attended upon it. The time prescribed by the King for the Clergy's Assembling was limited to the first of August. The³ Archbishop nominated the 27th of July, and then held his Convocation accordingly. On that day the Clergy could not be induced to make any Grant : The next day they Consented to a Tenth ; and as this was that for which the King call'd them together, so was it all that appears to have been done by them.

Towards the latter end of this Year⁴ a Parliament was called to meet at Leicester ; January the 29th, but was Prorogued to the Beginning of the next ; where I shall therefore take some farther Notice of it. There was yet another Assembly of the Clergy of this Province, held November the 20th : The Archbishop Convened an Ecclesiastical Council against the Lollards, who now gave great Trouble to them. In this Convocation, their main Aim was at the Lord Cobham ; of whose Prosecution I shall have Occasion hereafter to speak.

In the mean time I return to the Parliament which I before said was Summon'd to meet at Leicester, January the 29th ; but was Adjourn'd to the same place April the 30th, being there met according to the Prorogation, it continued sitting till almost the End of May. It was not long before the King call'd a⁵ Second Parliament to sit at Westminster on Munday after the Octaves of St. Martin : where the Commons by the Assent of the Prelates and Lords, granted him two Tenths, and two Fifteenths, in Order to his Prosecution of the War with France.

With the former of these Parliaments, Nothing like a Meeting of the Clergy was held in either Province ; so that there the Doctrine of Attendance entirely fail'd. Before the latter Assembled we find a Convention in either Province, of which it will be necessary for me to give some short Account. Archbishop Chicheley having received his Pall from Rome, and being thereby fully Authorized to act as a Metropolitan, Ordered his Provincial Synod to meet October the 1st, The design of it appears in the Mandate by which he Assembled it ; in which he takes notice of the Obligation that Lay upon Metropolitans to hold their Provincial Councils with their Suffragans every Year ; and thereby lets us know that he intended this for a Canonical Synod, not a State Convocation. In this Council a Constitution was made against Married Clerks ;⁶ by the Will, and fol. 99.

¹ Some disturbances having been raised in the University of Cambridge upon the Occasion of a New Statute which had been made there; The King by his Writ directed to the Chancellor, Dated September the 17th, Order'd Commissioners on each side to appear before the Archbishop and his Brethren in Council, October the 1st. In this ² Synod it was agreed what Proctors should be sent to the General Council for the whole Province; and a Tax of 2 d. in the Pound was granted to defray the Charges which they should be at in that Delegation. Reg. Repyn-

This was the Main of the Church Work which was done at this Council, But the King's needs were to be supplied too: ³ For this two whole Tents were granted by them; and so the Meeting brake up the 20th of October; a Month before the Parliament was Appointed to meet. Reg. Chichley par. 1. fol.

Neither the Nature of this Assembly, nor the time of its Meeting, and rising, will suffer any reasonable man to think that this Church Synod was design'd to be an Attendant upon the King's Parliament so long after. The Council which was held upon the same Occasion by the Archbishop of York, comes nearer in time to the Session of Parliament, and may Possibly please Dr. A. better. It met in the Cathedral Church of St. Peters York upon Munday after the Feast of All-Saints. ⁴ The Archbishop in his Mandate declares that he call'd it, Authentice sedis Apostolice, & sua: The Business here was, as in the Other, to chuse their Proxies for the Council of Constance; and to provide as they did, for their Expenses, by 4 d. in the Pound upon all Benefices that were tax'd; and upon all others, 8 d. in the Mark, according to the real Value of them. Reg. Bowet.
fol. 286.

The Clergy of York in this Allowance Exceeded the Proportion of that of Canterbury: The Extent of the One making up in what it came short of the Proportion of the Other. But this Refractory Province never considered what the other had done in compliance with the King's Needs; tho' the Clergy on our side had set so Bountiful a Pattern to them. To make up this Defect, the King, ⁵ by his Writ, required them to be again Conven'd before the Morrow after Hilary. The Archbishop ⁶ appointed the 9th of January for their Assembling, When after much Wrangling they did agree to Grant their two Tents, as the Other Province had done; and so were dismiss'd in a few Days. Reg. Bowet.
fol 314.

There can nothing I think be more demonstratively plain against any Cause, than the Transactions of this Year against the New Pretence of Parliamentary Attending Convocations. Two Parliaments sate this Year; with the former no Convention of the Clergy was held at all: Before the Latter, a Provincial Council being called for Church Affairs; The King took the Opportunity to demand his Subsidies there of them: And the Clergy Granting them there, he never thought of Dr. A's. Ground for a New Meeting to Attend the Parliament, nor did he give them any Trouble upon that Account. In the Other Province they gave him nothing in their Church Synod: To supply this, the Parliament being risen, he called a Convocation of that Province alone; that so having been supplied by his Lay-Subjects in Parliament, and by the Clergy of One Province in Council, they alone might not escape without giving any Thing. They met, and Granted as the Others had done; and were thereupon immediately dismiss'd: And thereby plainly shew that the King's End in calling them was for Aid, not for Attendance upon a Dissolved Parliament; and that he did it at his Own free Pleasure, not by any State-Laws of our Constitution; which would equally have obliged him to have Assembled the Other Province, as to have Convened that.

Before the Commissioners thus chosen for the Church of England went to the Council; it pleased the King to consult the University of Oxford about such Matters as might be fit to be Proposed and Established in it. ⁷ Their Answer, tho not so perfect as I could wish, being still preserved in an ancient MS. of Corpus Christi College; I conceive it may be no unpleasing Curiosity to the Learned Reader to take a perusal of it. The Year following the King ⁸ first summon'd his Parliament to meet at Westminster upon Munday after the Feast of St. Luke: ⁹ But by Second Writs Prorogued it to the Munday after All-Saints, November the 4th. It sate but a little while; the Subsidy being Granted November the 12th, which was usually done on the last day of the Parliament. But the King's Needs required another Meeting; Sect. 21.

H. HENRY meeting; to hasten the Supplies which the foregoing Parliament had Granted. the Vrb. For this they met again the 16th of March; and continued till the 8th of April following. ² To both these Parliaments the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln deputed their Proxies, as by the Premunitory Summons they were required to do.

¹ ib. pag. 398 ² Lib. vi. Dec. What to call the ³ Convention of the Clergy Assembled by the Archbishop of Canterbury at St. Pauls London, November the 18th, I cannot tell. There was no Writ from the King, and some Ecclesiastical Decrees were pass'd in it. It met not till a Week after, I take, the Parliament to have risen; so that it could be no Convocation Attendant upon it. The Archbishop in his Constitutions calls it all along a Provincial Council; And by all this I should think it was a Church Synod. Be it what it will, the King got a Subsidy from the Clergy of the Two Tenths in it; and so upon the 2d of December the Assembly was Dissolved.

The Clergy of the Province of York here again were backward in their Grants. They met not of their own Accord; and therefore the King the same day that the Parliament rose, issued out ⁴ his Writ for the Assembling of them, the time assign'd were the Octaves of Hilary; ten Weeks after the Parliament was Dissolved. They met more early than the King proposed, December the 16th. But their Grant was with difficulty: They were till the 16th of January before they Agreed to it, and then for all the Example and Obligation of our Province upon them, gave but One Tenth, for our Two.

⁵ Rot. Claus. ⁶ Hen. v. m. ⁷ 13. dorf. ⁸ Reg. Bowet. ⁹ fol. 317. Thus the first Parliament of this Year pass'd without any Church Assembly to Attend upon it: Indeed while the Second was sitting, upon the 1st of April 1416. ¹⁰ The Archbishop of Canterbury called the Synod of his Province. But that was an Ecclesiastical Council, not a State Convention; It met for the Affairs of the Church, not for the Business or Aid of the King. This the Declaration which the Archbishop made of the Causes for which the Synod was call'd shews: and the whole Process of the Synod upon those Affairs confirms to us. It was held for choosing of Commissioners to send to the General Council; and to agree upon a Subsidy for their Expences. To Examine and Try Hereticks: To make Decrees against Heresy: To Regulate some things relating to the Probats of Wills, with some other Matters of a like Nature. This was what was done in both the Sessions of that Synod: no Subsidy was given or Demanded; no Grievances were proposed, or drawn up relating to Civil Oppressions: Nor, lastly, was it Called by the King's Writ, but meerly by the Archbishop's Mandate. And if all these Characters do not denote it to have been a proper Ecclesiastical Council, I must own my self at a loss how to distinguish between a Church-Synod, and a State Convocation.

Altho' then this Synod began to Sit a few days before the First Session of this Parliament was Ended; and was resumed again Three Weeks after Easter, the very day to which the Parliament was Prorogued; Yet was this only for the Convenience of the Clergy, and by the choice of the Metropolitan; not out of any Obligation that lay upon the One to call them together at that time; Or any Right of the Others to be then Called.

I have just now said that the Parliament which met upon the 16th of March the last Year, and continued to the 8th of April in this, re-assembled again Three Weeks after Easter. How long it continued to Sit after I cannot tell. In ¹¹ October following another Parliament was called: It began on Munday the 19th of that Month, and sate till Wednesday the 18th of November.

¹² Rot. Parl. 3 ¹³ Hen. v. num. ¹⁴ 13. ¹⁵ Dug. Sum- ¹⁶ mon. Parl. ¹⁷ pag. 399. ¹⁸ Reg. Chich- ¹⁹ ley. fol. 3. 8. What I said of the last Meeting of the Clergy with the foregoing Parliament of this Year, I must repeat again with Relation to this. The Archbishop ²⁰ Assembled his Synod, by his Own Authority; for Ecclesiastical Affairs, upon the 9th of November, Nine days before the Parliament Ended. The only Secular thing that is recorded to have been done there, was the Renewal of their Grant of Two Tenths to the King, and that has been too often done in our Church Councils, to create any Difficulty as to the Nature of the present Assembly.

Thus then, if I judge aright, the Parliaments of this Year both pass'd without any Attending Convocation. But however Dr. A. will I know please himself that the Clergy of our Province did meet in time of Parliament, and that shall suffice him, let the Manner, or Cause of their Meeting be what it will. Well, let him take his own Way; and let us consider how things answered in the Other Province. With the first Session of the Parliament in March and April, no Assembly at all was held there. In the time of the Prorogation, the last of April; the Archbishop call'd a ¹ Provincial Council to treat about the Union, and K. HENRY Reformation of the State of the Universal Church. With the Second Session of that the Vth.

Parliament, no Convention of any Kind met. Five days before the Other Parlia- ment rose, the King seeing the Archbishop of York held no Council, as the Other ¹ Reg. Lang- Did, took his usual Way of issuing out a Writ to him for a Convocation. ² He ley. Dunelm.
 ordered it to meet before the Feast of Epiphany about seven Weeks after the Par-

Priors as were assign'd by their Bishops to be Collectors of the Tenths, and other Subsidies, granted by the Clergy to the King. They complained that oftentimes such Persons were appointed to this Office as lived out of the Diocess, at a Great distance from the Places in which they were to Act. That by this Means they were neither so well able to Assess or Collect the King's Mony, for want of Knowledge and Interest in the Clergy, as others; and by this, and the Accidents of being robb'd many times of what they had Gather'd, both themselves and their Houses were impoverish'd. They therefore pray'd, that none should from thenceforth be made Collectors of any Tenth out of the Archdeaconry in which they lived; that the same Persons might not be always burden'd with that Office, but the Clergy to take it in their turns; and that for the better Execution of it, besides their Spiritual Power, they might have Writs out of the Ex- chequer to Enforce the Payment of what was laid upon Every one to pay. But the Answer was only, that the Prelates should make such Collectors as they would Answer for; and so all these Matters remain'd as they had been before.

The Parliament being thus summon'd as I before observed, ⁶ The Archbishop ⁶ Reg. Chick- on these Matters they did deliberate: They pass'd a Provincial Statute for the Scholars of the Universities; And lastly, renewed again their Two Tenths to the King; and so were Dissolved.

K HENRY By ¹ another Writ directed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, August the 30th. ^{the Vth.} He was required to Summon the Convocation of his Province to meet October the 30th, (about the middle of the Session of Parliament) and he accordingly obey'd the King in it. This meeting was at once both a Convocation and a Council: A Convocation by the King's Summons expressly inserted into the Archbishop's Mandate; A Council by the Archbishop's Authority, who when they met, ² proposed these three things to be done by them; Namely to consider, of a Supply for the King; Of the Subsidy Granted to those who went to the Council of Constance, but not yet paid; "Et pro defectibus in Clero Regnantibus, autoritate illius Provincialis Concilii Reformandis.

² Regist. Chickley fol. 17, 18.

Several of their Late Meetings the Prelates and Clergy seem to have pass'd, without ever Dividing themselves at all: But here the Archbishop Order'd the Deans, Archdeacons and Proctors of the Clergy to withdraw by themselves, and to debate of these Matters, the Archbishop and Bishops, with the Regular Abbots and Priors remaining in the Chapter House and treating by themselves. ³ On the 21st of November the last day of the Assembly; the Prelates and Clergy by Mr. William Lindewood Organum Procuratorum Cleri (ut dicebantur) Gerentem; (for as yet there was no Establish'd Choice of any such Officer among them;) Grant-ed the King half a Tenth, besides the whole one which they had before given. Then a Constitution of Archbishop Winchelsea about Stipendiary Chaplains, was re-inforced by the Archbishop at the Request of the Clergy; and so the Synod was Dissolved.

I do not in the least doubt but that here Dr. A. will Plume himself, and tell us, that now at least we must allow this Convocation to have been an Attendant, nay and a Concurring Attendant, upon this Parliament; That it was Called by the King's Writ; so that here can be nothing wanting to render it every Way such as we ought to Expect. I do indeed allow that the King order'd this Convocation to Meet at the same time that the Parliament was Sitting: Nor is it any part of my Design while I am pleading for the Freedom of his Prerogative, and proving that he may Call the Convocations when he will; to deny him the Liberty of Assembling them during the Session of Parliament, as well as at any Other time. The Question is, whether the King Summon'd this Convocation for this Reason, because he had Summon'd the Parliament, and was therefore, by the Rule of our Constitution, Obliged to Summon the Convocations at the same Time with it; and as a Necessary Attendant upon it? If Dr. A. shall affirm, as he must affirm this; Then will he be pleased to tell us, how Came the King not to Summon the Convocation of the Other Province as well as This? Has not One Convocation the same Right, or Duty, Call it which you will, to Attend upon the Parliament as the Other? And ought it not therefore to have been Equally Summon'd, had that been the reason why the Other was called? Yet we see the Writ for that was not issued out till after both the Parliament, and the Convocation of Canterbury were Dissolved; and it met not in a long time after that.

Here therefore I would be glad that, upon his Principles, Dr. A. would give me some Satisfactory Account of this Procedure. In the mean time I will Offer him my sense of it: It was highly for the Convenience of the Bishops, and Prelates, and Clergy of our Province, to meet at once both in Parliament, and Convocation. They had done so for several Years past, by a meer Ecclesiastical Summons, and Authority. By this means as they Came together in this Province sooner than they had done in the Other, so were the Terms of Payment of our Subsidies more early than theirs. For these Reasons both our Convocation was required to sit with the Parliament to renew their Grants which were ready to Expire: And the Province of York to be deferred whose Grants came later to be pay'd; and therefore were not so soon to be renew'd. It was therefore in all respects fitting that our Convocation should sit with the Parliament; theirs after their Prelates and Clergy were Return'd from it: whereas upon Dr. A's. Principles they ought to have sate both at the same time, and that time to have been the very Session of the Parliament; if it were indeed an Essential Law of our our Constitution, for the Convocations, as he pretends, to be Attendants upon our Parliaments. K. HENRY the Vth.

But to leave these Reflections, and proceed with our History: ¹ By his Writ Rot. Claus. 7 met with any Notice. But the Reason was plain, and I shall give it in the Words of one of our antient Historians yet unpublish'd: ⁴ "In this Parliament Chron. S. Al-

"the Archbishop declared in the King's Name, to the Great Joy of the whole ban. ad Ann.

"any Tenth or Fifteenth; so having no need of the Convocation Aid, neither "did he think fit to put them to the Trouble and Charge of an unnecessary As"sembling. For let Dr. A. pretend what he will; this was the Cause for which our King called our Convocations; Not to pay Attendance on their Parliaments; (a Dream of his Own, never mentioned in any of the King's Writs, or Archbishop's Summons; and contradicted by the Practice of almost every Year:) but were Members, and in the safety of which they had as near a Concern, as the Laity.

The Year following the Parliament met betimes upon ⁵ May the 2^d, and sate 1421.
till about the end of the Month. In this Parliament among other things, great Rot. Parl. 9 complaints were made against the ⁶ disorders of the Scholars in the University Hen. v. n. 16.
of Oxford; for which I shall refer the Reader to the Roll its self; and hasten Walsingh. pag.
to another Occurrence in which our Argument is more nearly concern'd. 404.

I before observed how the Commons had petitioned in Parliament in Favour of 6 Rot. ib. num.
the Abbots and Priors, who were made Collectors of the Tenths Granted to the King in Convocation, in places far distant from them; to the great Damage, as well as Trouble, of Themselves, and to the detriment of their Houses. ⁷ In this Parliament all the Abbots and Priors of England (so the Record speaks) re- 14.
newed their Petition to the Commons; and they again presented it to the King, 7 Rot. Parl. 9 and his Lords. The Effect of it now was such as they desired; an Order was Hen. v. num.
made that no Abbot or Prior should hereafter be appointed by any Archbishop or 15.
Bishop, Collector of any Tenths or Subsidies out of the Country where he lived;
And this Order to continue in Force till the next Parliament after the return of the King into England.

But there is another Memorable Passage relating to this Parliament which must not be forgotten, Dr. A. (who seldom contents himself with one Mention of his Instances) twice directly Alledges it for the same End: and that so evidently contrary to the Plain Intention of the Record, as well as to the true Parliamentary Interest of the Lower Clergy, that I cannot but think it necessary to give a very particular Account of it. ⁸ King Henry the Vth having concluded a Peace 8 Rot. Parl. 9 with the King of France, it was therein among other things agreed, "Quod Hen. v. n. 18.

"lar the things therein contained, should be Sworn to, and Confirm'd in like man-

"made the said Three Estates, namely, the Prelates and Clergy, the Nobles and "Great Men, and Commons of his said Realm to be Assembled, according to the "Manner, and Custom of it, to his Palace at Westminster, London the 2^d Day of K. HENRY the Vth. "May, in the ninth Year of his Reign, for the greater Firmness and Strength of the Peace aforesaid, and for other Causes which concern'd his Royal State and the Profit of his said Realm. Before these States the King by the Bishop of Durham his Chancellor, caused the tenour of the said Peace, and all and singular the Articles of the same, to be fully Expounded and Declared. He commanded, by his said Chancellor, that the said Three Estates should inspect, and consider the Tenour of the said Peace: All which being duly and maturely done, the same Three Estates Considering and Accounting the said Peace, to be Laudable, Necessary, and Profitable to both Kingdoms, and the Subjects of the same, they as the Three Estates of the said Realm, Approved, &c. of it.

This is the Substance, and almost the very Words of the Record; which for the greater surety of my Report, as well as for a standing Proof of the Parliamentary Rights of the Lower Clergy, I have inserted at large into my Appendix. The Question now between Dr. A. and Me is, Who this Clergy, and these Prelates were, who then made up the Ecclesiastical Estate of the Realm in Parliament, and joyn'd in the Confirmation of this Peace? He Affirms them to have been the Convocation; I the Prelates and Clergy of the Realm, Summon'd by the King's Writs to Parliament. Let us take it in his own Words, p. 62. "And if I should be-

And again, p. 349. ² He alledges the same Instance to prove that their Consent (the Consent of the ³ Convocati- on, p. 332.) in Parliament "has also by way of Condescension been sometimes ask'd, and admitted, even in Matters where they were not particularly intersted. So easily do Men give up the true Rights of the Clergy, whilst they aim at Unwarrantable and Unpresidented Powers, in a Capacity in which they were never intituled to them!

of. First, Such as Represent the Convocation to be a Meeting Coincident with the Parliament. Secondly, Such as speak of the Convocation Clergy as of the Parliament, and in it. And Thirdly, Such as declare the Particular Intents and Purposes, for which the Convocation Clergy were, and were Esteemed to be, of the Parliament. Under this last Head he instances in the Present Case.

Shall I need after the Account I have of this Matter to shew, that the Estates of Parliament, here spoken of, were the Prelates and Clergy of Parliament, the Lords and Commons; not the Lords Commons and Convocation? Let me then observe,

1. That it appears from the Words of this Record, that the Three Estates here spoken of were those whom the King had made to be Assembled at his Palace at Westminster May the 2d, in the Ninth Year of his Reign; This the Words of the Roll Expressly affirm: Let me therefore freely ask of Dr. A. Did the King Assemble the Convocation, this Year, at that time to his Palace at Westminster? Nay, Or did ever any King of England, since Edward the 2d's time, do it? But we will Allow for the Place; and only insist upon the Time: Did the King Summon the Convocations to London and York, with this Parliament on the 2d of May? Dr. A. knows that he did not? Nay, Let me ask yet once more; Did the King at all Assemble the Clergy of either Province, while the Parliament was Sitting? Or those of Our Province at any Other Time during this whole Year? I Affirm now what I will by and by clearly prove, that he did not. If therefore the Prelates and Clergy which made up the Ecclesiastical State in this Case were those whom the King, according to the Manner, and Custom of his Realm, Assembled at his Palace of Westminster, May the 2d; 'tis a Demonstration as clear as the light its self, that they must have been the Parliamentary, not the Convocation Prelates and Clergy, as he against all manner of Reason pretends that they were.

But because tho' the King call'd no Convocation of either Province with this Parliament, yet the Archbishop of Canterbury Assembled his Provincial Council at St. Pauls London May the 5th; lest Dr. A. should seek to shelter himself there, and tell us (for he may tell us that or any thing else that he pleases, as well as what he has told us) that the Prelates, and Clergy in that Council Assembled, was One of the States of Parliament; let me observe farther.

2dly. That these Prelates, and Clergy, were the Prelates and Clergy of the King HENRY the 5th. Realm; not those of the Province of Canterbury. Now in the Other Province neither Council, nor Convocation was held till Four Months after this Parliament was Risen: Either therefore Dr. A. must say that the Prelates and Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, are the Prelates and Clergy of the Realm; or he must confess that those were not the Prelates and Clergy who Ratified this League; and are accounted in the Rolls of Parliament, as One of the Three Estates of the Realm in that Great Council.

Yet farther; The Acts of the Provincial Council which met at London May the 5th, are very fully preserved in the Archbishop's Register. Among other things there noted, One is a Draught of Petitions which was made containing the Grievances of the Clergy: These were presented to the King in this Parliament. Is it to be imagined, that if such a Notable thing as this had happened; that the King had sent for the Convocation down to Westminster; and had there joyn'd them with the Lords and Commons as one of the Estates of the Realm in Parliament, to Deliberate of, and Confirm such a Treaty of Peace, we should not have seen this Enrolled in the Acts of this Convocation, as well as in those of this Parliament? Would no care have been taken about a matter of such Consequence? Not so much as a Memorandum taken of it.

But I abuse my Own, and the Readers time, to Confute such Pretences as carry not so much as a Shadow of Probability; nor are supported with any Proof, Besides that of a Confident Allegation. And yet I must go on to more of the same Kind. Among other Arguments to prove the Convocation Clergy, to be of the Parliament, and to act in it; One is this, that Walsingham, "where he gives an Account of any Grant, or Act of the Clergy in Convocation usually (speaks thus) Clerus in Eodem Parliament concessit, or statuit. Of which (says he) take one very remarkable Instance, Anno 1421. The Parliament began and happily ended within a Month: For besides a Tenth Granted by the Clergy, and a Fifteenth by the Laity, many Other things were reformed according to the King's Pleasure in the Clergy and People. And Especially in the Order of the Black Monks, who were by the King's Edict Assembled there in great Numbers. For there were Sixty Abbots and Conventual Priors, and Three Hundred and more Monks, Doctors and Proctors. — This Walsingham, Dr. A's Reflection follows: "It is the Convocation Clergy and the Convocation Business, that the Historian all along speaks of: And yet he speaks of the First we see as being of; and of the "Second as done in Parliament.

Rights, Sec.
pag. 342.

How little Dependance is to be made on the Expressions of the most Exact Historians in these Matters, I have elsewhere already observed: and will now add one other Instance from Walsingham himself, whom Dr. A. so justly commends, Anno 1414. About Michaelmas, says he, the King called the Lords and Prelates to Parliament at London. "Quo quidem tempore, at which time the Archbishop held there a Great Council. Yet this very Year the Parliament met not till the Octaves of St. Martins, November the 18th. And the Archbishop's Council was Dissolved a Month before. But we will Examine Dr. A's Allegations.

I have already observed that the Clergy of the Other Province were not yet Assembled, nor did they meet till about Four Months after. We cannot suppose but that Walsingham must needs have known this: and therefore Allowing him to have understood these Matters so rarely well as Dr. A. says, and I willingly own that he did; 'tis plain we must make some Allowances for his Expression; or else put this odd Notion upon him, that the Provincial Clergy of Canterbury alone, without those of York, are the Parliament Clergy; a Notion too wild for any Man in his right Senses to entertain.

Scct. 2d.

2dly. As for the Other part of his History which concerns the Black Monks; will Dr. A. give me leave to ask him; were they Called to Parliament & Or, Did they appear in any respect there? No, nor yet in Convocation neither. They met in a General Chapter, within the Abby of Westminster; a Monastery of their Own Order: and thither the King went, with Four Persons with him, and there he transacted what was done in that Matter.

Does Dr. A. desire a Proof of this? I will give him such a One as he shall not be able to except against. It appears from the 2 Summons to Parliament that the King Assembled that Great Council by Writs under the Great Seal, dated at Westminster February the 26th. He called the Parliamentary Prelates to meet at his

K. HENRY his Palace at Westminster, May the 2d. there to treat with the Bishops, Lords, and Commons, about the Affairs of the Realm. ¹ By other Letters dated a Month after, March the 25th, and under another Seal, the Signet of the Eagle; he Summon'd all the Abbots and Priors, with the Doctors, &c. of the Order of the Black Monks to Assemble within the Abby of Westminster; ² May the 5th. By the former of these the Abbot of Evesham (for Example) was required to come himself to Parliament May the 2d. there to treat with the Prelates, and Great Men of the Realm. By the latter he was Order'd, not only to come himself, but to bring a certain number of his Monks with him; And this to the Chapter House of Westminster Abby; not to treat of the Affairs of the Realm, but for certain Affairs touching the Order which he was of; there to be transacted in a General Chapter of that Order alone. Now this being the Case, What can it be but a wilful Blindness, a Resolution not to see nor Embrace the Truth, for any One in so clear a Light, to wrest an Expression of an Author to a sense which He (who was of this Order, and possibly present at this very meeting) could never have intended: and in despite not only of the Account which even Walsingham himself gives of this Meeting in the very Place to which he refers, but of the Nature of our Constitution too; making all kind of Assemblies, Councils, Convocations, Chapters, that do but chance to meet while the Parliament is sitting, a part of that Great Council of the Realm.

To go on therefore from the Parliament, to the Assemblies of the Clergy which either met with it, or follow'd after it. On³ the Munday, May the 5th the Archbishop of Canterbury held his Provincial Council. I call it so with assurance; ⁴ it being neither Summon'd by any Authority of the King's Writ, and the ⁴ Archbishop's Mandate, plainly declaring that it was to be a Church Synod, not a State Convention. The Business done in it speaks the same thing: The great Occasion of its meeting being to provide for the better Encouragement of the Universities; to make some Orders about the Stipends of Chaplains; and the like. In this Assembly they granted the King a Tenth, and at the same time presented their Grievances, and required a Redress of them.

The Archbishop of Canterbury having thus opportunely called his Synod (perhaps for this, among other Reasons, that he might do it intirely by his Own Authority without being Obliged to it by the King's Writ) and the Clergy agreeing to a Tenth there, there was no need for the King to Order any Meeting of it. But the Archbishop of York was yet behind with his Province: The King therefore, as he had often before done, about Two Months after the Parliament was Dissolved, and the Other Convocation Risen, ⁵ issued out his Writ for the Assembling of it. The Reason alledged was for Aid; the Great standing State Reason, for which our Kings all along either desired or ordered these Conventions to be held. The King appointed the Morrow after St. Matthew September the 22d. The ⁶ Archbishop agreed to the same time. And the Clergy meeting thereupon, Granted a * Tenth to the King, as the Province of Canterbury before had done.

The Archbishop being thus forced to Call his Clergy to Convocation by the King's Writ, Summon'd them, at the same time, to ⁷ a Church Synod, by his Own Metropolitan Authority. This latter Assembly was adjourned to January the 14th; and ⁸ as the Procuratorial Letters of the Bishop of Durham shew, was held for the same Ends for which that of Canterbury had met before, namely for the Encouragement of the Graduated Clergy of the Two Universities. For this they also made some Provincial Constitutions, which were ordered to be Publish'd the 22d of the same Month.

Between the Meeting of this State Convocation, and Ecclesiastical Council; The King held another ⁹ Parliament, on Munday the 1st of December. With this no Assembly of the Clergy, of any Kind, was Convened in either Province. They had granted their Subsidy, the One in May, the Other in September, before; And there being no Expectation of any farther Supply from them, the King knew no Other Obligation he had to Call them, and therefore did not require their Convening at all. Would Dr. A. know whether I speak this by Conjecture only, or upon K. HENRY the Vth. any Good Authority; I will Answer him in the Words of his Own justly applauded Historian; Walsingham, who thus tells the Story: "December the 1st the King Assembled his Parliament, at Westminster; in which a 15th was granted to him by the Laity: But the Clergy gave nothing that time, because the Tenth Granted by them in the last Parliament, upon that Condition, was not yet fully paid." Walsingham pag. 405.

We are now come to the End of the Short, but Noble Reign, of that Victorious Prince King Henry the Vth. Before we go on to the long, weak Government of his Son, King Henry the VIth, let us stop a little, and make some Reflections on the State of the Assemblies of our Church and Clergy, since the beginning of this latter part of our present Period; for the better clearing of the Points in Debate.

Sect. 17.

And, 1. We may observe how the Papal Schism in the Church of Rome abroad, and the Prevalence of the new Sect of Lollards at home: which continued throughout this whole time, gave Occasion to a much more frequent holding of Church Synods, especially in the Province of Canterbury, than is any where again to be met with throughout our whole History. Now these Synods our Archbishops Arundel and Chicheley found expedient upon many Accounts to Assemble in time of Parliament, rather than at any Other. To pass by the Obvious Convenience of it to the Prelates and Clergy of the Province, the Greater part of them being Summoned to the One, might thereby, with the same trouble and expence, meet together in the Other. To say nothing of another Inducement which might probably weigh with those Great Prelates: that hereby they avoided the Obligation of Calling their Clergy, by a Lay Writ, and Summon'd them purely by their own Ecclesiastical Authority: For being met in Council for Church Affairs, the King took the Opportunity of demanding a Supply of them there; to which the Clergy agreeing, they were not called together in Convocation, as those of York were, and as themselves wou'd otherwise have been. Two Other Reasons they had to prefer the time to any other: First, That by this means they were ready at hand to defend themselves against the Complaints and Attempts which were now frequently made against them by the Commons in Parliament; many of whom, and those of Great Note, being (as Arundel once told them, of Sir Jo. Cheney the Speaker) infected with Lollardy, and thereby Enemies to the Clergy, took all Occasions to Inveigh against their Lands, and Priviledges; and to do them what Injury they could in both. And, Secondly, Had the better Opportunity of getting Laws made, and Processes issued out against Hereticks, by their Presence, and Grants, (never more liberal then in those times:) A Use which they more than once made of such their seasonable Concurrence in time of Session, with the Parliament. However it were; this is certain that those Wise and Great Prelates did frequently Assemble their Provincial Synods about the time of the Parliament: and in their Ecclesiastical, not their State Capacity, met Concurrently in Council, tho' not in Convocation, with it.

2. But this the Clergy of the Other Province found it not for their Convenience to do: And therefore according to the new Doctrine of Attendance, they at least, ought to have been Summon'd, by the King's Writ to meet at the same time, and because they were not then Summon'd, we may conclude that this Obligation was not then understood, as we are sure the thing it self was not then practised. The usual Method which was taken with Relation to that Province was this: About the End of the Parliament; when both the Laity of the Realm, and the Clergy of our Province, had either Granted, or at least had resolved upon their Subsidy to the King, to issue out a Royal Writ to the Archbishop of York to Assemble his Clergy, (a Month, Two, or Three after the Dissolution of the Parliament) in Convocation, expressly for Aid. And this, I think, intirely bespeaks the Truth of this Matter; That they were Assembled not as a Dependent upon the Parliament, which was always before Risen, and for the most part Dissolved; but in order to the Giving of Mony to the King. Those of the Other Province did it in their Own Provincial Councils, and therefore the King as he had no need, so neither did he Summon them at all. Those of York met not of their Own Accord, whereby to give him the same Opportunity of demanding in like manner an Aid of them, and therefore he was forced to Assemble them, by his own Writs, in order thereunto.

3. Now

K. HENRY
the Verb.

3. Now this Procedure of our two Archbishops; gave the first great Countenance to the Assembling of the Diocesan Clergy in our Provincial Synods; to which tho' they had been often Invited before; yet we do not often meet them directly, or constantly Summon'd as now they were. But the Archbishops knew that being met for other Ends, they would not fail to have Mony demanded of them; And this being not to be Granted without the Concurrence of the Diocesan Clergy; they were Obligated to require their Presence, as well as that of the other inferior Clergy; and accordingly they Summon'd not only the Proctors of the Clergy, but oftentimes many others with them, for their own Use, tho' not for the State Purposes.

Hence it is that we meet with such Calls of the Lower Clergy in the Synods of of these Two Archbishops, as are hardly to be found in the Times of any Others that went before them. They summon'd more then were commonly wont to be mentioned in Other times; And they required them peremptorily to come, and did not bearly premonish, or invite them, if they thought fit to be there.

Seet. 28.

Having premised these Remarks, as peculiar to these Two Reigns, I come now to those General Observations which relate directly to the Cause in Hand. What Dr. A. Confesses, of a greater Latitude now beginning to be introduced in the Assembling of the Parliament and Convocation, as I do not perhaps thoroughly understand, so neither shall I make any Advantage of it. The Matter of Fact is plainly this; (let him reconcile it with his Pretensions if he can :) That in the Parliaments of these Two and Twenty Years; ¹ Two only there were that had the Two Convocations Assembled within any part of their Session; and against those there lie such visible Exceptions, as might easily be shewn to render them very little to his Purpose. ² Four Other Parliaments there met in this Space, with One Convocation sitting within some part of the same time with them. ³ With Six or Seven Others; the Archbishop of Canterbury held his Provincial Synod: and had he held it with every one, I know not what Dr. A's. cause would have been the better for it: For I suppose he is not yet so fond of Attendance as to Affirm, either that the Archbishops were Obligated to Call Provincial Synods with every Parliament, or not permitted by our Constitution, to hold them any Other time.

Convocations, and Synods, frequently met out of Parliament time; and it would be in vain for me to account for the Number of them: That, which Dr. A. himself owns would be to the purpose could it be shewn; and which I shall therefore the rather recommend to his consideration, is; that whereas in these Two and Twenty Years there were but Two Parliaments that had the Two Convocations, in his own Language, to Attend upon them; that Great Council met Ten several times without any Assembly of the Clergy, of any kind; in either Province Summon'd, and held, concurrently, nay or even with his Latitude, during so many several Sessions of Parliament.

If therefore the Sitting of the Parliament sometimes with both Convocations at the same time meeting together with it; sometimes with One only; and oftner with neither: If the Meeting of the Convocations sometimes both together; sometimes One only without the Other; sometimes One called in time of Parliament; the Other after, or before it; frequently both at such times as no Parliament was Sitting; may suffice to argue the Independency of those Great Bodies upon each Other, and the Freedom of the King's Prerogative in Assembling both at his pleasure; this is what our History from the time of King Edward the First, hitherto, has spoken to us; and will Go on in like manner to demonstrate.

But there are yet two or three other things which must not be forgotten; and of which we have here again a plain Evidence against Dr. A's Pretences. * That the Convocations were Expressly called by the King for Aid: * That the Clergy of York, were not obliged to follow the Example of those of Canterbury; nor, in effect, did follow it. * That the Lower Clergy still Continued not only to be Summon'd to Parliament; but to choose their Proctors; and to be Solemnly accounted a Part of it; however Dr. A. is pleased to Turn what makes for the proper Parliamentary Rights of the Lower Clergy, to his visionary Dream of the Lower House of Convocation. All these I think have been sufficiently Evinc'd in the Prosecution of this History; and to that I refer my self for the Proof of them.

To proceed now with the Reign of this new Prince: Before his Father King Henry the Fifth died, the ¹ Archbishop of Canterbury held a Provincial Council at London, on Munday July the 6th. The Occasion of it was to consider what they should do with respect to the General Council, which the Pope had Summon'd to meet at Pavia; and to order a Subsidy for the Clergy, and Ambassadors, who were to be sent thither. On the 17th of the same Month they Agreed on their Subsidy; namely, ² Three pence in the Pound of all Goods and Benefices Ecclesiastical of the Province not Taxed, and Eightpence in the Pound of all Others, of Ten Pounds Value, or more, by the Year. The Rest of the Business of this Synod was spent in the Tryal of Hereticks, which it does not concern our Argument to insist upon.

No sooner was the News of the Young King's Death brought into England, but one of the First things Concluded on in order to settle the Estate of the Realm, was to Call a Parliament, ³ which was accordingly appointed to meet upon Munday before the Feast of St. Martin, November the 9th. In this there was much to be done for the Peace and Government of the Kingdom at home, and to carry on the War in France abroad. ⁴ Yet in their Debates so much haste was made that the Parliament rose December the 18th following.

Had those who then managed Affairs known it to have been a Law of our Constitution to Assemble the Convocations as often as the Parliament met; And had the Clergy, then looked upon it to be their Right, nay and one of their Greatest Rights, to Attend upon that Council; we cannot doubt but that here we should have seen the Effect of it. At the beginning of their Reigns, Princes themselves are especially careful to observe with some niceness the Rules of the Government which they have taken upon them. Much more when Subjects were to enter upon an Administration for an Infant King yet in his Cradle; we may be confident they would have been most exact in the doing of this: And not have made so broad an Invasion upon the English Constitution: nor have run the Hazard of disobliging two such Great Bodies, as the Parliament and Clergy of the Realm, at such a Juncture; when so much depended upon pleasing all parties to the uttermost. If therefore with this Parliament we meet with no Concurrent Convocation, but much more if no such Assembly was called in either Province all that whole Year, 'tis a Demonstration to me, that they knew of no such Right, or Law of our Government as is now pretended; but rather thought they should oblige the Clergy by not Assembling, nor, by consequence, Demanding any Supplies of them.

In the Province of Canterbury, before the Kings Death, an Ecclesiastical Synod was held for the Affairs of the Church, and with particular respect to the General Council then Summon'd at Pavia. For the same Ends the ⁵ Archbishop of York, held his, immediately after it, September the 23d, in obedience to the Canons, which require such Assemblies to be called every Year, as the Archbishop's Mandate expressly tells us. Whether it was this Synod Continued, or another called I cannot tell, but on the ⁶ 18th of November they met again for the same purpose; About the General Council; both the Cause of their Assembling, and their Business being Assembled. Besides these I meet with no Conventions of the Clergy this whole Year, in either Province; and These are none of those Meetings in which our dispute is concerned.

As this first Year began, so the next went on: ⁷ The Parliament met October the 20th: It sate till the ⁸ 17th of December; and was then adjourn'd to the Morrow after Hilary day. Then it Assembled a second time, and sate on till February the 18th. If Dr. A. cannot point out to us the Convocations which Attended these two Sessions, I am perfectly at a loss to do it; and shall be forced to conclude, that they were not Attended by any such Meetings at all. But indeed the Archbishop of Canterbury was so taken up both these Years in his Metropolitanical Visitation, that we may be confident there was no Synod held by him; and if any Convocation called by the King, our Records, as well as Registers, are wholly silent.

K. HENRY the 6th. The next Year, ¹ by a Letter of Proxy granted by the Prior and Chapter of Eli, dated the 8th of October, A Parliament is said to have been Summon'd to meet at Westminster the Morrow after St. Martin, November the 20th. Of this Parliament both the Clause Rolls and Rolls of Parliament are intirely Silent: in none of our Registers, besides have I met with the least Intimation of it: And very strange it is that the Church of Eli, none of the Remotest from London, should Grant its Procuratorial Letters five Weeks before the Session of Parliament was to begin; and that with this Character, in Instanti Parlamento, &c. Would the Form and other Circumstances of this Instrument permit it; I should think it rather to have been a Proxy for the Convocation which met at London four Days after, October the Twelfth: and of which I come to give an account.

² Rot. Claus. 2 Hen. vi. m. 5. dorf. By ² Writs dated July the 10th, the King ordered the Archbishops to Assemble their Respective Clergy in Convocation within a Fortnight after Michaelmas. ³ Reg. Chickley fol. 34. The Archbishop of Canterbury appointed the 12th of October for his to meet upon. The Cause of it is thus truly and briefly delivered by an ⁴ Accurate Historian, to the End that the Archbishop might get Mony from them for the support of the French War.

While the Lower Clergy were debating of this Matter; some Accused of Heresy were brought before the Synod, and made their Submission in it. The Clergy having debated upon the King's Demands, gave in their Answer by William Lyndewood Dr. of Laws, Official of the Court of Canterbury. The Sum was, ⁵ that they were Restrained in their Powers, and had not Authority from their Chapters and Diocesses to agree to any Grant of Mony at that time.

⁷ Reg. Dec. & Cap. Ebor. Se. de Vac. fol. 362. The Metropolitane See was now Vacant in the Church of York; so the ⁷ Kings Writ for that Province was directed to the Guardian of the Spiritualities. They met first upon the 6th of October; and then, by Prorogation, on the 1st of December: and probably began the Refusal, which our Province afterwards so stily followed.

By Writs dated February the 24th 1424, the ⁸ King called his Parliament to meet at Westminster, April the 30th, 1425. By a Mandate Issued out the 2d of March following, ⁹ the Archbishop of Canterbury Summon'd his Provincial Council to Assemble at St. Paul's London the Week before, April the 23d. A Convocation famous for this, if for nothing else, that in it we meet with the ¹⁰ first Account of the Choice of a Prolocutor who was here by Command from the Archbishop, Elected by them, and has the Title of such given him throughout the Acts of this Synod.

In the Letters Mandatory, for the Summoning of this Assembly, the Archbishop tells the Clergy that the most urgent Affairs of the Realm and Church, which were justly feared by some, compell'd him tho' unwilling to call them together: That for this he had taken the Advice and Consent of certain of his Brethren. But the main Reason which should have stood in the Front of all these kind of Summons, viz. that the King had ordered the Parliament to be held about the same time, and therefore by the Rules of our Constitution they were to be Summon'd of Course to Attend upon it; was still wanting; and not the least hint given, either in this, or any other the like Instrument, of any such thing. ¹¹ The Church of Eli deputed their Proxies to both these Assemblies; First, By Letters Dated April the 11th, they Appointed five Persons to appear for them and in their Name, and in the Name of their Church, before the Venerable Father in Christ Henry Archbishop of Canterbury in the Church of St. Pauls London; to Treat, Consent and Determine, and Conclude of such things as should there by deliberate Council be Ordain'd, for the Defence, Reformation and Advantage of the Church of England. And then by others dated the 24th of the same Month, they Commission'd three, (two of Them the same they had had before empower'd, and the Third one of the King's Justices) to Appear ^{K. HENRY the VIth.} for them in the Parliament of our Lord, King Henry the VIth; with Power to Consent to what should happen to be Treated of and Ordain'd in the said Parliament by our Lord the King, and his Council, and the other Prelates, Great Men, and Lords, of the Realm. How these two Meetings of the Clergy to which such different Persons were deputed, and by such different, or rather contrary Letters of Procuration, could yet be but One and Same Assembly, As Dr. A. Affirms, I shall leave it to any Man of Sense, be he never so much prejudiced in this Case, to Consider.

If any Meeting of the Clergy, be it Synod, or Convocation, so it be but an Assembly of the Lower Clergy, will serve Dr. A's Turn; He has here a most exact, concurrent, Attending Convocation. It met a Week before the Parliament began, and it continued 'till four Days after it was risen, and sate almost three Months together with it.

But where was all this while the Convocation of the Other Province? We must, I think, resolve with Dr. A. once for all, to cut them off from the Blessed Privilege, and Right of Attendance. For indeed it is so seldom that they have met in any order, with our Parliaments, as they ought to have done; That if they must come in to make good the Hypothesis, the Cause must fail; and both the Doctrine and Right of Attendance be given up.

But there was 'Another Parliament assembled besides this, this Year; at Leicester, February the 18th. It sate 'till the very end of it, March the 20th. If Dr. A. will tell us what Convocation of either Province, was called or met with it, he will be very kind; for my part I have not yet been so fortunate as to discover Any.

The Parliament having sate to March the 20th the last Year, was from thence prorogued to 'the Munday after St. George, the 29th of April, this. From thence it continued to the first of June, and so was dissolved. In this Parliament a Grievous Complaint was made by the Commons against the Clergy for Non-residence; 'That for want of Instruction, the People were fallen into Lollardy, and the Sacraments of Holy Church were not duly Administred unto them. 'Many Persons died, the Rights of Holy Church not received; and Hospitality was not kept: They therefore petition'd, That if any Man of Holy Church having a Cure of Souls, or of any Divine Service to be done to his Benefice, should be absent from his Benefice by six Weeks continually, his Benefice from which he was so absent, should be void. To this, Answer was made, That there was Provision sufficient for this already; 'and that the Lords Spiritual had promised to do Execution, and call their Subjects to residence, except such as had cause reasonable and lawful of Excusation, and to punish the Non-resident lawfully for their Absence.

By a Mandate issued out the day before the Prorogation of this Parliament, the Archbishop of Canterbury, summon'd his Provincial Synod to meet at London the 15 of April following. It was a proper Church-Council; and in the Order of Summons there is this particularly to be observed, That the Archbishop directed the Chapters of Cathedral Churches to send for their Proctor, a Graduate of their Chapter, or otherwise the most proper Person of it; the Abbots and Priors, if they came not themselves, a Graduate of their Convent, if they had any; or else the most fitting Person whom they could chuse: The Diocesan Clergy two Graduated Proctors of the same Diocess; or otherwise, if they had none such, two of the most able and sufficient of those who were really resident upon their Benefices. Such Authority, and greater than this, had our Archbishops in those days, in limiting the Elections of the Lower Clergy for their Provincial Synods.

The Clergy being met, the Archbishop declared to them the Cause of their Assembling: That it was to enquire after Fr. Russel a Heretick; and to consider how to proceed against the Favourers of Hereticks; and then he commanded the Clergy to meet after Dinner in the Lower-House, and there to deliberate of this Matter. Fryer Russel, a Franciscan, had it seems preach'd openly to the People, That personal Tyrbes were not commanded by God, but that it was lawful for all Christians to expend them in pious Uses, as they thought best. This struck deep upon the Revenues of the Church; and the Fryers had their Interest obvious enough in it. The Clergy therefore with an eager Zeal pursued the Preacher, and not content with that, obliged all others of the same Order, that as often as they preached, they should publicly instruct the People, that these kind of Tithes, were, by the Laws of God, and the Orders of the Holy Fathers, to be paid.

On the 27th of April, all other Affairs being Concluded, and a half tenth agreed upon, two days before the Parliament was to meet; after its Prorogation, the Archbishop Dissolved his Council.

Such was the Case of Our Province: But still those of the Other neither met, nor granted any thing. To obtain therefore their Benevolence, by a ¹ Writ dated May the 28th, the King required the Archbishop of York to Assemble his Convocation. The Archbishop appointed August the 12th for their meeting, and gave Commission to certain in his stead to preside in it. Of all the Antient Convocations of this Province from Edward the 11th's time to this Year, the full Acts of this alone remain to us: And from thence it appears, That tho' they sate from the 12th to the 24th of August, and were press'd with all imaginable earnestness to grant a Subsidie to the King, yet they refused to do it. From thence they were adjourn'd to the 5th of October, and tryed again afresh. They refused again, tho' all manner of Arguments were used to induce them to it. From thence they were prorogued to the 25th of February, and what they then did, I am not able to say. So little had they learnt Dr. A's Doctrine of being concluded by our Province, and obliged to do as we had done before them.

Thus passed this Year; in which, tho' there was a long Session of Parliament, yet was there no Convocation held with it; nor did any other Assembly whatsoever of the Clergy sit at the same time. The next year the Parliament met ²

Such was the Parliament of this year, in two several Sessions, and during the space of six Months. Yet in all this time was there no Convocation of either Province call'd to sit with it, or to attend upon it. The next year affords us the Reverse of this: An Ecclesiastical Assembly of the Clergy of our Province called in July; and by Sessions and Prorogations, continued till the beginning of December; Another of those of the other Province in August; and yet all this year no Parliament held, or called to meet with them.

To begin with that of our Province: ⁶ On the 5th of July, by the Mandate of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and at the Kings request, a Convocation or Council, I know not well which to call it, was Assembled at St. Paul's London. The ⁷ Cause of it, as declared by the Archbishop, was to defend the Church against Heresies; and to deliberate about the business of the Pope's Legate; who being at hand, in the Church, was called into the Synod, and there demanded a Subsidy of them against the Bohemian Hereticks.

On Saturday the 10th of July, the Archbishop, by his Chancellor, sent to the Synod, and ordered the Prelates and Clergy to chuse out certain Persons to be a Committee to consider how they should proceed against Hereticks, and proposed the Persons whom he thought fit for that Affair to them. But this the Synod declined; they chose each House its own Proctors: Then the Chancellor read a Royal Statute, and some Constitutions to them against Hereticks, and so the Session was continued.

The Tuesday following the King's Commissioners came to them to demand an Aid: Thus they sate till the 21st of the Month, and were ⁸ Prorogued till the morrow after St. Martin, November the 12th. The ⁹ 2d of August, the Clergy of York met upon the same account, and after the same manner: They made quick dispatch, according to their custom, with their Business: And on the 7th of August granted the King a Half tenth, and so were dismissed.

Our Clergy resumed their ¹⁰ Session according to the Prorogation. To trace the several steps of their procedure, and shew what was done by them, being again again Assembled, is no way necessary to my present business. It shall suffice K. HENRY to observe, That on the 6th of December they agreed to a Half Tenth for the the VIth. King, and so were Prorogued to the 19th of October, the year following.

Before that time, ¹ a new Parliament was called to meet a Fortnight after Michaelmas; but by other Writs was hastened to Assemble the day after St. Matthew; September 22d: Being met, it sate till the 20th of December, and was then Prorogued to the Monday after Hilary. On the 19th of October, according to the Appointment made the year before; the Synod of our Province resumed its Session; and sate to the very day the Parliament did; December the 20th, only with this difference, which utterly destroys all dependance of the One upon the Other: That as the Parliament began by New Writs, whereas the Convocation resumed its Session, upon a Prorogation from the year before; So now ² the Convocation was that day intirely Dissolved by the Archbishop; but the Parliament was ³ Prorogued only by the King. For the rest they agreed in their Gift too; the Parliament granted a Tenth, and Fifteenth: The Convocation added a Tenth to the Half Tenth, which they had granted the Year before. In this indeed the Laity exceeded the Clergy, that they afterwards Granted another Tenth and Half Fifteenth; which the Clergy did not think fit to follow them in.

It was in this Parliament that the Act was passed by which the only Parliamentary Privilege which I know of that the Convocation has, was Granted to them, of the same Protection to them, and their Servants, that the Members of Parliament, by Law before enjoy'd. This was granted upon the Petition of the Prelates and Clergy then present in Parliament: So the Record plainly shews. It puts them upon the same foot with the Commons: "In presenti Parlamento diversæ Petitiones exhibitæ fuerunt Domino nostro Regi, tam per Prelatos, & Clerum, quam per Communitatem Regni sui Angliæ; are the Words of the Roll: And if the One be admitted to be the Parliamentary Commons, I do not see how the other can be deny'd to have been the Parliamentary Prelates and Clergy."

The next year the ⁴ Parliament met not till almost the End of it: It began upon Friday, January the 12th, and continu'd till the 20th of March following. Together with this Parliament, the King summoned the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury to meet before the Feast of St. Gregory, that is before the 12th of March. ⁵ The Archbishop anticipated the time proposed, and held his Synod upon Monday February the 19th, about the middle of the Session of Parliament.

It was now become the usual custom, as for our Ecclesiastical Councils to grant the King an Aid, if required by him; so for our State-Convocations to enter upon, and transact Church Business, if allow'd by the Archbishops and Bishops so to do. Accordingly in this Assembly, the Archbishop and his Brethren being met together in the Chapter-House on Friday, February the 23d, debated about the General Council of Pisa: The ⁶ Clergy, in the mean time, being employ'd below about the Affairs for which they were called; the Subsidy demanded of them. Then they sent for them up and deliberated with them about a proper Convocation Concern, how to obtain a Remedy in the Parliament, which was held at that same time at Westminster, against the Indicting of Priests. ⁷ But the main State-Act of the Convocation was the Subsidy for the King, which being Granted March the 21st, they were immediately Dissolved.

But there was another thing which was transacted in this Convocation, which I must by no means forget. ⁸ Dr. A. in his Indignation against me for asserting what by this time abundantly appears to have been not only certain, but an evident Truth; namely, That the main End and Design of our Princes in Calling of these Convocations, was to Obtain a Supply of their Needs from them; has taken some pains to prove, what no body living ever doubted of; that the Clergy being met in Convocation, did sometimes do other Business besides that of Granting Money to the King. It was a notable Point, and therefore needed the more Care in this most accurate Writer, to clear it. One of his Authorities is derived from an Act of this Convocation; concerning which he tells us It has been known when even Matter of ⁹ Common Justice and Traffick have felt the Influence of their, (the Convocations) Resolves; and the Kingdom been generally benefitted by the Spiritual Censures they have denounced on the Use of false Weights and Measures. Had Dr. A. understood the occasion of this Decree,

K. HENRY the VIth. Decree, He would have known that there had been Care, and Care sufficient, taken by other Censures, which commonly do much more influence Traffick than Ecclesiastical Sentences, about this matter before; and that the Archbishop and Clergy only came in as a Subsidiary help to what had been Established by an Act of Parliament the Year before. It was however commendably done of them; and in matter of such concern to the Publick, no Provision ought to have been omitted that could have been made for it. But does Dr. A. in good earnest believe himself, or does he ever hope to perswade any man in his right Senses, that this was the Cause of the King's calling of this Convocation; or the End which he proposed to himself in the Assembling of it. Let him look into the Acts of this Assembly, and see what the Royal Commissioners recommended to the Clergy from the King in this meeting: Whether it was to give him a Subsidy, or to make a Constitution about the Auncel-weight? And when he has so done, let him consider, That 'tis one thing to say what was the Great Design, and End of our Princes, in Calling of these Assemblies generally was; and another to say what might sometimes, and in some Cases move them to the Assembling of them. And again; that to overthrow this Assertion, That the main End for which our Princes were wont to Call these Convocations, was for their Aid; it is not sufficient to shew that the Convocations being met, did do some other Business, even generally; (tho' that he can never shew) unless it be proved withal, That they did that other Business by the King's direction; and that that Business, not their Aid, was the Great, moving Principle, that determined our Kings to the calling of them. But it is a useful knack that some Men have got, to slip by the Point in which the true Proof, and Difficulty lies; and triumphantly to pursue such other Matters, as no body ever deny'd, nor need-ed they to have proved.

Registr. Chickley. fol. 82. Arch. Ebor. Cancellor. Anglie, in Ornata verborum serie, Dominum & Con-fratres suos, ac Cæteros Prælatos, & clericum ibidem existentes ad DUO specia-liter excitavit; videlicet, ut pro Rege teneris sub Annis Constituto, & pro Jure suo tunc in Francia laborante, preces funderent debitas ac devotas; ac etiam ad sub-veniendum ejus necessitatibus per eorum discretionem effectualiter Providerent.

Had the King summon'd the Convocation of York at the same time that he did that of Canterbury; we should here have had a Compleat Year of a Parliament, and Convocations, such as Dr. A. would make us believe there always was; He means there always ought to have been, to make good his Hypothesis, tho' there seldom or never was. But that Province Assembled the August before; and by so doing, has utterly overthrown all that promising Prospect which there seem'd to be on Our side.

The next Year all is silent; neither Parliament, Convocation, nor Council, that I know of fate in it. Anno 1432, the Parliament was summon'd to meet betimes, May the 11th: It fate to the 17th of July following, and so was Dissolved. With this Parliament no Convocation was either Called, or Held, in either Province; nor did the Clergy otherwise than in their own Parliamentary Right Attend at it.

On the 15th of September the Archbishop of Canterbury Assembled his Provincial Council: He called it by his own Ecclesiastical Authority; and it was in all respects a proper Church Synod. The Cause of it expressed in the Citatory Letters was this, pro nonnullis Arduis & urgentibus Negotiis, universalis Ecclesia fideique Catholica statum Reformationem & utilitatem concernentibus: And what those Affairs were, the Archbishop, when they were met, more particularly explained to them: The Sum was to consider of what related to the Pope, and the Council of Basil, and how to behave themselves towards each of them.

The Clergy being thus met upon an Ecclesiastical account, the King took the Opportunity of applying to them for Aid. They agreed to a Half Tenth, and so on the 24th of the same Month the Assembly were Dissolved.

To get the Aid of the Clergy of the Other Province, the King issued out his Writ to the Archbishop for the Convening of it. They met there October the 3d (three Months after the Parliament was Dissolved) but they gave but half as much as our Province had done, the 4th part of one whole Tenth. So little did they stick to Dr. A's Rule; or imagin themselves to be concluded by the precedents of our Province in these particulars.

On the 8th of July, the Year following, the King called his Parliament to meet at Westminster: It fate till the 13th of the next Month, and then was prorogued till a Fortnight after Michaelmas. From thence it continued its Session

Session till the Twenty First of December, which seems to be the last Day ^{HENRY} of it. ^{the Vth.}

With the First Session of this Parliament, no Assembly of the Clergy of any kind met in either Province. With the latter, a Convocation of a mixt nature was called by the King's Writ, and the Archbishop's Mandate, to sit at St. Paul's London, November the 7th; and of which, the best Character I can give is, That it was at once both a Council and a Convocation. The Archbishop's Mandate begins altogether upon the Spiritual Part: The instant great necessity of the Universal Church, considering the matter of difference between our Holy Lord, "the Pope, on the one side, and the Holy Council of Basl on the other, which "was now in Agitation; joyn'd with the Incitement of the Princes, Lords, and "Nobles of the Realm of England, enforced him to it: That besides this, he had "received the King's Writ, (which he at large recites) to the same purpose.

In the Persons who were so called to this Meeting, there is also somewhat very particular; which the business of a State-Convocation required not; but that of the Council did. The Archbishop directed, That the Bishops and Prelates should come to it in person; & meliori quo poterint in sacra Theologia Jure Canonico & Civili Doctorum, & aliorum Clericorum presentia suffulti & Consilio. That the Chapters should send One Proctor at the least, the Diocesses two, and those to be, sufficienter scientifici & Graduati.

The Proceedings of the Clergy, when met, shew it to have been more than a meer State-Convocation. The Archbishop having proposed the Causes of their meeting to them: The Clergy answer'd: "That for as much as the said "Motives were such as had not before been perfectly Communicated to, or "consider'd by many of them, and to which an Answer ought not suddenly "to be given, without a prudent and mature deliberation; it would behove "them de Licentia Domini & Confratrum suorum; to enter upon a special and "joint deliberation about them. This the Archbishop willingly Granted and "commanded them that they should diligently and unanimously labour about "the said Motives, and what depended upon them, till the 12th of November: "Usque quem diem Dominus continuavit Convocationem.

Thus they went on with their Conciliary Affairs to the 19th of November, before the King made any demand of Subsides of them. The Clergy refusing to make any Grant; on the 7th of December the King's Commissioners renewed their demand a second time. On the 17th they agreed to a Subsidy, and on the twenty first, the Convocation, as well as the Parliament, were both Dissolved: The Grant was a quarter and half of a Tenth; as the Writs for the Collecting of it shew.

Such was that Assembly which met in our Province; and continued about the whole time of the second Session of the Parliament of this Year. If Dr. A. thinks that either the King called it, or the Archbishop held it by the Rule of our Constitution to attend upon that Great Council; I must then desire him to tell me, how it came to pass, that when the King's Writ went out for calling the Convocation of One Province; he did not at the same time, issue out another, for that of the other Province to meet, as by the same Rule of our Constitution (if any such Rule there were) it ought to be done. Yet the King we are sure summon'd it not at this time; nor does it appear that the Archbishop assembled his Synod during this whole Year.

The next Year affords neither Parliament nor Convocation: On the 7th of October the Archbishop of Canterbury held a Provincial Synod, for the defence of the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, which by several of the King's Writs, especially that of Premuniri facias was, as he affirm'd, more disturb'd and hinder'd than usually it had been. He complain'd also that the Ministers of the Church were daily oppress'd by false Indictments, and other unjust Vexations. For this cause he call'd them together, to provide some remedy in this behalf; and caused a certain number of Persons to be deputed, Doctors of the Laws and others, to consider their Grievances, and draw them up in Writing. But the Pestilence being hot in London, the Synod was disturbed by it; and so little was done in these matters at that time. Yet on the 23d of October certain Articles were form'd, and pass'd, by which the Violators of their Ecclesiastical Rights were Excommunicated, and these were ordered to be publish'd Three times in the Year.

HENRY On the 5th of July 1435, the King sent out the Writs for a Parliament to meet at Westminster the tenth of October. Being Assembled there, it continued to sit, ² till the twenty third of December, and then (I suppose) was dissolved. ³ In this Parliament the business of the Abbots and Priors being made Collectors of Tenths out of the Diocesses in which they resided (for which a provision had been made in the latter end of the Reign of King Henry the Fifth) was again resum'd. But the King declined doing any thing in it, and so it continued as it was before.

By a ⁴ Writ to the Archbishop of Canterbury, dated September the 27th: The King ordered a Convocation of that Province to be Assembled the Morrow after St. Martin, November the 12th, about the middle of the Parliament: How long it continued, or what it did I am not able to say. If I may rely upon a Minute taken from an Antient Register, the Clergy thus Assembled, Granted a Subsidy of 6 s. and 8 pence, of such whose Benefices were above Five, and under Ten Pounds a Year; and a whole Tenth of all above the last Value.

The Convocation of the Other Province was not ordered by the King till the 8th of February following, and met not till the June after, as I shall more particularly observe by and by.

The next Year the ⁵ Parliament was called to meet at Cambridge the 21st of January: But by other Writs was adjourn'd to Westminster on the same Day: It met accordingly, and ⁶ sate to the 27th of March, and so was Dissolved. With this Parliament no Convocation of the Clergy was held: In the Province of Canterbury they met again this Year, as they had done the last, on the 12th of November. In that of York the Convocation called by the King's Writ before mentioned February the 18th, met upon the 11th of June; and Granting a Subsidy then, was not re-assembled with the Parliament six Months after.

About the end of this Year March the 8th, while the Parliament was yet sitting; ⁸ Writs were made out by the King's Order to the two Archbishops, to Assemble their respective Convocations. The time limited was within the first of May, 1437: And the ⁹ Archbishop of Canterbury accordingly Assembled his on Monday, April the 29th at St. Paul's Church, London: The business of this Convocation was for a Subsidy; which they soon dispatcht, and so were dismiss'd the 8th of May following. How the King's Writ was Executed in the Other Province, at what time they met, or whether they met at all, I have not yet been able to discover, and must therefore leave it to some more fortunate Person to declare.

The last Year was not quite ended before the King sent out ¹⁰ New Writs, for the two Convocations, dated February the 12th, That of our Province Assembled at St. Paul's London, April the 28th: ¹¹ It met both by Papal and Royal Authority, and was at once both a Synod and a Convocation. The business was to appoint Commissioners for the Council of Ferrara, and to agree upon a Subsidy for their Expences. ¹² The Religious by themselves Consented first; and deliberating farther about the business which related to the promoting of Graduates in the Universities, by the Abbot of Glocester their Prolocutor, agreed (with some Conditional Qualifications) to the Constitution made in the Year 1421. ¹³ On Wednesday the fourteenth of May, the Synod was Prorogued to Monday the sixth of October following, when being resumed, it sate till the 18th of the same Month, and then was Dissolved.

The Convocation of York met a few days sooner, April the 21st, by the same Authority, and for the same Ends. I shall add only, that in neither of these two Years was there any Parliament held; so that these Assemblies, whether Councils or Convocations, or Both, could not have been design'd either to meet with, or attend upon that Great Body.

On the 20th of September the next Year, ¹⁴ Writs were issued out for a Parliament to meet at Westminster on Thursday, the morrow after St. Martin, November the 12th. Being met at that time, ¹⁵ it continued to sit till the 21st of December following; and was then Prorogued till the morrow after Hilary, January the 14th at Reading: How long it sate there, the Roll does not tell us; ¹⁶ but by a Writ dated in Parliament, February the 15th, it appears that it was not then dissolved, it being a Writ of Summons to call up an absent Member to Parliament, we may reasonably conclude that it lasted for some considerable time time after. About a Month before this Parliament first met, the ¹ King by ^{K. HENRY} his Writ, commanded the Archbishop of Canterbury to Assemble the Convocation of his Province at St. Paul's London. ^{the VIth} ^{Rot. Claus.} ^{18 Henr. vi.} ^{m. 35. dorf.} ^{Regist.} ^{Chicheley. fol.} ^{109. b.} ^{iii.} The Archbishop obey'd, and appointed it to Assemble the 21st of November; a few days after the Parliament was to begin. The King's Commissioners being come to it, declared to the Clergy, in his Name, the Causes of his Calling of them: And exhorted them, first, to consider how the Differences between the Pope and the Council of Basil might be accommodated; and in the next place, to Grant a Subsidy to Him.

Here therefore every thing went, on this side, to Dr. A's satisfaction. A Convocation was called by the King's Writ, and sate exactly with the Parliament; began but nine Days after it, and continued to the end of its first Session. The cause of it was not merely or chiefly for a Subsidy; which came but in the second place: As in the Convocation before, no Subsidy at all was demanded of it, tho' it then also sate by the King's Writ, as well as by the Popes Direction.

In this Convocation among the ³ Grievances of the Clergy, that which arose from the Writ of Premuniri was chiefly complained of; and a large request was presented by the Archbishop to the King in the Name of the Convocation against it. A Constitution was made in favour of small Vicaridges, for the better Augmentation of them; a Tenth Granted; and at the request of the Clergy, the Convocation Dissolved; tho' the Parliament with which it sate (Dr. A. would have said, on which it was called to Attend) was not, but only Prorogued for the sake of the Christmas Season, to Reading. ^{Ibid. fol. 113.} ^{114.}

Now this intirely overthrows all the encouraging Prospect which Dr. A. might before have flatter'd himself with from this Meeting. For had it been design'd for a Convocation Attendant upon the Parliament; or thought by the King, or his Council, to have been so: The Archbishop must have only prorogued the One, as the King had done the Other; and have order'd it to meet again in January, when the Lords and Commons did. But instead of that He finally Dissolved it, as the Words of the Register are: And the other Session of Parliament was held alone by it self, without so much as the Clergy of Canterbury to keep it company. As for those of York, they were not called at all either by the King, or the Metropolitan; nor can I find that they met at all this Year.

The Year following tho' no Parliament was Summon'd, Yet by a Letter from the King to the ⁴ Bishop of Rocheſter dated under his Privy Seal May 30th, it appears that there was a Great Council held; with which not being concern'd I shall take no farther Notice of it. ^{Sect. 40.} ^{1440.} ^{4 Registr. Roſ.} ^{fens. Lib. iii.} ^{fol. 159.} ^{Registr.} ^{Kemp. fol. 416.} ^{79.}

In ⁵ the Province of York a Convocation was held August the 17th: I call it a Convocation because the Acts speak of it under that Name. But otherwise being Summon'd by the Archbishops Own Authority; and making of some Provincial Constitutions; it appears to have been an Ecclesiastical Synod, a proper Provincial Council. Be it which it will, the Clergy thus Assembled Granted a Tenth to the King; and in that give us a Certain assurance that they did not meet with the Parliament, and the other Convocation, the Year before.

It was towards the latter End of the Year 1441. before the Parliament met again: Then it began on ⁶ Thursday, the morrow after St. Paul, January the 26th; and sate ⁷ from thence to March the 27th. On the very day that the Parliament began the King sent out his Writs to both the Archbishops to Assemble the Clergy of their respective Provinces, I cannot say in an Co-attending, but in a Subsequent Convocation. Accordingly our Archbishop ordered his to Meet ⁸ April the 16th, about 3 Weeks after the Parliament was Dissolved. ⁹ It granted the King a Subsidy, and sate to the 26th of the same Month. But the Convocation of York was yet more remote from the Session of Parliament: It met not till the 4th of October, seven months after its Dissolution; and then granted the King a Tenth, as our Province before had done. ^{1441.} ^{6 Dugd. Sum.} ^{monit. Parl.} ^{pag. 432.} ^{7 Rot. parl. 20.} ^{Henr. vi.} ^{num. 5.} ^{1442.} ^{8 Reg Gilbert.} ^{Lond. fol. 93.} ^{9 Registr.} ^{Prasy. The next Year affords Us no Assemblies of the Clergy either in Parliament, or Convocation. Anno 1444. By a ¹¹ Writ dated July the 12th the King required Archbishop Stafford to call his Convocation before the Feast of All Saints following. He appointed it to meet October the 19th; and being met it continued to the 26th of the same Month, and so was Dissolved. ¹² In this Convocation the King, by his Commissioners, first demanded a Subsidy of the Clergy, and then sent his Letter to them for a Decree to be pass'd by them for the Solemnizing of the Feast of the Translation of St. Edward. The Clergy granted a Tenth to the King, and at their request request the Feast of St. Edward was order'd by the Archbishop to be observed as a double Feast. The rest of their Debates were spent upon the Subject of such things as needed Reformation; and for which they appointed certain Proctors and Solicitors to Attend at the next Parliament.

It seems probable by this Procedure, that tho' the Lower Clergy still continued to be summon'd to Parliament, as they had before been; and several Returns were made upon the Pramunientes to it; Yet now the numbers that actually went thither were not very great; and therefore the Clergy were forced to appoint what Proctors should come up to the next Parliament, and pursue the Redress of these Grievances on their Behalf. ¹ This Parliament was not Summon'd till the xiiith of January; almost 3 Months after the Convocation was Dissolved. It met upon Thursday, February the 25th: and sate till March the 15th, and so was prorogued to the beginning of the next Year.

About a Fortnight after the calling of this Parliament, ² by another Writ to the Archbishop of York, the King directed the Assembling of the Convocation of that Province. Had the Archbishop thought fit, He might have made it an Attend upon the Parliament. But that time would have been inconvenient both to Himself, and his Clergy; and He knew of no such Obligation in this Case, as is now pretended; and therefore he delay'd it to the time which we shall hereafter see. In the mean while, I cannot imagine what can be more demonstratively Evident in Vindication of the Freedom of the Prerogative in this Case, and of the Independance of these Assemblies upon one another, than the Procedure of this Year Affords us. First here is a Convocation of the Province of Canterbury called in July by the King; and held in October by the Archbishop. Then a Parliament is summon'd in January, and sits the February following. And after both, a Convocation of the Other Province is called about a Month before the Parliament met, with no limitation of time; and not Assembled till September the Year following. If Dr. A. can reconcile this to his New-Model of our English Constitution, He is a Man of Art; for my part I despair of ever being Able to do it.

The Parliament of the last Year, was, as I before observed, not Dissolved, but Prorogued to the beginning of this. ³ Accordingly it resumed its Session, April the 29th; and, as I understand, it sate till June the 5th; and was again prorogued to October the 20th. ⁴ On the 20th of October it met again, and continued to December the 15th. ⁵ From thence it was a third time prorogued to January the 24th: ⁶ and so sate to April 9th; and was finally dissolved.

Amidst so many Sessions of Parliament, continued with three small interruptions for a Year and Quarter, if the Convocational Attendance fail, what can we conclude but that certainly the Men of that Age understood nothing of what is now Asserted concerning it. Yet this is the very truth of the matter. In February 1444 The Parliament began: It lasted till April 1446. and in all that time no Assembly of the Province of Canterbury was held; which met the October before this long Parliament Assembled; and sate not again, till the latter End of June, after it was dissolved. 'Tis true, the Province of York did meet in the Year 1445: But it met as much to the destruction of this New Hypothesis, as it was possible for it to have done. For it met during the time that the Parliament was Adjourn'd: A most rational procedure upon their Principles who deny any Obligation in the One to Attend upon the Other; but as Irrational on theirs who make it a Rule, the Fundamental Law of our Constitution, that the Parliament of England ought never to sit without a Convocation, Essentially joyn'd with it: And affirm, that neither the King, nor the Archbishops; nor Clergy; no nor the very Parliament its self; can, without breaking our Form of Government, make a Separation between them.

But I must represent the History of these things as I find it truly was, not as some men would have it thought to have been. The ⁷ Convocation of York met the last of September: It Granted a Tenth to the King; and that is all that I can find was done by it.

While the Parliament was sitting; ⁸ Pope Eugenius having laid a Tax upon the English Clergy of a Tenth for the defence of Christendom against the Soldan of Babylon, his Legat came hither to the King about that Affair. The King told him he would advise with his Bishops what Answer to make to Him. Accordingly he consulted with the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Four of his Suffragans, being all that were present at the Parliament; and agreed with them, that every

Bishop

Bishop should Assemble his Diocesan Synod, and therein Raise a Penny in the Mark for this Purpose. This resolution the Archbishop of Canterbury order'd the Bishop of London, by his Mandate dated March the 14th. 1444. to communicate to all the Bishops of his Province: In which this Passage is upon more Accounts than One to be observed: — “ Ne Prælati & Clerus deberent Onerari super Novâ decimâ Solvendâ Regi, Dom. Cantuar. cum Prælati Supradictis, Convocationem non fiendam deliberaverunt; Et voluerunt quod Singuli Episcopi in suis Diocesis facerent ista Exponi, & summam prædictam concedi. The Archbishop knew very well what they were to expect if they met in Convocation; and therefore to avoid the Kings Demands, chose by this Other Way to comply with what the Pope had required of Them.

To proceed therefore to the next Year 1446. in which the ¹ Parliament was called to sit at Cambridge upon St. Scholastica's day, February the 10th; but by Other Writs was adjourn'd to ² St. Edmunds-bury on the same Day. It met there, and ³ continued to the 3^d of March, and then was Dissolved.

I have before said that the ⁴ Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, was Assembled this Year in June. The King in his Writ had limited the time to be within the Feast of St. John Baptist, the Archbishop named June the 22^d. And the Clergy accordingly met upon that day. ⁵ It continued from thence to the 8th of July, when having agreed to a Tenth for the Kings Use, it was Dissolved. After this I do not meet with any other Assemblies of the Clergy in either Province this Year; So that the Parliament at Bury sat, as the other before had done, altogether by its self, without any Convocation to Attend upon it.

The Year following neither Parliament nor Convocation, that I can find, were called. In the next after 1448, ⁶ A Parliament met tho very late; so that beginning in this Year, it continued on for a Great part of the Summer in the next. Its ⁷ first Session was at Westminster from February the 12th to April the 4th. Then it was prorogued to May the 7th. From May the 7th it sat to May the 20th, and was again prorogued to June the 16th, and order'd to meet at Winchester. There it met as it was appointed, and Continued to July the 16th, which was the last day of this Parliament.

In this ⁸ Parliament the Petition of the Abbots and Priors for a remedy against the Archbishops and Bishops in appointing them to be Collectors of the Tenths granted in their Convocations, at an inconvenient distance from their place of dwelling, was again renew'd: It was again rejected with this full Answer; that “ Forasmuch as the deputing of the Collectors of the Dismes granted by the Archbishops, and Bishops, and the Clergies in the Convocations of this Roiatme belongeth to the said Archbishops, and Bishops; the King will that the matier contentyn'd in the said Petition be Committed to them to put such remedie therein as may be thought best after their Wisdomes and Discretions.

With the first, and second Sessions of this Parliament, no Convocation was held. With the third that of our ⁹ Province met, (for I cannot say Attended) by order of the Kings Writ, dated May the 19th, and by the Archbishops Mandate sent forth thereupon: The Parliament sitting at Winchester, June the 16th; The Convocation at London, July the 1st. In this Convocation the Clergy granted one intire xib, besides a Subsidy, to the King, ¹⁰ as by the Writs for the Collection of them it appears.

What this Subsidy was, the Rolls of the Parliament which met at the same time inform us. ¹¹ The Commons petitioned the King on the Behalf of the Clergy to grant a General Pardon of All Crimes and Forfeitures to them to the first day of June past; and for this They (the Commons in Parliament) by the Assent of the Lords Spiritual, and Temporal, Granted a Subsidy to Him of 6 s. 8 d. to be taken and received of all manner of Priests, Saculars, Stipendiaries and Chantry Priests within the Realm. The King accepted the Condition, and Granted the Petition upon the Terms proposed. ¹² And the Clergy in Convocation agreed (besides the Tenths which they gave as Usual) to the payment of it.

By new ¹³ Writs dated the 23^d of September, another Parliament was Summon'd to meet at Westminster upon Thursday the 6th of November. The 1st day of its meeting it was Adjourn'd from Westminster to London. There it continued till the 4th of December, when it was adjourn'd back to Westminster where it first met. At Westminster it sat on to the 17th of December; and then was prorogued to ¹⁴ January the 22^d. From January the 22^d it Continued till March the 30th: What became of it then we shall see when we come to the next Year. In the mean time let us enquire How the Convocations Attended upon the two Sessions which we have already mentioned of it.

By a ¹ Writ directed to the Archbishop of Canterbury under the Privy Seal dated at Eltham the 2d of October, the King order'd the Convocation of this Province to be Assembled. The Archbishop the same day issued out his Mandates for it to meet upon the 14th of November; a week after the Parliament began. How it sate, or when it rose, I am not able to declare: ² But by the Kings Writs for Collecting what was Granted by it, it appears that by several Prorogations it was continued till the 17th of July following; which is all that I know of it.

If any Convocation met either with this, or the foregoing Parliament in the Province of York, 'tis more than I have yet been able to discover: However, as I do not know that any did; so neither will I determine that there was none held this Year in those Parts.

How the last Parliament sate till the 30th of March I have before shewn. ³ It was then prorogued to meet at Leicester April 29; after which we hear no more of it. On ⁴ the 5th of September New Writs were issued out for a Parliament to meet at Westminster on the Feast of St. Leonard, the 6th of November following. Being met it ⁵ sate to the 18th of December, and was prorogued to the 20th of January after. From thence it sate again to April 29th. 1451. ⁶ Then it was again Prorogued to May the tenth; which is the last account we have of it.

Had any Convocation been held with this long Parliament in either Province, I can scarcely think that our Rolls and Registers should have been so Generally silent, as I have some Reason to think that they are, of it. Let Dr. A. try his better Fortune; whilst I beg leave to conclude, till I shall see some good Evidence to the Contrary, that with all these Sessions no Convocation was Called; nor did any, in his new phrase, Attend upon it.

But it may be the Procedure of the Next Year, may help to make up the defects of the Foregoing. On the 6th of March 1451. The King issued out a ⁷ Writ to the Archbishop of York to Summon a Convocation of his Province. ⁸ The Archbishop appointed it to meet upon June the xiith this Year. He presided by his Commissioner; who (not being able as I conceive to obtain any Subsidy of the Clergy) prorogued it to the 6th of October following. In the mean time the Archbishop was Translated (July the xxist) from the See of York to that of Canterbury; and William Booth removed to York in his Stead. ⁹ The Convocation thus Prorogued in the time of One Archbishop, met according to its Assignment under Commissioners delegated by the Other. Thus was it Adjourned from time to time till January the 29th; when the Clergy agreed to a Grant of Half a Tenth; and so were Dissolved.

Having thus, at such different times, required the Archbishops to Call their Convocations; He last of all, at another Season, Summons his Parliament, ¹¹ by Writs dated January the 20th; to sit at Reding the 6th of March. It met and ¹² sate till March the 28th. 1453: And was then Prorogued to Westminster on April the 25th. From April the 25th, it continued to sit there till July the 2d. When it was prorogued again to the xiith of November; and that to meet at Reding where it began. It was then further Adjourn'd to the 11th of February first; and again to the 14th. From thence it sate on to the Middle of April; 1445- about which time it seems to have been Dissolved.

This was a long, and a remarkable Parliament; and it must be very strange if some Assembly or Other of the Clergy did not happen to sit concurrently with it; and thereby, in the New Phrase, to Attend upon it. Yet so it was; That the Clergy having made their Grants a little before it began, they were not once Summon'd to sit within the Compass of it; no nor yet, that I can find, the whole next Year after it. The Archbishop of York held indeed ¹³ his Diocesan Synod after Michaelmas 1453: Had He held a Provincial Convocation, the same Register which Recorded the One, would doubtless much more have made some Entry of the Other.

Anno 1455. The King¹ called his Parliament, to meet at Westminster, July the 9th. It sate till the End of the Month, and was² prorogued to the 12th of November following. On the 12th of November it met again, and continued to the 13th of December. ³ Then it was again prorogued to January the 14th. At which time resuming its Session, it sate till towards the End of February. Here now was another Long, and Busie Parliament: It lasted viii Months; and Ordered many things of the Greatest Consequence. Yet with none of these Sessions did any Convocation meet; nor for some Years before, or after.

Towards the latter End of the Year, we hear of an⁴ Assembly called by the Name of a Parliament, appointed to meet at Westminster. And if I mistake not in the Time (for the date is wanting) either the same Adjourn'd, or a New Great Council summon'd, by Other Writs dated January the 27th to meet at Coventry February the 14th: But of this I can give no farther Account; nor does it concern my Subject to Enquire after it.

From this Year we must make a large Step forward, to 1459. before which I cannot find that either Parliament or Convocation was held. The King⁵ then call'd his Parliament to Coventry November the xxth: It⁶ sate till the same day of the Month following, and so was Dissolved.

And here we have again another Evidence Against Dr. A's Pretensions: A Parliament sitting without any Convocation in Either Province to Attend upon it. Three Months after this Parliament began, and two after it was Dissolved; the King sent forth his⁷ Writs to the Archbishops for the meeting of their Convocations. The⁸ Archbishop of York first Assembled his upon the last of April; Above four Months after the Parliament had been Dissolved. ⁹ It was prorogued first to the 9th of June, then to other times: Before which the Next King came to the Crown.

The¹⁰ Convocation of our Province met at the time Appointed by the Archbishop, May the 6th. and continued to the 17th of the next Month. On the Ninth of May, being the third Session, the King sent a Letter to the Archbishop and his Clergy; which was publickly read in the Upper House, and then Ordered to be read also in the Lower. After which the Archbishop commanded the Clergy to choose their Prolocutor, and so prorogued the Meeting till the Saturday following.

On¹¹ Tuesday the 20th of May, the Prolocutor presenting to the Arch-Bishop, and Upper House, certain Articles relating to the Advantage of the King, and Realm and Church of England; the Archbishop with the Consent of his Brethren, chose certain Persons of Eminent Knowledge out of the Lower House, to be present, to treat and consult with them concerning the said Articles.

How this Convocation proceeded after the first Session of it, I cannot tell, nor do the Acts of it clearly inform us. ¹² It continued by Prorogations from time to time, till the xvth of July the Year following; and then Granted a Tenth to the King.

In this time ¹³ One of the last Parliaments of King Henry the viith met October the viith 1460. On the 25th of that Month the solemn agreement between the King and the Duke of York was made in it: How much longer it sate I cannot tell, nor is it at all Material to our purpose to determine. That it had no Convocation to Attend upon it is plain from the account I have before given: From which it appears that One of our Convocations was summon'd in April, the other in May before; and both now were continued by Prorogations from time to time, without ever coming to any New Sessions, till after this Parliament was Dissolved.

Thus passed this long, but weak Reign; in which we meet with much fewer Parliaments than in the foregoing, active, and busie times, of the other HENRY's; but the Sessions much longer; and the Prorogations more numerous than they were wont to be. Yet still, even in this Reign, we find all things contrary to the New Pretences now set on foot, without either Law, or History, to support them. For

1. In all this Reign of 38. Years; We do not meet with any One Instance of a Parliament that was held, with the two Convocations Assembled during the Session of it. Whether this could have so hapned, had it then been thought a Rule of our Constitution, for these two evermore to meet together; that the Parliament had a right to Demand the Attendance of the Clergy in their Convocations, and the

And I think it must be strange that this Concurrence with, and Attendance of the Convocation upon the Parliament, should have been any Rule at all, much more an Essential Law of our Constitution, and yet neither King nor Clergy; Lords nor Commons, have ever been aware of it.

King EDWARD the IVth.

About the End of the Year 1460. King Edward the IVth came to the Crown, March the 4th. On the 23d of May following, He summon'd his first Parliament to meet at Westminster, July the 6th: But "Eo quod Scotorum Rex Regnum intravit apud Carlionem, hoc Parliamentum fuit prorogatum usque ad quartum diem Novembris; & tunc tenebatur; as the minute on the Roll informs us. It was therefore the 4th of November before the first Parliament of this King sate, It continued till the 21st of December; and so was prorogued to the viith of May the next Year.

With this first Parliament no Convocation was held in either Province: A clear demonstration that the Rule now set up, was not then known, for if it had we may be confident that at this Parliament at least, (the first of a New King, and of a King Restored by Parliament to his Rights,) it would most certainly have been Observed. But the Clergy of Canterbury had granted their Subsidy the xvth of July before: The Clergy of York were at this time only under a Prorogation; * by Vertue whereof they met March the 23d, three months after the Session of Parliament was over, and then Granted their Tenth to the New King.

On the Sixth of May: 1462: ⁵ The Parliament met according to its Prorogation: But the King being not able to come to it, He the same day by Commission, Dissolved it.

Towards the End of the Year, ⁶ a second Parliament was called to sit at York, February the 5th. But by other ⁷ Writs dated about the End of the same Month, we find a New one called to meet at Westminster the 29th of April; and therefore we may conclude that the Other either never met, or if it did, it was also presently Dissolved.

The King having so lately before received a Subsidy of the Clergy, declined Assembling them with his first Parliament. But no sooner was that Dissolved; and the Year of the Grant come about, but he issued out his Writs for their meeting again without Regard to any Parliament, which was neither Summon'd, nor intended to Sit at the same time with them. ⁸ In obedience to this Authority, the Archbishop of Canterbury held his, at London, July the xxith. It ⁹ continued till the 2d of August; then Granted a Tenth, and so was Dissolved. The Archbishop of York Assembled not his Clergy till the first of September following. ¹⁰ And then instead of following the Example of the other Province, according to the New Rule advanced by Dr. A. in their Favour, they gave by an Old one of their Own, much practised under the late Reign, but half as much; A half Tenth to our Whole One. This was a Remark which was not for that Authors Purpose, and therefore he did not think fit to take any Notice of this Matter. But another Action there was of the Clergy in this Assembly, which because he supposed it favour'd his Paradox; he fail'd not to make what Advantage he could of it. I will set it down in his own Words.

¹¹ Rights, &c. ¹² Even in CHURCH ACTS, as well as STATE AIDS, what had ¹³ passed “ passed the One (that is the Convocation of Canterbury) was held to be a kind of K. EDWARD the IVth.

 “ LAW to the Other. So that in 1463. we find the Convocation of York adopting “ at once ALL the CONSTITUTIONS made by that of Canterbury, and as yet “ not received : † A Practise that I doubt not was often in Elder times repeated, † Ibid. marg.
 “ and we know is still Continued. Registrum

It is a strange Aversion that some men have for Truth, that they will not see Boothé Arch. Ebor. f. 143.
 it even when it lies the most plainly before them. To set this matter to rights
 I must observe ; First, that this Convocation, was the Convocation of 1462. not as Dr. A reports it of 1463. Next, that the Place of the Register is fol. 341 ; not 143. In the words of the Minute, He is many ways out ; and in one place at least, materially so. The words of the Register run thus : “ Memorandum quod “ prædicti Prælati & Clerus in prædicta Convocatione VOLUNT & concedunt, &c.
 But these (the last excepted) are things of little Moment : and I should not have Observed them, but only to set the Reader right ; and at the same time to induce this vain Writer to learn a little more modesty, if not Good-Nature ; and to teach Him not to triumph over the trivial mistakes of Other Men, who is so very faulty in these, as well as in much Greater Ones, himself.

But what shall we say to his Assertion ? Or how shall we Excuse him for giving so false an Account in English, of what his Own Margin, imperfect as it is, Confutes in Latin ? “ Even in Church Acts, as well as in State Aids, the Pro“ ceedings of our Convocation were, he says, held to be a kind of LAW to the Other.
 Witness the Procedure of this very Assembly ; which as I have before observed, Granted only Half a Tentb, at the same time that we had given a Whole One before them. But we will consider his own Instance, and the proof of it : “ So “ in 1463. We find the Convocation of York adopting at Once ALL the CONSTITU- “ TIONS made by that of CANTERBURY, and as yet not received. — But how did they Adopt them ? As a matter of Obligation incumbent upon them ? Or by their own free Choice, as a matter of Prudence, and the better to preserve the Unity of the Church ; That so those who lived under the same Civil Government, might also walk by the same Rules in their Ecclesiastical Discipline and Customs.
 Let the form of their Mandate determine this, “ Prælati & Clerus VOLUNT, & “ Concedunt ; The Prelats and Clergy WILL, and GRANT, that the Constitutions Provincial of the Other Province be received in theirs. Words of Authority and Independence : which argue indeed a Brotherly Respect in them to their Neighbour Prelats and Clergy ; but, at the same time, sufficiently vindicate their own Liberty. For I hope Dr. A. will not tell us that every Neighbouring Church which agreed to observe the same Common Rules with another, did thereby Subject its self to the Authority of that Church whose Canons it received.

But still the main thing of all is to be accounted for : “ We find them, says “ this Bold Author, Adopting at once ALL the CONSTITUTIONS made by the “ Province of Canterbury, and as yet not received. Do's his Minute from the Re- gister say this ? No, but much otherwise. It puts in such Limitations as utterly argue the Contrary of his Assertion. “ Dr. A. says they Agreed to Adopt ALL our Constitutions. The Minute says, That they agreed to Admit not ALL, but such ONLY of them as were by NO MEANS REPUGNANT, or PREJUDICIAL to the CONSTITUTIONS of the PROVINCE of YORK. They were desirous to walk by the same Rules with their Brethren ; but yet they would not so pursue this Unity, as, for the sake of it, to Give up their own Provincial Authority. And therefore they qualified their Vote, with this Memorable Condition, not only Omitted in, but perverted by, his Report ; That the Constitutions so to be Received were not REPUGNANT or PREJUDICIAL, to the CONSTITUTIONS of the PROVINCE of YORK.

Again Dr. A. makes short work in his Representation, They ADOPTED these Constitutions, says he : But the Clergy, in their Order, were more Cautious and Deliberate. They not only again Limited the Constitutions which they received, with a HUJUSMODI CONSTITUTIONES ; that they received all SUCH CONSTITUTI- ONS, as were no way prejudicial to their Own ; but enter'd an Open Manifesto against such of Ours as should come in Competition with theirs ; “ ET NON ALI- “ TER, NEC ALIO MODO. That they admitted them no OTHERWISE, NOT AFTER ANY OTHER MANNER, but as they were AGREEABLE with, and did no PREJUDICE to, their Own CONSTITUTIONS.

And now what could more plainly have shewn the Independent Authority of the Province of York, upon that of Canterbury, both in Spirituals and Temporals, than the Acts of this Convocation have done? In their Subsidy they departed from our Example; and Gave but half what we gave. In their Decree, They received freely, without the Constraint, or Authority of any, the Constitutions of our Province; but with this Limitation, that they were not repugnant or prejudicial to their own Provincial Constitutions; which they still resolved should take place, and be of chiefest Force with them. Thus they received them, Et non aliter, nec alio modo. And thus the Antient Churches observed one Another's Rules; without pretending thereby to any Superiority over Each Other by their so doing; to preserve the Unity, and Promote the good Order and Discipline of the whole.
 the

His Conclusion is as faulty, as his Premises: It is not only defective, but Untrue. "A Practise (says He) that I doubt not was often in Elder times repeated, and WE KNOW IS STILL CONTINUED. That any such thing was ever done by them before, much more that it WAS OFTEN REPEATED; Dr. A. has no proof; nor is he much concern'd for any. He makes no doubt of it; and therefore troubles not himself to Enquire any farther about it. And WE KNOW IT IS STILL CONTINUED? What, for the Province of York to receive in a way of Subjection, ALL our PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTIONS as a kind of LAW to Them? Will Dr. A please to give us but One Instance of this? Let Him shew Us, if He can, when, and where they Ever Received the many Canons and Constitutions that were made here in the time of Queen Elizabeth? The Articles of Religion were not Received from Us, but joyntly Agreed to, at the same time, and in the same Convocation, by the Bishops of both Provinces. The Canons of 1603. Were indeed first pass'd by our Bishops and Clergy; and by Vertue of the Kings Royal Supremacy were enjoyn'd to be observed in both Provinces; as some Other things had in like manner been imposed upon them by his Predecessor, Q. Elizabeth. Yet after all, they received them not as their Provincial Constitutions, till they had, as Dr. A speaks, Adopted them in their Own Convocation; and that with as much Freedom, and Authority, and with all the same Ceremony of License from the King, and Votes in their Own Council, that we had before agreed to them. The Liturgy by Law Establish'd was not received by them from us neither; but by their Bishops, and Commissioners, they settled it joyntly with us. In short: If the Smalness of their Province, but especially their distance from the Ordinary Residence of the Courts of our Kings, and the Sessions of our Parliaments, have given Occasion to matters of public Concern to be commonly begun with Us, rather than with Them; and they have afterwards come into our Measures, and agreed in the same Resolutions; Yet has it still been with a sufficient Regard to their Own Authority and Independence, both in Spirituals and Temporals, upon Us. Our Prelats, and Clergy, have, for the most part, Concerted the matters of both kinds with theirs before they have pass'd them here; the better to preserve that good Understanding, and Uniform practise, that ought to be kept up in all such public Matters between Us, and them: Nor do I know of any One that, till now, ever made this Use of their Joynt Agreement, to infer a Superiority in the One Province over the Other; A Right which I am pretty sure neither hath any Law of the Land Given Us in State Matters; nor any Law either of the Church, or Realm, convey'd to Us in Ecclesiastical.

After both these Convocations were over, another Meeting there was of the Clergy of our Province in November following: Of which I find only this Note in One of the ¹ Registers of the Church of Canterbury, that the Commemorations of St. Thomas, St. Frydeswide, and St. Ethelrede, were on the 24th of November, decreed in it.

But I return to the Course of our History. By ² Writs dated at Westminster, February the 28th 1462, the King order'd his Parliament to meet at Westminster on Friday April the 29th 1463. Being accordingly Assembled, it continued to sit till the 17th of June: ³ Then it was prorogued to the 14th of November, And from thence to the 20th of February, at York. Being met there, it was again Adjourn'd to the same Place, May the 5th the next Year; Where we shall again resume the Sessions of it.

⁴ Antiq. Brit.

"At the same time that the King held his Parliament at Westminster, the Archbishop and Clergy Assembled in Synod; say our ⁴ Antiquitat. Britann. But we must not stretch the Words too far, if we mean not to injure either the Truth of the History, or the Authority of the Historian: Nor should I have taken this Notice of it, but to shew Dr. A. (as I am ready at any time to do in Abundance of other Places) that an Argument drawn from these kind of Expressions, is of no Weight. For indeed the Parliament and Convocation did not meet together; but the former was prorogued three weeks before the latter Assembled.

To give therefore a more exact Account of this Assembly: On the 3^d of May, the Parliament being then sitting, the King issued out his Writs to the two Archbishops to call their respective Convocations. The ¹ Archbishop of Canterbury Order'd our Clergy to meet at St. Pauls London, July the 6th. They met; and the Clergy having chosen and presented their Prolocutor, the King's Commissioners came to the Synod and represented to it the Necessities of the King, and the Dangers of the Kingdom; and exhorted the Bishops, Prelates, and Clergy, to grant a Subsidy to Him. On the 15th of July, they return'd a second time, and acquainted them with the Scot's Invasion; who were besieging the Castle of Norham, and pressed them more earnestly to a Grant, than they had done before.

On the 23^d of July they agreed to a Tenth for the King; and at the same time granted a Charitable Subsidy to the Archbishop. This being done, the Archbishop order'd that the Charter of their Liberties should, by certain Persons delegated for that Purpose, be Reformed, before the next Parliament; who should also consider how it might best be put in Execution: And having publish'd two Constitutions, set forth in the last preceding Convocation, He Dissolved the Assembly.

Such was the Process of this Convocation; which met about three weeks after the Parliament was prorogued; and was in less time than that Dissolved, tho' the Parliament was only Adjourn'd to November following. In the ² Other Province the distance of the Convocation from the Parliament, was yet Greater. It sate not there till the 8th of August, and Granted a Tenth as Our Province before had done.

I shall not insist upon the two Prorogations of the Parliament, which, as I before said; were made in this same Year; because there was no Session Consequent upon either of them. This only may be observed, that with neither of them was the Convocation Summon'd; so that had the Parliament then sate, the Clergy would not have Attended at all upon it.

The Parliament was now to meet upon its third Prorogation, at York, May the 5th. But instead of sitting it was again adjourn'd to November the 26th. And in November continued again to January the xxixth, at Westminster. Then it sate and Granted the King a Subsidy, and did other Business; the cheif of which were the attainting of several Eminent Persons who had taken part with King Henry the 6th, and an Act of Resumption; with which I am not concerned.

Neither with these Prorogations first, nor with this Session at the last, was any Assembly of the Clergy Convened, in either Province. That which comes nearest to it, if my information be Right, was an Ecclesiastical Synod of the Province of York which met the Year following, April the 26th. This I take to be the same, wherein those Provincial Constitutions publish'd in the 2^d Volume of our Councils were made: and which the Cotton MS. Places on the same day, the next Year, 1466. Be it which it will the matter is not Great: It was a Church Council, and no Attendant on the Parliament; tho' we should allow it to have met the former of these Years, as the Durham Registers tell us that it did.

But tho' neither in this, nor the following Year (the doubtful Synod of York excepted) did any Council, or Convocation, meet in either Province, yet the whole Provinces Assembled severally in their respective Diocesan Synods; and that upon an Occasion which I must here take some notice of. The Pope having purposed to go himself in Person to the Holy Land, upon an Expedition against the Turks, laid a Tenth upon this Nation for the Expence of his Journey, and issued out his Bulls for the raising of it. The King forbade the Bulls to be brought into the Kingdom, or the Money to be levy'd upon it; but took advice to raise a Subsidy for this Expedition by his Own Authority, to satisfy the Pope, and prevent the Execution of such Bulls for the future.

In pursuance of this resolution He issued out his Letters to the Archbishops for the raising of it; and appointed Commissioners to receive the Product at their Hands. ¹ The Archbishop of Canterbury having received the King's Letter, and Instructions, sent them forthwith to the Bishop of London to be Communicated to his Suffragans. These called together their Clergy in their several Diocesses, who Granted 6d. in the Pound for this Purpose. When these several Synods met, it concerns us not to enquire: At ² Canterbury the Clergy assembled the Wednesday after Midsummer. At ³ Worcester the last of July: In the Province of York; ⁴ the Clergy of York Diocese, met at Doncaster, July the 13th. There they agreed to the same Subsidy of 6d. in the Pound: And so they did in all the other Diocesses of the Whole Realm.

Thus passed these two years; in which we have two Prorogations and One Session of Parliament, but no Convocation either summon'd with the One, or held with the Other.

The next Year 1466, neither Parliament nor Convocation were Assembled. Anno 1467, ⁵ a Parliament was held at Westminster June the 3d, and continued to the Beginning of July. ⁶ It was then prorogued to the 6th of November at Reading: ⁷ And from thence to the 5th of May 1468, at the same Place. On the 5th of May it was finally prorogued to the 12th of the same Month at Westminster, where it sate till the beginning of June, and gave a large Subsidy to the King.

With the first Session of this Parliament 1467: No Convocation was held in either Province: Nor was any called to sit with it, on the two Prorogations following. ⁸ On the 3d of March, 7th Edward the ivth, a Writ was sent to the Archbishop of Cant. to summon his Convocation. The Archbishop assigned May the 12th for the meeting of it. By this means the last Session of this Parliament, and the Convocation of this Province began both on the same day. They did the same Business too; ⁹ for on June the 3d they Granted the King a Tenth, besides a Subsidy of 6 s. 8 d. upon all such stipendiary Priests as had any yearly Pensions, exceeding the value of a 100 s. whether in Ready money, or in any thing else equivalent thereunto.

The Year following pass'd, as I suppose, without any Publick Meetings of Church or State. Anno 1470 ¹⁰ a Parliament was Called to sit at York, the second of September, but by other Writs was put off, and not suffer'd to sit at all. This Year was unfortunate to King Edward; who was forced for the present, to retire into Flanders, whilst the faction at Home brought King Henry out of the Tower, and under Him held a Parliament at Westminster in November, 49 Henry the 6th.

Before this Resolution, ¹¹ by Writs directed to the Two Archbishops, June the 11th: (10 Edward the 4th.) That Prince had order'd the Convocations of both Provinces to be Assembled. The Archbishop of Canterbury call'd his Clergy to St. Pauls London, July the 27th. To suppose that this Synod call'd by King Edward the 4th in July, was an Attendant on the Parliament of King Henry the 6th held 4 Months after in November, would be an Absurdity too Gross to deserve, or need a Confutation. Yet this Dr. A. must affirm, or he must allow that we have here another Parliament, without any Attending Convocation; which is indeed the Truth, tho' such a Truth as He must assert any thing rather than allow of.

The next Year the Fortune of King Edward the ivth again prevailed: Who returning into England, took King Henry the 6th Prisoner, slew the Earl of Warwick; and in the two Battels of Barnet, and Tewksbury, came off victoriously over his Enemies. Toward the latter End of the Year, ¹² by Order of the King's Writ, the Archbishop held his Convocation at London the morrow after St. Vincent, January the 23d. ¹³ The Clergy met at the time appointed, and sate from thence thence to February the 21st. They Granted to the King One whole Tenth; which was what the King Called them for; and all that I know of that was done by them.

This Year no Parliament was Assembled: The next Year began One of the longest Continuance that had ever yet been held in this Realm. Its first meeting was upon the 6th of October: From whence it sate to the 30th of November, and so was prorogued to the February following. With this Session no Convocation was held; nor did the Clergy of either Province meet with it, or Attend upon it. By Writ dated three days after the Adjournment of this Parliament, the King commanded the Archbishops to Summon their Clergy within their respective Provinces. What the Other Archbishop did in pursuance of his Writ, I cannot certainly say: A minute I have which speaks of a Convocation held at York the Morrow after Trinity, May the 25th; but of what Authority I do not know. This is certain, that by Vertue of this Writ the Clergy of our Province were Assembled in Convocation February the 3^d, a few days before the Parliament was Resumed at Westminster. It sate till the 9th of April, and granted a Tenth to the King: And then was not Dissolved, but Prorogued only, to the 11th of October following.

How fortunate had the Cause of Dr. A. been, had this Convocation but met the Session before, and Attended the Parliament as Exactly as now it did? The Parliament sate again according to its Prorogation, February the 11th: It sate to the 8th of April; within a day of the Convocation; and then was prorogued to the 6th of October; within five days of the Time to which the Other was Adjourned. On the 11th of October the Parliament Re-assembled; and sate from day to day to the 13th of December. It was then prorogued again to the 20th of January. When Resuming its Session the fourth time, it continued to the first of February, and so was once more Adjourn'd to May the next Year.

And here the Doctrine of Attendance received a new Interruption. The Convocation, prorogued to the 11th of October as I have before said, was instead of Sitting, Adjourn'd again to the 15th of December: Whether it was then Dissolved I cannot certainly tell; but do suppose it was only Continued again to the 24th of January following. Then it sate with the Parliament again, and after it to the 21st of February, and Granted, as before, One intire Tenth to the King. So that in 4 Sessions of this Parliament, already pass'd, two we have with a Convocation, of this Province at least, and two without that, or any Other Assembly, that I know of, to wait upon it.

The 9th of May, according to its Adjournment, the Parliament met again; and sate till the Eve of Whitsunday, May the 28th. For the Sake of that Festival, it had another short Prorogation to June the 6th: When Assembling again it Continued till the 18th of July; and then was prorogued yet Once more to the 23^d of January after. To make an End of this Long Parliament; On January the 23^d, it began its last Session: It sate till the 14th of March; and then was Dissolved.

These were the three last Sessions of this Parliament; let us see how the Convocations this Year Attended upon Them. With the First, and Second, in May, and June; No Convocation at all was Called, or Sate in either Province. With the last of all, there was a double Convocation; such a Happy Concurrence as we have not yet once met with in all the 14 Years of this Reign. To give therefore some Account of it, I must observe, that when the last Convocation had Granted its Subsidy, tho' the Parliament still sate on, yet that Assembly was unfortunately Dissolved; and thereby intirely broken off from all Dependence upon; or Relation, to this Parliament. Two Sessions pass'd, and no Convocation in being: At last the King, toward the End of this Year, by his Writ ordered another to be called; and the Archbishop Summon'd it accordingly to St. Pauls London, February the 9th. It sate to the 15th of March, a day after the Parliament, and Granted a Charitable Subsidy to the Archbishop. Whether it gave any thing at that time to the King I cannot tell: The Antiqu. Brit. tell us that it did. But having several Accounts of this Aid to the Archbishop, without any notice taken of any Other that was then Granted by the Clergy, I must beg leave, till I meet with some proof of it, to suspend my Belief in that Particular.

By the same Writ by which our Convocation was held February the 9th, that of York met February the 6th. The Clergy there granted two intire Tenths to the King; and thereby sufficiently assure us, that as we hear of no Convocation

K. EDWARD in their Province held with all this long Parliament, so neither was any before Assembled: There being no other account to be given of such an unusual Liberality from them Now, but that they were run so far behind hand with the Other Province; and therefore were prevailed with, once for all, at the End of this Parliament, to make up for their defect in not Meeting, or (to be sure) not Granting any thing before.

The next Year another Convocation is mentioned in 'One of the Registers of the Church of Canterbury to have begun the 23d of January 1475, and to have ended the 25th of February following: Which is all I know of it; if yet there was any such meeting at all held this Year.

The Year following I find no Mention either of Parliament or Convocation. Indeed the Antiq. Brit. place the Pope's demand of a Tenth for his Expedition to the Holy Land in this Year: But that in this there must have been an Error as to the time, the Account which has before been Given of that Transaction AO. 1464, sufficiently evinces.

The Year after, ² a Convocation was called to sit at York, October the 21st: And in January following a ³ Parliament was held at Westminster. In the Other Province no Convocation met till April following; So that here again the Parliament fate without any Assembly of the Clergy concurrent with it. The One of the Convocations rose above two Months before it met; the Other was not held till as many after it was Dissolved.

To proceed therefore to the next Year 1478. ⁴ The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury met, as I have said, at St. Pauls London, April the 10th; and fate till the 7th of May. It granted a Tenth to the King; and so was prorogued to the 25th of May; then it continued from day to day to the 26th of June 1479: if my [†] Information deceive me not. By what Authority this Convocation was called, I cannot tell: But by a ⁵ Writ dated September the 13th, Anno Edwardi 4. xviii, an Assembly of the Clergy was Ordered to be held in the Other Province on the Eve of St. Simon and Jude, October the 27th. The Clergy being met, agreed to a Subsidy of Half a Tenth, but went no farther, notwithstanding the Example Our Province had set them the Spring before. ⁶ The King being desirous that they should come up to the full Proportion of what the Others had done, Called them again together, by new Writs dated December the 6th; They met on the Wednesday after Valentine, February the 18th: And consented to another half Tenth, and so were dismissed.

The next Year affords us no Assembly of the Clergy either in Parliament, or Convocation.

Towards the latter End of the Year following 1480. The King issued out his ⁷ Writ to the Archbishop of Canterbury dated February the 1st, to Call together the Clergy of his Province with all convenient Speed. In pursuance of this Order they were appointed to meet at St. Pauls London, March the 23d. But little was done besides opening the Synod this Year; the Prolocutor not being presented, till Munday March the 26th; the beginning of the Next.

On ⁸ that day two things there are which ought to be taken notice of; first that the Archbishop constituted all his Suffragans his Commissioners "ad Continuum" Convocationem in Absentia sua. And next that the Kings Commissioners being come, after the Usual manner, to the Synod, demanded a Notable Subsidy of them; which being a General demand, the Clergy requested that the Archbishop, and his Brethren, would wait upon the King at the Tower, to know his mind more clearly in that respect.

The 3d of April, the Prolocutor, in the Name of the Clergy, Granted a Tenth to the King, and a Charitable Subsidy to the Archbishop; and at the same time presented two Cedules; In the One a Petition, that by the Intercession of the Archbishop the Ecclesiastical Liberty might be defended against the Injuries of the Laity: In the Other, a Request relating to the Institution and Observation of some Festivals therein mentioned.

But there was another thing transacted in this Synod which must not be overlook'd. On the 9th of April, the Pope's Collector came to it, and ask'd, in his Name, an Aid against the Turks, who were then invading of Rhodes. To elude this demand, They agreed that the time of Easter drawing on, at which the Clergy could not be absent from their Cures, the Archbishop with Six Bishops, Six Abbots, and as many Other Prelats; Three Deans, Six Archdeacons, and Six Proctors of the Clergy to be named by the Archbishop, should meet upon some certain day before Whitsuntide, to conclude upon such a Subsidy as had been required of Them.

Proctors

The Synod being dissolved April the xvth, the Archbishop nominated the Persons, as it had been resolved, and appointed the 5th of June for their Assembling. Nothing being then done, the Committee was adjourn'd from time to time; first to November; then to May the next Year: After that to November following; and finally to the next Convocation. Thus was the design frustrated, and as One of our best Authors expresses it, Inanem, & dignum Papali Commento Exitum (res) fortita (est).

Dr. A. in his 2 Additions, pretends to Give an exact and full account of this Committee. He takes notice, in the first place, of the Authority by which they were Cited, "Auctoritate Convocationis prædictæ, and in that I agree with Him. The Archbishop had no Authority to Appoint a Committee to Give away the Clergies Money, without their Own Consent: All I desire is that He would not carry the Application to Other matters, in which the Archbishops then had, and the King now has, by his Ecclesiastical Supremacy, Authority to Appoint such Committees; nor infer that all such Committees, which we afterwards read of, must needs have sate by the like Authority of the Convocation. 3 "He tells us "that being assembled (June the 5th) they were for want of a full Number adjourn'd to June 12th: and that then being full, they did Business, and came to a Resolution of not answering the Pope's Demands without the Kings Consent first obtain'd. But in this He will give me leave to Correct his haste. The Committee 4 first met by the Archbishops appointment, on Tuesday June the 5th. Being not a full Number the Archbishop continued the meeting to the next day. The next day, the Archbishop being absent, the Bishop of London continued them again to Friday June the 8th. And from thence to the 7th of November following. On the 7th of November they were again Adjourn'd to the 12th: and then upon the debate it was alledged how the Clergy were too much impoverish'd, and aggrieved, in those days: That in such a Case as this, nothing ought to be Granted, without the Kings Consent first obtain'd: Which Communication being had, the Affair was adjourned to the Munday following; and so on. Their Conference was at their Meeting in November, not in June; and then the two Reasons before mentioned were alledged, among Other Considerations, against the Grant which had been demanded. But it do's not appear that they came to any Resolution thereupon; but on the Contrary, They Adjourn'd the farther debate of this Matter to the Munday after: An intimation, at least, that they had not yet resolved upon any Thing.

Such was the issue of our Convocation: By another 5 Writ from the King of the 13th of September, the Archbishop of York Assembled his Clergy, as the Archbishop of Canterbury had done His the Spring before. They met the 29th of October; Granted a Tenth to the King, and a Charitable Subsidy to their Archbishop, and so were Dissolved.

In this whole Year the Parliament never met, tho' Both the Convocations did: The Year following we shall find that to have Assembled, and no Convocation to have met with it. It began to sit 6 January the xxth. 7 On the 15th of February it Granted the King a Subsidy, and then, as I conceive, was Dissolved.

A Fortnight after this Parliament began, the King sent out his 8 Writ to the Archbishop of Canterbury, dated February the 3d, to Summon the Convocation of his Province. 9 The Archbishop Obey'd, and appointed it to meet April the xviii after. All things were prepared for the Meeting of this Assembly. The Archbishop had issued out his Mandate to the Bishop of London; the Bishop had sent out his to the Provincial Bishops: They had directed theirs to their Clergy: The Elections were made, and Certificates return'd thereupon. But the King dyed April the 9th: And therefore, as I conceive, it either met not; or if it did, it entred not on any Business; for I have not found in our Registers any other accounts of it.

This last Parliament 10 Dr. A. I know not why, places in the Year 1433. and to prove the Convocation to be a meeting Co-incident with the Parliament, alledges this passage from the Continuer of the Annals of Croyland, as little to the Purpose as any thing could well have been imagined. "In his Account (says "He) of Edward the ivth's last Parliament He tells Us, that the King nihil à Com-

K. But shall I take the liberty to tell Dr. A. that He neither gives a fair representation of this passage; nor can He argue any thing pertinently to his Purpose from it. The King having call'd his Parliament, VOCATO PARLIAMENTO, says the Historian, did not think fit to ask any thing yet of of the Lay Commons; but Erga PRÆLATOS necessitates suas non dissimulat, but acquainted (he do's not say the CLERGY, but the) PRELATS, who were then present at the Parliament (which the Clergy were not) with his Necessities: Requiring gently of Them, præ manibus, the Tenths, quæ proximo concedentur; which should next be Granted; viz. in the Convocation which by his Writ, issued out about the Middle of this Parliament, He had Ordered to be Summon'd. As if, says the Historian, the Prelats and Clergy being once come together in their Convocation, whatsoever the King asks, ought forthwith to be done by them. The plain meaning of which is this; The King would have had the Prelats to have promised a present payment to Him of the Tenths, which he concluded would be granted in the Convocation now called; Not doubting but that as soon as ever they met, they would Give whatsoever He should demand of them. The King therefore treated not with the Convocation Clergy, as Dr. A. represents it; but with the Parliamentary Prelats; who alone were at that time present to be treated with; And that about the advance of the Subsidy which should afterwards be Given in the Convocation, already called, but not to sit till above two Months after.*

Decimas quæ proximo concedentur; quasi semel Comparantibus Prelatis & Clero in Eorum Convocatione, quicquid Rex petit, id fieri debeat. Hist. Groyland. Contin. p. 563.

Now this renders his instance utterly impertinent to the proof of a Concurrence in point of time, between that Parliament and that Convocation. And the Account before Given shews yet more the insignificancy of it: It being certain, that if the Convocation that Year sate at all, it must have been so far from being Coincident with the Parliament, or Attendant upon it; that It could not have Assembled till above Two Months after the Parliament must have been Dissolved.

Such an Unfortunate Choice has Dr. A. made to Close up his Induction in proof of that, which I have from more than an Hundred Instances proved to be absolutely false. As for the Clergy of York they were not yet Summon'd, when the King dyed; so that that Province Assembled not at all at this Time.

King EDWARD the Vth.

¹ Registr. iv. Arch. Cant. fol. 175. b. King Edward the Fourth being dead the month before, ² on the 13th of May, Writs were sent out in the New Kings Name for a Parliament to meet June the 25th. But before that time came, the short Reign of that injured Prince was at an End; and so the Parliament fell with it.

King RICHARD the III.

¹ Registr. iv. Arch. Cant. fol. 176. b. King Richard the 3d came to the Crown, June the 22d. On ³ the 22d of September New Writs were sent out for a Parliament to meet November the 6th: But that, as I conceive, never sate. For on the ⁴ 9th of December another Parliament was called to meet January the 23d following; and sate according to its Summons. The same Month a Writ was also directed to the Archbishop of Canterbury for the Assembling of the Convocation of his Province: ⁵ Which accordingly was held February the 3d; and continued to the 24th of the same Month. It granted a larger Subsidy than Ordinary to the King; ⁶ and in recompence thereof, the King by his Charter dated the day before they Rose, confirm'd their Liberties, according to the Supplication of the Clergy presented to Him on that behalf.

⁷ Registr. Alcock. ib. fol. 84r. The Liberality of the Clergy the last Year, prompted the King to make a new Experiment of their Bounty the next following. On the 7th of December He again issued out his ⁷ Writ to the Archbishop of Canterbury to Call those of his

Pro-

Province together. The Archbishop Assembled them, February the 10th: where K. HENRY the VIIth. being met, they granted to the King another Subsidy; and at the same time presented the Archbishop with a Charitable Aid; as it was now become the Custom for them frequently to do. Besides this some Ordinances were made in this Convocation:² That no Sæcular Officer should Arrest, or cause to be Arrested, any Spiritual Person under Pain of Excommunication; and concerning the Habit of Clerks; with which Our Argument is not concern'd. Ibid. fol. 144. 146. Ibid. fol. 147.

What the Province of York did during this Reign, I cannot tell. This second Year no Parliament, I suppose, met; at least it do's not appear either by the Records, or Registers, which I have search'd, that any did.

And now to put together, in short, what has been said of these Three Reigns, during the space of about four and twenty Years. Of Fifteen Parliaments, or Sessions of Parliament, which fate within this time; Eleven there were without any Convocation Concurrent with them, or, as 'tis now called, Attending upon them, in either Province. Of the other Four, Three had only One Convocation, as far as yet appears, held within any part of the Session with them. Once only in all this Period did the Parliament and Convocations happen to meet all at the same time: A thing very necessary to be observed, least some future Politician should Reverse the Doctrine of Attendance, and Affirm (He might much more rationally do so) that the latter practice of Calling the Convocations at the same time with the Parliament, is a Violation of our Antient Constitution; Inconvenient to the public business, in which the Bishops are engaged in Parliament; and contrary to their first practice, to which therefore they ought to be Reduced.

King HENRY the VIIth.

We are now come to the Reign of a Wise Prince; whose Government was steady, who understood well both his Power and his Interest; and from whose Conduct therefore we may take the best prospect, of what was then at least accounted, the Right of the Church, and the Prerogative of the Crown, in this Particular. He began his Reign August the 22d. 1485. On the 15th of the next Month he issued out his Writs for the Parliament to sit the 7th of November following. It met, and continued to the 10th of December, and was then prorogued to January the 23d: Before which time, I suppose, it was altogether Dissolved. Sect. 59. 1485. Dugd. Summ. monit. Parl. pag. 476.

With this Parliament the Antiq. Brit. not only speak of a Synods meeting, but of its Voluntary giving a Tenth to the King. Authority for this there is none offer'd; and I have so many Reasons against it, as satisfy me that in this that Author, however accurate in Other matters, did fortune to be mistaken.

To begin with that, which I confess weighs more than all with me, the silence of our Registers in this Particular; which give Us such full and distinct Accounts of the other Convocations, which immediately precede, and follow, this supposed Assembly. Of the Synods of the next Year; The Registers of York and Durham in the Other Province; Of Canterbury, Winchester, Eli, Worcester, Chichester, in this; and possibly many Others, were they look'd into, particularly take notice. How can we think that every One of these should have been silent, had any such Synod, as is now pretended, been held in this? Where no Authority at all is offer'd on the One Hand, and such a fair Presumption lies against it on the Other, even this one Consideration must I think be allow'd its force, till something be produced to prove the Contrary.

Let me to this add, that the King neither when he Called, or Held his Parliament, had any thought of asking any Subsidy of his People. Now, let Dr. A. say what he pleases, certain it is that the General design which our Princes had in desiring the Archbishops to Call their Clergy to Convocation, was to obtain some Aid of them: Which seeing this Politic Prince at this time resolved not to demand, neither is it reasonable to think that he would give them the trouble of coming Unnecessarily together. The next Year He wanted their Assistance, and therefore then we see they met; and then our Records sufficiently tell us what they did, and wherefore they were assembled.

K. HENRY

the VIIth.

pag. 296.

Shall I without being being thought too free with an Excellent History, add, that in this part of the Relation, his Learned Author of it, fails much in that Exactness which he is elsewhere so particularly to be valued for. Let us hear his Account of the first beginnings of this Reign. "Richard the third, in the third Year of his Usurped Reign was the 11 of the Kal. of September, both overcome and slain by Henry Earl of Richmond. Henry having thus gotten the Government, contracted Marriage with the Lady Elizabeth, the Eldest Daughter of King Edward the 4th. The Archbishop of Canterbury married Them; and a little after Crown'd and Consecrated Both of Them at Westminster: Him King of England, by the Name of Henry the viith; Her Queen, the last of October. After this the King held his Parliament at Westminster; the Archbishop his Synod at London.

It is easie to see, at the very first View, what a strange Confusion of time, and what a Mistake of History there is in this short Narrative. The Archbishop, says our Author, first married Them, then a little after Crown'd and Consecrated Them Both at Westminster. But on the Contrary, the King was Crown'd, October the 30th: He was not married till the 18th of January after; And the Queen was not Crown'd till the 25th of November 1487, when that Archbishop was in his Grave; and another sitting at Canterbury, and employ'd in that office by the King. At such a Distance were they Crown'd and Consecrated from one another: Two Years interven'd; whilst this History represents both to have been Crown'd, and that together, in 1485. "After this the King held his Parliament at Westminster. That is after his Marriage; and his Own and the Queens Coronation. Whereas his Parliament was held November the 7th: His Marriage was not solemnized till January following; and the Queens Coronation was not till November two Years after the Parliament began.

Amidst so many Mistakes in this very part of the History, we may well allow for One more: At least I must beg leave to believe that with this first Parliament no Convocation sate in either Province; till from some Good Record, which may be depended upon, it shall be shewn that One or Both the Synods of the two Provinces were Assembled.

In the mean time, it is not improvable that the Mistake might arise from hence: In February 1484, a Convocation was held, and a Tenth therein Granted to the King. ² The limitation of the Grant was this, that One half should be paid at Midsummer 1485: The other the Year following, at Midsummer 1446. It was but a little while after the first of these Terms that King Richard was slain; and that, most likely, before the payment, then due, was made. The Clergy therefore were indebted a Tenth to the Crown, when King Henry the viith came to it. If either the King required the payment of it, as 'tis probable He did; Or the Clergy to ingratiate themselves with Him agreed to pay it, the Error may easily consist in this, that our Author finding some Writs, or Commissions, dated after this first Parliament, for Collecting a Tenth upon the Clergy; apply'd that to a Synod held with this Parliament of K. Henry, which had been Granted by the Convocation called by the Order of K. Richard the iiii the Spring before.

But what we cannot find in this Year, the next will supply us with: For ³ on the 16th of December, Regni 2do, the King issued out his Writs to both the Archbishops to Assemble the Clergy of their respective Provinces at such place as they thought fit; and at such time too, only with all Convenient Speed. The Archbishop of Canterbury first Obey'd; and Ordered his Convocation to meet ⁴ February the xiiiith: When being accordingly Assembled, the King by his Commissioners Declared his Needs to Them. They made such Good dispatch as to agree upon their Grant before the 26th of the same Month; not only for the King, but for the Archbishop too: Which being done, and Three Ecclesiastical Constitutions pass'd, One concerning Masses and Obsequies for Bishops deceased; another for the Feast of the Transfiguration of our Lord; and a Third, Concerning the Habits of Clergy Men; the Assembly was Dissolved.

⁵ On Munday the 19th of February the Convocation of the Other Province began: It Granted in like manner, a Tenth to the King; and so was Dismissed.

The Year following, ⁶ by Writs dated the first of September Regni tertio, the King summon'd his Parliament to meet at Westminster, the 9th of November 1487. But this whole Year no Convocation at all was held: The Grants which the Clergy made in their Convocations the Year before not being yet Expired. K. HENRY

the VIIth.

The next Year the King called another Parliament by Writs dated at Westminster November the 19th, to meet at the same Place the xliith of January following. Being met at the day appointed, it sate to the 23d of February, and was then prorogued only to the 14th of October the next Year. ² On the very same day that these Writs were sent out for the Holding of this Parliament, Others were issued to the Archbishops for the Calling of their Convocations. The Archbishop of Canterbury assign'd, January the 14th, the day after the Parliament began, for the Opening of his Convocation; and continued it to the 27th of the Next Month, four days after the Parliament was Prorogued. 1488.

The Clergy being Assembled January the 14th; On the 19th the Kings Commissioners were sent to them to tell them that the King partly at the special request of the Commons in Parliament; partly, and chiefly, to prevent the dangers which Threatned him from the French King, did desire their Aid, and Help. ³ This they renew'd at a second Coming, January the 30th. The Clergy granted an Aid of 25000*l* to the King, and two Subsidies to the Archbishop, and so were dismissed. Ibid. fol. 43.

It is an Odious thing not only to Censure, but needlessly to remark the slips of Learned and Judicious Men: Nor should I yet this Once take notice of the unaccurate Account, in point of time, which is Given of these last Convocations in the same Excellent Work I before mentioned, but only to shew, that how justly soever we value it, yet it is not to be look'd upon as a Record; nor its sole Authority to be urged as a sufficient Argument in these Matters, where there are not some Concurrent Circumstances to Confirm it to Us. On the 6th of October Archbishop Morton was translated from Eli to Canterbury. "The first Year of his Translation, say the Antiquities, He held his Synod at London: And that (as the note in the Margin shews) Anno 1486. They are therein right both as to the Year of our Lord, and to that of the Archbishop. Indeed in the next page, the same Synod is placed under the Year 1487: But neither do's that alter the Case; it being held in February, according to One Computation 1486; to the other 1487.

"The beginning of the next Year, the Convocation again began: and Grant- ed to the King 25000*l*. to be paid the same Year. The Summ here mentioned plainly shews that this must have been the Convocation I just now spake of. The Circumstances of its being held the Beginning of the Year; and of paying the 25000*l*. the SAME YEAR, oblige us to date the Chronology of this Author from Christmas. Now according to this, the former Synod must have been Assembled February the 13th, 1487: This Latter January the 14th 1489: In either way it must have met, not as this Author reports it, Initio proximi Anni; but a whole Year after: Not as He places it, Anno 1488, according to his Computation; but as it is plain from the Archbishops, and other Registers, Anno 1489. If such a Mistake occurs in the Year of a Synod, where the Archbishops Register lay plain before Him; we may reasonably suppose, the like Error of a Year may have happened, where no Authority at all is referr'd to; and I much question whether there be any to be found for it. This is all the Use I would make of the present remark, and all that I design'd in taking Notice of this Mistake.

To return to the History of this Year: The Convocation of the Other Province summon'd at the same time by the Kings Writ, met not long after Ours, January the 27th: It granted to the King Two intire Tenths; and that as appears by the Certificatory made of it, as well upon the Opinion of the Parliament which met at the same time with it, as at the Kings request to them so to do. Registr.
298, 300.

But the Province of York had other business to do; and it took the antient Method of doing of it. For this, the Archbishop Assembled, not a Convocation, but a Provincial Council, February the 27th, and therein passed his Constitutions for the Feast of the Transfiguration to be held August the 6th: The Feast of the Name of Jesus, August the 7th: The Feast of the Dedication of all and singular Churches at one and the same time, the Sunday after St. Paul; and the Feast of St. Cedde, the second day of March. Ibid. fol 245.

Thus pass'd this Year, favourable if any Other to Dr. A's Hypothesis; as having a Parliament, and the two Convocations, All held at the same time. The next Year the Parliament met, pursuant to its Prorogation, October the 14th. It Sect. 61.

With this Parliament no Convocation was held. The Clergy the Year before had not only Granted to the King 25000 l. (which in the Instrument of their Concession they compute at more than two ¹ Tenths of the Province) but had by another Instrument made a farther Provision for the same to be levy'd a second Year, if the War then began, should so long Continue. There was therefore no need, to Call the Clergy again together for another supply at that time: And this being the only Reason the King had for their Assembling, we find that accordingly they were not Summon'd; tho' the Parliament in the mean time met twice; and fate, in the whole, between four and five Months. So little did that wise Prince know of this new pretence of Parliamentary Attendance, Or the Clergy care for it; that the One provided for two Years tax together to avoid it; and the Other being supplied effectually by them, gave them no trouble in that particular.

No sooner were the two Years of the Subsidy, which they hand granted, Expired, but to convince Us the more effectually that that was the Use which the King had to make of their Assembling, and the End of his Calling of them; without any regard to his Parliament, He presently Order'd the Archbishop to Summon them again. The ² Kings Writ to the Archbishop of Canterbury was dated May the 9th Regni Sexto. The Archbishop appointed June the xxist for the Meeting of Our Convocation; which assembled that day accordingly: But the Clergy had given too much before to be easily induced to Grant any thing more at this time. ³ The Archbishop therefore was forced to Prorogue them from time to time, till the 8th of November following; when they agreed to the Grant of One Tenth, and so were dismissed.

By this Backwardness of the Clergy to make any new Grant so soon after those they had before consented to, and the necessary Prorogations consequent thereupon; not by Any Design of the King or the Archbishop; they fortun'd to sit, four Months after their first Assembling, with the ⁴ Parliament which was held the 17th of October, and continued till the 4th of November following. For farther proof of which, if in so clear a Case there be need of any, let it be consider'd, that all this while neither with this Convocation, nor Parliament, was any Synod Summon'd, or Held in the Other Province; as supposing the Present Opinion of Dr. A. concerning the Necessary Connexion between our Parliaments and Convocations to be true, there ought to have been.

The Parliament being Prorogued to January the 26th, and the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, Dissolved; on the 12th of January, above two Months after the first Session, and but a Fortnight before the Second, ⁵ the King issued out his Writ to the Archbishop of York to assemble that of the Other. The Archbishop Obey'd, and fix'd upon a time so far distant, that He might reasonably have supposed the Parliament would have been risen, before the day prefixed by Him should come; and have left Him at Liberty, to be present, with his Suffragans at it. The day appointed was ⁶ the 1st of March; when being Assembled, they Agreed to the Concession of one intire Tenth, as the Other Province had done before. But the Parliament lasted longer than this; it continued till the 5th of March: And so gave Opportunity to the Convocation of York, which met not at All with the former Session, to keep it company for 5 Days at the End of the Latter. If Dr. A. thinks this to be a Sufficient Attendance, his doctrine will be the more easie to the Clergy to comply withal: But then he must remember, that now the Other Province met not during this Session; as that of York had not met with the foregoing. The truth is, it was by meer chance that either of the Convocations fate at all with the Parliament: The King never design'd it; nor did the Archbishops in the least shew any regard to it.

King Henry having thus for some Years burden'd both the Clergy and Laity with his Impositions, now Gave a pretty long Respite to both. He held not his next Parliament till the 14th of October, in the 11th Year of his Reign: Nor did He till then Assemble any Convocation of the Clergy; as from the Course of our Registers, but especially that exact one of Alcock, Bishop of Eli, do's evidently Appear.

In this Parliament a notable Affair was transacted, of which I shall give a short account from the Rolls of it. Among the other Articles of the Peace concluded between between King Henry and the King of France, One was this; that "Both Princes H. HENRY the VIIth.

 " should Cause the Several Heads agreed upon between Themselves, " per " TRES STATUS Utriusq; Regnorum Anglia & Francia, rite debiteq; Convocatos, Rot. Parl. 11. Henr. vii. num. 40.
 " Viz. per Prelatos & Clerum, Nobiles, & Communitatem Eorundem Regno-" rum, Ratificari, Approbari, & Confirmari. To this the Parliament being Assembled, agreed; and the resolution is thus Enter'd, "Nos prædicta capitula
 " la Observare, &c. volentes, &c. That the King desiring to Observe the Ar" ticles aforesaid, had with the Advice, Assent, and Consent of the LORDS SPI-" RITUAL, and TEMPORAL, and COMMONS "hujus Regni nostri Anglia, says the " King, in the Present Parliament Assembled; and by the Authority of the " same Parliament, thought fit to Approve, &c. of Them.

The form of the Confirmation thus resolved upon, runs thus: "Nos autem " omnia & singula, &c. We—by the Authority of our present Parliament, by " the Advice, and Assent, of the LORDS SPIRITUAL and TEMPORAL, and COM-" MONS of our Realm of England Assembled in the same Parliament, Accept, Ap" prove, &c. all and singular the Heads aforesaid; and have caused the same to " be Accepted, Approved, Ratified, and Confirmed, per TRES STATUS Regni
 " nostri, rite & debite Convocatos; Viz; per Prelatos & Clerum; Nobiles; &
 " Communitatem Eiusdem Regni.

There can nothing, I think, be more plain than that all this affair was transacted by the King, and THREE ESTATES of the REALM Assembled in Parliament: And who they were that now represented them there we are more than Once told in this Recital; namely, The LORDS SPIRITUAL and TEMPORAL, and COMMONS. They agreed that the Treaty should be Ratified in Parliament. They joyn'd with the King in the Ratification of it: And what was Ratified by the King and Them, was declared to be done by the Three Estates of the Realm duly Summon'd; The Prelats and Clergy, Nobles and Commons. The Clergy were duly Summon'd, as well as the Prelats. Had they continued to come to Parliament, as Once they did, they would have also joyn'd with the Prelats in this Great Affair. But not appearing according to their Summons, the Prelats, who were there present, acted alone as the Estate of the Clergy; and did not (according to Dr. A's vain fancy, and Pretensions) Call in the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury to Act, either as an Extrinsecal, or Intrinsecal; an Essential, or Non-Essential part of that State with Them. Yet in this Very Parliament the Premunitory Clause was Executed by the Bishops of Winchester and Worcester; and might possibly be so by several Others, were a more diligent Search made, than I have had the Opportunity of making, after it.

The King having thus Summon'd this Parliament, issued out his ² Writ August Registr. Alcock Eliens. fol. 219.
 the 12th to the Archbishop of Canterbury to assemble his Convocation. The Archbishop appointed the 19th of October for the holding of it; five days after the Registr. Langton. Win- ton. fol. 57.

 a Tenth to the King. This would have been a Happy Conjunction had but the Other Province been Summon'd at the same time. But the Kings Omission of that till after the Parliament was Dissolved utterly spoils the Hypothesis; and proves the Concurrence of our Convocation with the Parliament, to have been only a matter of prudential Choice in the Archbishop, whom the King left to his Liberty; and who therefore might as well have Called it, had he been so minded, a Month before the Parliament met, as during the Session of it.

 on the Munday after Ascension-Day; May the xvith. They Granted a Tenth, as for other Purposes, so especially for the Defence of the Marches of Scotland, in which that Province was so nearly concern'd.

Towards ⁵ the End of the Year on the 16th of January, the Parliament sate: Registr. Langton. Win- ton. fol. 63. &c. 1497.
⁶ The Convocation of our Province again Assembled with it January the 23d, and continued till the 11th of March after. It made a large Concession of 40000 l. amounting to between three and four Tenths upon the Clergy of the Province.

But here again the Other Province held back; and was neither Summon'd, nor sate, in due time. It was the 3d of March before the King issued forth his Writ Registr. Fox. Danelm. fol. 14.
 to the Archbishop to Call it: It sate not till the 26th of April; that is till above three Months after the Parliament, and the Other Convocation, began. ⁸ It grant-that the King did either in Person, or by his Lieutenant, March against the Scots, before the first of November next ensuing.

After such an Unpresidented, extensive Grant, of three Tenths made at one time; We ought not to wonder if we do not presently hear of any more Parliaments, or any more Convocations. Yet the latter of these met a Year or two before the former, upon an Occasion which I must here give some short account of.

Pope Alexander the sixth having imposed a Tax of a full Tenth upon the whole Christian Church in defence of the Catholic Faith, against the Turks, sent his Bull hither for the Assessing and Collecting of it. The King being unwilling to give Countenance to such a Precedent, prevailed with the Pope to withdraw his Bull, and to leave the management of that Affair to Him. To raise this Subsidy, the King issued out his Writs of the 4th of December to both the Archbishops in which he makes this recital, and commands them to Call their several Convocations, and to recommend the Granting of such an Aid, as was desired, to their Clergy. The Archbishop of Canterbury Summon'd his Convocation to appear before him February the 14th: It continued till May, and then Consented to a Subsidy of 13000 l. which was somewhat more than One Tenth. But the Province of York did not so soon agree upon their Part. They met in pursuance of the same Writ from the King by the Archbishops Mandate 3 February the 21st. But they were continued till the 15th of October the Year following; and then granted One Tenth, "ad tuitionem & defensionem Christianæ Religionis contra perfdum Turcam.

These last Years the King Assembled the Clergy for the Pope's Advantage: He now Summon'd both his Parliament, and the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, for his Own. And first by his Writs dated November the 3d, He appointed his Parliament to meet at Westminster the 25th of January following.
Then by another 5 Writ to the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, January the 22d; (but three days before the Parliament met) He Ordered the Assembling of the Convocation of that Province. The Archbishop appointed February the 16th for the Holding of it. What else was done in this Convocation I cannot tell: 6 This One thing must not be omitted, that by the solemn Act and order of the Synod, it was Constituted, Decreed and Granted, "that for certain Causes and Considerations them thereunto moving, the King in every Principal Mass at the High Altar in all the Cathedral, Regular, and Collegiate Churches of the Realm, Exempt and not exempt, where there were above xiii Clerks; shall He have a part in All their Prayers, and Suffrages, both for his Safety and Prosperity while he lives, and for his Happiness in the Other World, after he shall depart this Life.

How long the Parliament sat I cannot tell: The Convocation continued till May the 18th, and then was Dissolved. It is not improbable but that here again these two Assemblies sat for some time together; tho' the Kings Writ came out so late that they could not have any long Concurrence of Session with one Another. But then the same misfortune again Returns here, that we have seen in former Years: The Province of York not only sat not all this while, but was not so much as Summon'd to meet, as I come now more particularly to shew.

7 Registr.
Savage. fol. 52.

The Clergy of Canterbury continued their Sessions till the 18th of May, 1504.
By a 7 Writ to the Archbishop, dated 4 days after May the 22d; the King commanded the Convocation of York to be Assembled. It met the Munday after the Feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, August the 5th: and granted One intire Tenth to the King. They then made the like Order for the intituling of the King to a part in their Prayers, and Suffrages that the Other Province had done, and so were Dismissed.

From this time I meet with no more State Conventions either of the Clergy, or Laity, during this Reign. About 4 Years after, the Archbishop of York held his Provincial Council at York, February the 7th. He summon'd it by his Own Authority, and held it wholly for Church purposes; so that this Assembly has only the Name of a Convocation, but was indeed a proper Ecclesiastical Synod.

Here then we have the Result of this Reign; and such an Account as seem'd Necessary to our present Purpose of the Assemblies of the Church during the whole Course of it. The Summ is in short this; That of Ten Sessions of Parliament, which were held under this King, four met without any Convocation in either Province Concurrent with them. Of two Others, the Convocation met, in one but just before the Parliament rose; with the other it sate by meer chance, upon a Prorogation with it, after having been begun by its self several Months before the Parliament was Assembled. With three Parliaments, the Convocation of One Province alone was held: With One only, during this whole Reign, did Dr. A's Rule and Law of our Constitution prevail; Anno 1488: The Single time that the Parliament, and Convocations truly Met together. For this (to say nothing of the Provincial Council held by the Archbishop of York, Anno 1508) the King required, and the Archbishop held Eight several Convocations, when no Parliament was Sitting; so that hitherto I think the Prerogative of the Crown, and the Independence of these Assemblies upon One Another is not to be doubted of.

Let us see how it continued during the First Five and twenty Years of his Son;

King HENRY the VIIIth.

King Henry the vijth being dead the beginning of the Year, on the 17th of October the Young King issued out his Writs for a Parliament to meet January the xxist. He followed the Pattern which his Father had set him; and called it for Other State Ends, not to charge his Subjects with a needless Burden at his first Entrance upon the Government. For this Cause he Assembled not the Clergy in Convocation: Which in One of the Provinces met not at all; in the Other Sate indeed, but by the Archbishops Mandate, not by the Kings Writ; as a Provincial Council, not a State Convocation.

Now this Dr. A. himself allows, and therefore ought not to except against my Representation of it. And tho' from the time, and manner of the Archbishops Summons; and the Declaration of the Clergy in their Submission to this King, which I shall hereafter speak of, I was once of an Opinion that the Archbishop did not do this without the Kings Order, if without his Writ: Yet not finding any Subsidy granted by them to the King; nor any other Use made by him of their Assembling; nor being able, after a diligent Search, to discover the least footsteps of any such Order or Writ; Or that any the like Meeting of the Clergy was held in the Other Province either in this, or in the following Year; I am apt to think that this Synod was truly Called by the sole Authority of the Arch-Bishop; to promote the Interest of the Church in the Parliament which was then to Sit; or, at least, to prevent any Prejudices from being done to it, by any Attempts of the Laity, in the beginnings of the Reign of a Young and Unexperienced Prince.

Be this matter as it will (for I prescribe not to any Ones Judgment;) By the Archbishops Authority we are sure, if not by the Kings, the Clergy were Assembled January the 26th; within five days after the Parliament began, and so continued to sit on with it. In favour of this Meeting, the first day on which it began the Lord Treasurer, by the Kings Order, Adjourn'd the House of Lords from Saturday to the Munday following, because the Chancellor, and other Spiritual Lords, were Absent, and Engaged in Convocation. This was Repeated four times afterwards during this Session: And it is the first Parliament in which either the Rolls, or Journals, afford the least footsteps of any such Practise.

Ann.

The next Parliament of this Reign, was ' Summon'd in November, and ſate February the 4th. 1511. It continued to the firſt of April following; and was then prorogued to the 4th of November after. In this, as in the following Parliaments, the Custom was continued of Adjourning the Lords on ſuch days as the Bishops and Prelats were to be abſent in Convocation; and was five ſeveral times practiſed in this Session.

² On the 28th of November, the King order'd his Writ to the Archbishop of Canterbury to Call the Convocation of his Province with all Convenient Speed. He Summon'd it accordingly to meet at St. Pauls London, February the 6th; two days after the Parliament began. Being thus Aſſembled it continued by ſeveral

With this laſt Session of this Convocation, the Parliament, prorogued, as I have before ſaid, to November the 4th, again ſate: So that here all went as exactly on this Side, as Dr. A. himſelf Could Wiſh. But the Clergy of York were not ſo well inſtructed in this Doctrin of Attendance as They ought to have been. The King ſent his ⁶ Writ to the Guardian of the Spiritualties to Aſſemble the Convocation of that Province, at the ſame Time that He did to the Archbishop of Canterbury to Call together the Clergy of Ours. Yet ⁷ it met not till the 26th of April; above three Weeks after the Parliament was riſen. The Clergy there, granted two Whole Tenths; the proportion of the Subſidy Given by our Convocation.

Thus did that Synod begin and End when no Parliament was Aſſembled: Nor did it do any better the next Session: ⁸ It met not till the 17th of January, a Month after the Parliament was diſmiſſed; and ſitting till the fourth of February ⁹ Granted One Other Tenth; The half only of the Additional Subſidy preſcribed to it by the Example of our Province. So that in theſe two Sessions however the Province of Canterbury, not by any direction from the King, or Necceſſity of our Conſtitution; (for the Province of York had the ſame Writ from the One, and lay under the ſame Obligation to the Other) but meerly by the Prudential Choice of the Archbiſhop, and for the viſible Convenience of the thing its ſelf, met together with the Parliament: Yet by the ſame Choice and Authority of the Other Archbiſhop, and for the ſame Obvious Convenience of that Province, the Clergy of York were not Aſſembled with Either of them; and thereby clearly ſhew Us that it was by their Own Will, not in Attendance upon any Other Perſons, that they ſo Met.

But the next Year, will yet more evidently prove the truth of this remark, and overthrow the pretences of our new Eccleſiaſtical Politicians. The Parliament, by Prorogation, met again at Weſtmiſter, January the xxij^d: It ſate, and made ſeveral ¹⁰ Acts; Yet the Clergy having Granted ſuch large Subſidies in their Convocations the Years before, were not Aſſembled at all with it; nor did they in Either Province, as we muſt now ſpeak, tho' I confeſs Abſurdly, Attend upon it.

This Parliament was but juſt Riſen, when the King iſſued out his Writ, Dated March the 15th, to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury for another Convocation. ¹¹ The Archbiſhop appointed June the xxij^d for its ſitting; and the Clergy then aſſembled according to his Appointment. This was an unexpected Summons to them; who hoped to have been at reſt for at leaſt two Years longer, till the Tenths before Granted were expired; the laſt of which was not due till the firſt of May 1516. In teſtimony of their Diſſatisfaction, they came to no Reſolution at this Meeting; but were adjourn'd by the Archbiſhop from time to time, till the 13th of November 1515, the Year following. Being then met, they ſate till the 20th of December, ¹² and Granted two other Tenths to the King; to be pay'd by four equal Portions, the Firſt at Michaelmas 1517, and the Other Three at the ſame Feaſt, the Three next Years. Thus they carried their Point, notwithstanding the Anticipation made by the King in his New Summons: and provided againſt any future trouble of Aſſembling for at leaſt Five Years to come; in which time we ſhall find, that that they were not Once Summon'd by the King to Convocation. If this be not a clear proof, that the End which the King had in Calling of them together was for Aid, not for any Other either State, or Church Affairs; Let Dr. A. be pleaſed to give us ſome Reason, why the King Called them ſo often before this, why He did not Call them ſo long after.

ry the 22d. This was properly an Ecclesiastical Synod; Called by the Authority of the Metropolitan for the Affairs of the Church in that Province.

After both these Assemblies, the ¹ King last of All Summon'd his Parliament to meet at Westminster February the 5th. It sat till Thursday April the 5th; and was then Prorogued till the 12th of November following. So that to state then the Case of this Parliament: In the Province of York no Convocation properly speaking was Called; In that of Canterbury, the Convocation was held June the 22d; The Parliament, the 5th of February, Seven Months after.

But in the next Year we shall find these Assemblies somewhat nearer to Another; not out of any such Principle as Dr. A. supposes, but by the Casual Adjournment of the One and the Other. The Archbishop of Canterbury, by the Backwardness of his Clergy to Grant a New Subsidy so long before the Tenths already given were to Expire, was forced, as we have seen, to Adjourn his Convocation to a long day; ² November the 13th. 1515: The King prorogued the Parliament to the 12th of the same Month. By these several Adjournments, they now sat within a day of Each Other. And so they Ended too: The Parliament being Dissolved December the xxiiid; The Convocation Dismissed December the 20th, but two days before it.

At the End of this Parliament two Minutes there are in the Journal of the Upper House, that may deserve to be taken Notice of. The former is to this effect:

" This Parliament was Dissolved, and Ended, the 22d of December 1515: Joh.

" Taylor, Dr. of Canon Law, being Clerk of the Parliament, and at the same time Prolocutor of the Convocation of the Clergy, which seldom Happens.

The Other Remark is this: " In this Parliament, and Convocation, most dangerous Seditions rose between the Clergy, and Secular Power, about the Liberties of the Ecclesiastics; One Standish, a Franciscan Fryar, being the Minister and Promoter of all the Mischiefs, Anno 1515. The Case of Dr. Standish, and the Mischiefs here spoken of, our Law Books set out to us, and from thence I have given elsewhere such an Account, as may suffice, of this Matter.

About a Fortnight after the dissolution of this Convocation and Parliament, the King, who had not yet at all Convened the Clergy of the Other Province, to meet with either Session of this State Council, ³ now issued out his Writ to the Archbishop of York for the Assembling of Them. The Archbishop appointed the 9th of April for their meeting: When being come together, they Granted to the King two Tenths, and so were dissolved. So that even this last Session of Parliament was again defective: It sat indeed with the Convocation of One Province Concurrent with it; but that of the Other met not till almost four Months after it was Dissolved.

In the following Years an Affair began, which being not commonly known, will oblige me to Enlarge a little the more upon it. ⁴ Archbishop Warham, for the Reformation of several great Enormities in his Province had design'd to hold an Ecclesiastical Council of his Suffragans. In Order thereunto He had acquainted the King with his Purpose; and, as He affirmed himself, had obtain'd his Consent so to do. Cardinal Woolsey, who now drew all things into his own Hands, being angry at this, wrote a sharp Letter to the Archbishop; and, as it appear'd by the Event, so order'd Matters, as to oblige Warham to recal his Monitions, which were already issued out for it, in Expectation of a Legantine Council to be held by the Cardinal for the Reformation of the same Enormities.

In pursuance of this Resolution upon the ⁵ last of December the same Year the Cardinal, by his Letters, Summon'd the Several Bishops of the Realm to a Synod at Westminster the first Munday in Lent. This Council was intended to have been held before on the morrow after the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, September the 9th: But the Pestilence raging at that time in the City, ⁶ the Cardinal, by his Letters dated August the 21st: 1518. Adjourn'd the Council till the first Munday in Lent following; March the 14th; and by his Monitions, bearing date December 31st, summon'd the Bishops of both Provinces to come to it. Some Articles were agreed upon in this meeting, which the Bishops were required to publish in their respective Diocesses. How this was done in other places I cannot tell. ⁷ The Bishop of Hereford called his Diocesan Synod in Order thereunto; and therein caused the said Articles to be publish'd; As by the Acts of this Synod, as far as they concern the present Business, transcribed into the Appendix, may more particularly appear.

The King had now tarried a long time without either Parliament, or Convocation. The Terms of his Subsidies were all Expired; and He began therefore to think of Summoning not only the Laitie, but the Clergy of the Realm too. And first by his ¹ Writs dated January the 23^d, He cited his Parliament to meet at the Preaching Fryars London, April the 15th. Having sate there for some time, it was from thence Adjourn'd to Westminster the last of July; and there continued till it was Dissolved.

Before the Parliament met, February the 6th, the King issued out his ² Writs to the Archbishops for the Assembling of their respective Convocations. The Cardinal ³ Archbishop of York, was the first who Assembled his Province upon it: They met, by his Order, March the 22^d. almost a month before the Parliament began. On the first day of their Assembly they were prorogued to the Conventual Church of St. Peters Westminster, de ipsorum Prælatorum & Cleri atque Abbatibus & Conventus dicti Monasterii voluntate & Assensu Expressis; there to meet April the 22^d; for what End we shall presently see.

But the ⁴ Archbishop of Canterbury chose the time of the Parliament, as most Convenient for the Bishops and Prelats of his Province. He order'd his Convocation to meet April the 20th, but five days after the Parliament was to begin. No sooner were the Clergy Assembled, and the Mass said, but a Monition was sent to the Archbishop, by the Cardinal of York, to appear with the Prelats and Clergy of his Province before Him at Westminster, two days after, viz. April 22: there to hold a National, Legatine Council with the Prelats and Clergy of the Other Province, Whom he had before, with this design, summon'd to appear there. What the Result of this suddain meeting was, I shall chuse rather to deliver in the Words of One who was then upon the Spot, and gave this Account of it in a Letter concerning the Quarrels which rose in the House of Commons about the Subsidy which was passing there, and added what follows relating to the proceedings of the Clergy at the same time. ⁵ "Also the Convocation among the Priests the first day of their Appearance allone as the Mass of the Holy Gooste at Pauls was done, my Lorde Cardynal assited all them t'appear before Him in his Convocation at Westminster; Whiche soo did; and there was another Mass of the Holy Gooste: And within Six or seven daies the Prestes proved that all that my Lord Cardinals Convocation shoulde do, it shuld be voyde, because that their Summons was t'appere before my Lord of Canterbury. Which thing soo espied my Lord Cardinal hath addrested oute of new Citations into every Countrey, commanding the Prestes t'appere before Him Eight days after th'effencyon; and then I thinke they shall have the third Mass of the Holie Gooste. I pray God the Holy Gooste be amongest them and Us both: I doo tremble to Remember the End of thies hye and new Enterprizes.

It is in Effect the same account that the Cardinal himself Gives of the Issue of this Assembly in his Mandatory Letters for the Other Council here spoken of, which was ordered to appear before Him ⁶ first on the Munday next after Corpus Christi Day, June the 8th; and afterwards, on the Tuesday before, June the 2^d: as by an authentic Copy Return'd from the Archdeacon of Buckingham to the Bishop of Lincoln, which I have Publish'd in my Appendix, do's appear. The Clergy were required to bring full Powers with them; but what was done farther in this Case, I am not able to say. In the meantime, is it to be imagined, that if Cardinal Woolsey had thought the Convocation Assembled under Archbishop Warham to have been by the Law of our Constitution an Essential part of the English Parliament, and to have met as such; He would have presumed by his Legatine Authority to have broken up the Meeting, and to have turn'd it into a Legatine Synod; which every body must see, could have no such Relation to the Parliament of England? Dr. A. may fancy what he will; but had the Cardinal believed, as he pretends, that there had been any such near Dependence of these Great Bodies upon, or Relation to, One another; He would have as soon undertaken by his Legatine Power to have Adjourn'd the House of Commons, as to have prorogued the Convocation; over which, in that Case, He could have had no more pretence of Power, than over the Other. But the Cardinal look'd upon it, as a Provincial Synod; called by the King for a State purpose; and which being met by the Authority of the Archbishop, was capable of being Employ'd to any Other Ecclesiastical Use. And therefore by a Stretch of his Power, such as never had been before fore attempted, He Called it before Him to Westminster; intending when they were there, (would the Proctors of the Clergy have permitted it,) to have done at once both the Kings Business, and to have ordered his Own Church Affairs.

They sate not many days at Westminster, before the Archbishop, and his Bishops, and Clergy, return'd again to their Assembly, to which they had been called at Pauls. They were cited by the Cardinal to his Council, April the 22^d: And on the 2^d of May, his Orders went out for another Meeting; so that before that time therefore they must have been dismissed by Him. Being return'd to their proper place they Continued to sit there till August the 14th, and then granted a Subsidy to the King. The Clergy of York, did the same four days after, August the 18th; and so Concluded their Assembly.

What became of the Legatine Synod, appointed to meet in the beginning of June, I am not able to say. That it gave no money, both the nature of the Assembly, and the account we have of the Convocations in which the Subsidies of this Year were Granted, Assure us. On August the 14th our Province (as I have before said) made their Grant. On the 17th of the same month, the Province of Tork was prorogued from Westminster Abbey to the Cardinals Own House, called in the Register Locum utique nostre Jurisdictionis Ebor. Solitum & Consuetum. Being met there the next day, August the 18th, They agreed to the Subsidy of One half of their Ecclesiastical Revenues, for the five next Years, the same that our Clergy had Given before.

Such was the issue of this Parliament, and of the Convocations, and Synods, which met with it. Never was the Civil Council more pompously Attended than Now. The two Convocations not only sate at the same time with it, but that of Tork was Called up to Westminster, to sit in the Neighbourhood of it. Cardinal Woolsey would have made the Relation more near still; by Convening both Provinces into One National Assembly, and that at Westminster, close by the Parliament. Let Dr. A. make what Advantage He can of it: But let him remember withal; that One of these Provinces began to meet above three weeks before the Parliament; the Other was treated by the Cardinal, not as a Parliamentary, but an Ecclesiastical Assembly; and for a while turn'd by Him, during the Session of Parliament, into a Legatine Synod: And whether then, and in that Capacity too it, was an Attendant, under the Pope's Legat, upon the Parliament of England by vertue of our Constitution; is a Case, which being pretty singular, I must leave to those who are better versed in the Laws of the Realm, than I must pretend to be, to determine.

But here Dr. A., being a Man of Nice Honour and Respect to his Own Living Benefactors, impleads me in an Action of Ingratitude towards a Dead One. I must bespeak the Readers Patience to stop so long as to clear my self of that Imputation, or I may chance in the Opinion of some very Ignorant persons (for of any Others there is no danger) to lie under the Scandal of it.

In my former Book I had from the Antiqu. Brit. given an Erroneous indeed, but I think otherwise a Candid Account, of the History of these Synods, in these Words: ³ "I shall close up these Remarks with the account of One other Convocation, and that such as is not to be parallell'd, in all its Circumstances, in any part of our History. King Henry the viiith having called a Parliament to Westminster Anno 1523. (so it should have been printed) Commanded Warham Archbishop of Canterbury, to Summon a Convocation of the Clergy to meet about the same time in St. Pauls Church London. Cardinal Woolsey, who, as Archbishop of York, had no place in the Convocation, and was desirous to bring every thing within his Own Management, by his Legatine Power Dissolves the Convocation held at the Kings Command by Warham, and Orders the same Synod to appear before himself, as the Pope's Legat, the next day at Westminster. Where having got a sufficient Subsidy granted by them to the King, he soon dismissed the Assembly. These are my Words; In which I think there is nothing severe upon any One, but all delivered in as soft a Strain as the Subject could possibly have born. Let us now see how my Author; (an Author of that Credit and Authority in these Matters, that I do not yet think it any shame to have been misled by Him) reports this History. — ⁴ "Parliamentum Westmonasterii Celebratum est; Mandatoq; Regis Warhamus Archiepiscopus Cleri Synodum Londinum convocavit. And now let Dr. A. himself be the Judge; Or rather let the Equitable Reader Judge between Him, and Me: In what have I varied from my Author in the Relation of this matter? Or what have I Omitted excepting only his REFLECTION upon the CARDINAL; over which indeed I drew a Charitable Vail; and pass'd not the least Censure upon his Attempt, in a Matter, which had it been transacted as it is here represented, and as I verily supposed it to have been, Dr. A. himself confesses, “ Dr. Wake would have had reason to say, “ (it is all that he do's say of it) that it was an Assembly not to be parallel'd in all “ its Circumstances in any part of our History. Nay he adds; that it would have certainly been put among the Articles of his Impeachment preferred against Him in Parliament. So Great a Crime do's Dr. A. himself account this Action, as it was represented to me. Yet so Gentle a Reflection, and as to the Person of the Cardinal None at all, did I, at last, make upon it.

 pag. 453.

But where then is my Crime? How do's my Ingratitude Appear? Why it seems I ought “ to have done the Cardinal Justice in this particular; Who had “ REAL FAULTS enough, not to be loaded with Untrue ones. Will this Gentleman please to bear a little with me: I truly thought that I had done the Cardinal much more than Justice; that I had spared his Memory in an Action in which Others had Reflected with Severity, and, as I understood the matter, with Justice too, upon him. That I did not set the Story right in some Circumstances, (for as to the substance of it, it did not need my Help) was not for want of any good Will, but of Memorials to do it by. I had then only our Printed Authors before me; and I took my Narrative from One whom I accounted the most Correct of Them.

2 Rights, &c.
 pag. 454.

However let us hear how He harangues upon this Occasion; for indeed there is somewhat very Extraordinary in it. “ Common Justice obliged me to say “ thus much in behalf of that Great Minister.—Dr. Wake had much nearer Obligations to have done this; who has eat the Bread of Woolsey — near half his “ Life. Would any one that reads this imagine that Dr. A. as well as Dr. Wake had once been a Student of Christ Church Oxon; and that, if I mistake not, for as many Years as ever Dr. Wake was? “ Common Justice Obligated Him; — but “ Dr. Wake had a nearer Obligation. Dr. Wake, while He was Student of that AMPLE (for I must not now give it the Other Character, of ROYAL) FOUNDATION; Eat the Bread of WOOLSEY; but Dr. A. He eat the Bread only of his own Merits and Endowments.

But it may be this is not the Bread that so much moves his Indignation: A Students Pension is not large enough to raise a Gratitude above the pitch of COMMON JUSTICE; tho' somewhat else may. We will therefore go on with his Reflection. “ Dr. Wake had much nearer Obligations to have done this, who has “ eat the Bread of Woolsey near half his Life; and now owes his Comfortable “ Summer Retreat to THAT CARDINALS BOUNTY. Is Dr. A. in Good Earnest so ignorant as to believe this? Or do's he hope that his Readers may possibly know so little of these Matters, as to be misled by Him? Did Cardinal Woolsey then found the Cathedral of Christ Church Oxon? Did he place the Episcopal Chapter there? Or do's it appear that among all the Other parts of his Magnificent Scheme, he ever design'd any such thing? Was not this Foundation dependant upon the Erection of the New Bishopricks? And those Consequential to the Final Dissolution of the Monasteries? And both many Years after the Cardinal was in his Grave? What strange Ignorance; or unpardonable prevarication do's this Writer here betray; because King Henry the viiith, xvi Years after the Cardinal was dead, having Erected a New Bishoprick of Oxford, and settled it with its Capitular Body at Osney Abbey, afterwards thought fit to remove both the See, and Chapter, to Christ Church, and Unite it to the Colledge, which pursuant to the Cardinals design and beginning, He had Establish'd there; to call this Cardinal Woolsey's Cathedral, and to represent the Bread which the Dean and Chapter Eat there, not as the Kings, but the Cardinals Bread? But let Dr. A. set up his New Notions as He pleases : and, to make his Performance all of a piece, be as extravagant-ly Erroneous in his By-Points, as he is in his Main Principles : His Confidence shall not make me ashamed to Avow that I eat the Bread of Kings; and as I thankfully Acknowledge that I owe my Promotion to the Bounty of my Royal Master, (whose Legal Rights therefore, Gratitude, as well as Duty, obliges me to defend) so to affirm that the Church in which I Enjoy it Owes its Establishment to the Munificence of his Illustrious Predecessor, King Henry the viiith. A Prince whom 'this Author not very Gratefully Rails at, tho' bred up in the School of his Daughter; and Nourished in the Foundation which that Prince himself Establish'd. This is a Profession which this Author has more than Once publicly made in his Solemn Devotions, whilst he was of that Society; and I think, should not have forgotten it in his present Writing. Not but that after all I have as just an honour for the Cardinal as is Consistent with Truth: I spared his Memory in an Act for which Others had severely Censured Him; and how far this Author has justified Him, or indeed given a true Account of his Procedure, after all his insulting over Other mens Errors, I now proceed to Enquire.

K. HENRY

p. 148. Having in general called King Henry the viiith an ill-Prince; He thus proceeds: "HENRY the 8th was such, IF EVER ANY

"PRINCE UPON EARTH WAS: And Sr. Walt. Raleigh therefore says of Him, that if all the Pictures and Patterns of a Merciless Prince were lost in the World, They might all again be painted to the Life out of the Story of this King. And in the next Sentence He speaks of his most Exorbitant and Oppressive Acts of Power, &c. Yet this very King Dr. A. has often Own'd for the Founder of Christ Church, and twice a day, for many Years together, has publicly Given God Thanks, with that Society, for Animating him with his Spirit to found that Colledge, which now nevertheless, He not only transfers wholly to Card. Woolsey, but throw's the Cathedral too into the bargain; in which the Cardinal had no manner of Concern.

The main thing disputed in this Case, allowing for some lesser Mistakes of an Eminent Author, whom Dr. A. is pleased to fall upon both here, and in many Other places, I think, with as little Gratitude, as Decency; is this: Whether the Cardinal Suspended, and, in his Intention, had things proceeded according to his Expectations, Dissolved Archbishop Warham's Synod, Called in Obedience to the Kings Writ, and actually Convened thereupon at Westminster, April the 20th? Or Whether He only Summon'd a distinct Legantine Council to meet at Westminster, two days after the Other was Appointed to begin at Pauls? Dr. A. Affirms the Latter, and refers us to the Cardinals Mandate for the proof of it. I have not only Examined that Mandate, but that Others may have the better Opportunity of Examining it too, have put it into my Appendix; and do nevertheless in Opposition to his New State of this Matter, Affirm the former; and desire him to shew me any One Word in that Mandate that says, what He pretends to be so Clearly Written in it. Let us hear How he delivers His Judgment in this Particular. "Had his Lordship, says He, given himself the trouble to peruse the Mandate to Tonstall, which He Cites from his Register, He would have found that there is not a Syllable of a Dissolution, or a Re-Assembly mentioned in it; and would THERE have litt upon a true Account of this Mistaken Story. For that MANDATE Recites that the Cardinal had SENT OUT his LEGANTINE SUMMONS, CONCURRENTLY with the BISHOP OF CANTERBURY'S PROVINCIAL CITATION, for the Clergy of Both Provinces to meet at St. Peters, April the 22d. — That they did accordingly thus Meet by Adjournment from Pauls.

Sect. 73.

The Bishop of Sarum.

He who charges Another with Error, and pretends to Set things to Rights which had been for an Age and Half mistaken by the best Authors; should take some Care not to Err too Grossly in the very thing in which He insults over the Negligence, or Frailties, of Other Men. The Bishop of Sarum was mistaken in his Representation of this matter: It is allowed; So were some of our best Historians before Him. Let me Add, and so is Dr. A. now; and that more Unpardonably than any of Them, because he pretends to Greater Exactness; and to relate matters of fact from a Publick Instrument, which, after all, says not One Word of what He is pleased, with such Assurance, to build upon the Authority of it. The Cardinal sent out no LEGANTINE SUMMONS CONCURRENTLY with the Archbishops Mandate: If he had, an Execution must have been made of them; Proctors of the Chapters, and Dioceses, would have been Chosen, and Empower'd thereupon; and there would have been no disappointment of the Cardinals Designs, for want of Procuratorial Letters to warrant the Clergy to Act in his Synod. But as I have before shewn from a Contemporary Relation of this matter; the Cardinal upon the First Day of the Meeting of Archbishop Warham's Convocation, as soon as the Mass of the Holy Ghost was said, Cited the whole Assembly to appear before Him at Westminster two days after. This was the truth of the Matter; and this was the Reason why the Proctors, who were Deputed to Come up to the Convocation at Pauls, and to Act with their Archbishop, and the Provincial Prelats and Clergy there, could not, by such their Deputation Act, in the Cardinals Legantine Council at Westminster, as He Intended they should have done.

Would Dr. A. have some farther proof of this; let him take it from One who was a member of the Archbishops Convocation, and went down with Him to the Cardinals Synod at Westminster. "Four days after the Opening of the Parliament, the Clergy began to hold their Convention in St. Pauls Church. Woolsey had also Called thither (to London) the Clergy of his Province of York: And because their Smalness did not seem sufficient to Adorn his Pontifical Dignity, He ask'd the Archbishop of Canterbury's Consent, that the whole Assembly of the Clergy, Ejus jussu Convocatus, ad suum Conventum, quem in Cœnobio ad Westmonasterium facere instituerat, accederet; Ibiq; de Summâ Rerum Consultaretur.

Now by this Citation of his, thus Unseasonably made; He did, in effect, Dissolve the Archbishop's Convocation. For He commanded that very Assembly of Prelats and Proctors, which had been Called by the Archbishop to Sit at Pauls by the Authority of the Kings Writ, to Leave his Synod, and come down with their President to Westminster, and there sit under his Own Direction as the Pope's Legate. And I make no doubt but that could the Clergy have Acted, and Granted the Subsidy demanded on the Kings behalf there, which the same Historian observes, was their main business, they had never been sent back again to Pauls, to their Own Convocation. So that however there was no Formal Dissolution of Archbishop Warham's Convocation; but, as Matters fell out, the Clergy were forced to Return to it; and with Dr. A's Favour to Re-Assemble in it; yet a Suspension of it there was for several Days; and it is more than probable that had not that Mistake hinder'd it, it would have proved, in the Effect, a final Dissolution.

Concilium uno tempore habebatur; ac Unum tantum agebatur ut pecunia impetraretur.

But where has Dr. A. learnt, that the Clergy of our Province Called by distinct Writs to a Legantine Council, did ever meet in such a Council by Adjournment from their Own Provincial Convocation? That the Archbishop in such a Case, might have Prorogued, or Dissolved his Convocation, to give the Better Opportunity to the Bishops and Prelats, and to such of the Proctors of the Chapters and Clergy as should have been chosen for both, to Attend upon the Legantine Council, is not improbable. But to meet in One Kind of Council, by Adjournment from Another; is, I am Confident, a New Term, and fitted to a Notion altogether as New. He may as well say that the Archbishop Adjourns his Suffragan Bishops from the Jerusalem Chamber to the House of Lords, when for the Business of the Parliament, He prorogues his Convocation; as that Archbishop Warham, according to his Report of the Matter, Adjourn'd them from his Own Convocation at Pauls to meet in the Cardinals Legantine Council at Westminster; in which He had no more Authority than He had in the Parliament. The Cardinal indeed Adjourn'd his Own Convocation from York to Westminster: And they sate by Adjournment there. They were his Own Provincial Convocation, He presided in it, and had the Power over it. But for the Archbishop of Canterbury, He would never have Adjourn'd his Own Authority out of doors, if He could have helped it: And I have before shewn, that both Himself and his Clergy met at Westminster by the Cardinals Citation, not by their own Adjournment.

There is Yet One little Exception worthy the Confutation of Dr. A. for I verily think no Body else either could have mistaken it, or would have seriously endeavour'd to Answer it. The Antiquit. Brit. give this Reason of the Cardinals thus Ill-Entreating the Archbishop of Canterbury, that "having no Place in the Synod of the Province of Canterbury, and being desirous to draw all things under his Own Legatine Power, He Called the Convocation of our Province before him to Westminster. Well, and what says Dr. A. to this? Why He seriously Assures us that this is a great Mistake; for tho' as Archbishop of York, He had, indeed, no place in our Synod, yet as Bishop of Bath and Wells, and Abbot of St. Albans, he had. Will He give me leave to Ask Him; Do's he think that the Learned Writer of that Book, who so thoroughly understood the Constitution, and and History of our Church, did not know that the Cardinal had such Preferments? K. HENRY the VIIIth. Or knowing it, was He yet ignorant that the Bishop of Bath and Wells, and Abbot of St. Albans, had places in our Synod? Yes certainly, That Learned Writer knew both, as well as Dr. A. But he knew withal that those were not Placs for the Cardinal to appear in; and meant no more than Dr. A. himself Allows, that being not President there, either as Legat, or Archbishop; Having not any Place of Eminence and Authority in the Convocation of our Province, He resolved by an Extraordinary Use of his Papal Character to Usurp, what regularly He could not Obtain.

We are now come to the Last Convocation of this Period; which began the 5th of November 1529; and continued till after the Submission of the Clergy, which enters us upon a New Establishment, and must be the Subject of a New Chapter. I shall here only briefly represent the several Sessions of the Parliament, and Convocation, till the passing of the Act of Submission, and so conclude the Present Chapter. Sect. 74. 1529.

By Writs dated the 9th of August, the King Summon'd his Parliament to meet at London upon the 3^d of November following. It sate there 44 days, to the 17th of December, and was then prorogued to the 27th of April the next Year. Dugd. Summ. monit. Parl. pag. 494. 1530.

By other Prorogations it was continued from thence to the 16th of January, the 22^d of Henry the 8th. Then it sate again to the End of March; and was prorogued to the 23^d of October following. 1531.

After Other Prorogations, the same Parliament was held a third time upon the 15th of January Anno 1531: And again, a fourth upon the 4th of February 1532; from which time it continued till the 7th of April 1533. 1532.

By farther Prorogations it was from thence Adjourn'd to the 15th of January the same Year: It then sate to the 30th of March, and was again Prorogued to November following. This was that Parliament which pass'd the Act of the SUBMISSION of the CLERGY; and of which an Account will hereafter more properly be Given. In the mean time having thus seen what were the Several Sessions of this Parliament for 4 Years, from its first beginning; We will now as briefly enquire, how the Sessions of the (2) Convocations kept pace with them, and so put an End to this part of our History. 1533.

The King having issued out his Writs for the Parliament August the 9th; about ten days after, sent forth his Provincial Writs to the Archbishop of Canterbury, to Summon, with all Convenient Speed, the Convocation of his Province. The Archbishop accordingly appointed it to meet upon the 5th of November; two days after the Parliament was to begin. It continued from thence to the 24th of December, and so was prorogued. 1529. Registr. Toustal. Lond. fol. 165.

In the beginning of January 1530, a Week, or more, before the Parliament Resumed its Session, the Convocation renew'd its Assemblies: A difference of no great Moment, but that it shews Dr. A's mistake, who roundly affirms them to have met within a lesser distance throughout this Reign. It sate till the first of April; and was then Prorogued to the 16th of October; a Week short of the Parliamentary Adjournment. 1530.

The next Session of Both began within a Day of each Other. The Parliament was open'd the 15th; the Convocation the 16th of January: 1531. They sate both together till the middle of May; and were prorogued too within a day of One Another. 1531.

The same was the Case of the next Session: The Parliament began February the 4th, the Convocation February the 5th. 1532. The Parliament sate till the 7th, the Convocation till the 8th of April the next Year 1533. 1532.

To remove all scruple concerning the Continuance of this Convocation, after the Death of the Arch-Bishop; the King first by His Writ, dated 28th of October Regn. 24. Commission'd the Prior and Chapter of Canterbury to proceed with it; and They by their Mandate dated February the 10th; Orderd a New Summons to be made out to the Bishops, Prelats and Clergy to appear in Convocation March the 17th; either in their Persons, or by Proctors sufficiently empower'd to Act for Them. Upon the Authority of this Mandate, I doubted not to fix the meeting of this Convocation to that day, but to avoid mistakes, must here give a more clear and distinct account of it. The Case was plainly this: The Convocation was first adjourn'd to November the 5th. Being then assembled, the Bishop of St. Asaph as Commissioner for the Prior and Church of Canterbury, prorogued 1532. Vid. Mand. Dec. & Capit. Cant. in Append. Ann. 1532.

HENRY

rogued it to the 5th of February following. To take off all Scruples concerning the proceeding of the Convocation, which might seem to have been put to an End by the Death of the Archbishop, on the xth of February, the Dean and Chapter issued out their Mandate to the Bishop of London for a New Summons of the Members of the Convocation, and for new Elections of Proctors for the Cathedral and Diocesan Clergy. These were appointed to be Return'd March the 17th. But in the mean time the Bishops and Prelats who were present, went on as before; and were Continued from time to time, and some little business was Once at least done by Them. On the 17th of March the Bishop of London made his Return, and from thenceforth the Convocation proceeded regularly in a full Body, as it had done before the Archbishops decease.

1533.

The Year following the Parliament sate again the 15th of January 1533. and Continued to the 30th of March. The Convocation met the next day, January the 16th: And was prorogued from time to time till the very End of the Parliament, by the Archbishops Authority; and the next day after it rose was Continued to the 4th of November, by the Kings Writ.

Such was the Case of our Convocation: In which, when we shall consider what Affairs were now in Agitation, and how much it concern'd the King to Unite the Sessions of this Parliament and Convocation very near to one Another; we shall find no Cause to wonder that He who had freely Called them at different times before, as freely summon'd them to meet about the same times Now. Of the Assemblies of the Convocation in the Other Province, I can give but a short and Un-accurate Account. When it met, or whether it met at all with the first Session of the Parliament in 1529, I cannot tell. Cardinal Woolsey being dead in November 1530 the King issued out His Writ to the Guardians of the Spiritualties dated the 7th of December, to Assemble the Convocation at York. They Called it thereupon January the 12th: From thence it continued to the 4th of May 1531: And then, five Weeks after the Parliament was prorogued, made the Grant of 18840 l. to the King.

Ebor. ab Ao.

The See of York being now fill'd, on the 23d of December Regn. xxiii: the King again issued out his Writ to the New Archbishop to Call his Convocation, cum omni celeritate accomoda. The Archbishop appointed it to Assemble ¹ February the 7th: somewhat more than three Weeks after the Parliament began. But there were great Reasons why it should sit then: The King and Parliament bore hard upon the Clergy; Their Submission was now transacting in the Convocation of the Other Province; and we cannot doubt but that a Correspondence was held between them; and that the One were not Idle, whilst the Others were so fully Employ'd.

Sect. 75.

How they proceeded in this, or when they met in any following Convocations, the Registers of that Province seem to be wholly silent; so that I must here put an End to this part of King Henry the 8ths Reign, and with that to the History of this Third Period. The Sum of what we have seen under this last Princes Administration is briefly this. Of 11 Parliaments, and Sessions of Parliament held within his first four and twenty Years; One sate without the Attendance of any Convocation at all. With ² four Others, only One Convocation sate, during any part of their several Sessions. Of ³ two I can give no Account whether the Convocation of the other Province met with them or Not. ⁴ Thrice only do we find the Parliament and Convocations to have met together: And for that we have as many, if not more, Convocations Called and Assembled out of the time of the Parliament. ⁵ Two sate not in any part of the same Sessions with it: ⁶ One met before it; tho' afterwards continued by Prorogations with it: And another if it did not meet, yet ⁷ acted and did its Great Work, several Weeks after the Parliament was Risen.

And thus have I done with what concern'd the Second Argument offer'd by Dr. A. to prove the Right of our Convocations to meet, and sit with every Parliament; namely, That by our Constitution it is, and has been, accounted for four or five hundred Years past, a NECESSARY ATTENDANT upon the PARLIAMENT of ENGLAND. How effectually I have made Good my Own Assertions, and Answer'd this Authors, I must leave it to Others to Judge: That I have declined no part of his Argument, but come up to Every thing that look'd like Reasoning in it, will best appear, by taking a brief review of his own Summary Recapitulation of his Positions; and of my Allegations in Opposition to Every One of Them.

His

His Words are these. — “ I have been large upon this Head, and I fear, by reason of the Variety of the Matter, somewhat Confused. It may be proper therefore Here at the close of it, to recollect the several Branches of the Proof there advanced : They stand in this Order.

R. HENRY
the VIIIth.
Sect. 76.
Rights, &c.
pag. 73, 74.

I. “ That as far back as we have any Memoirs of the Civil or Ecclesiastical Affairs of this Kingdom, it appears that the Clergy and Laity met together in the Great Councils of the Realm.

If by the Clergy Dr. A. means the Greater Clergy, Bishops and Prelats ; Or such Others as by their Offices or Tenures were obliged, or required to Come to them, I have Agreed that they did : But If the Body of the Lower Clergy ; I have plainly and evidently proved that they did not. In the former Sense his Allegation is true, but impertinent : In the latter it is pertinent, but false ; Let him chuse how he will Explain it, the Cause is neither Way in danger by it.

II. “ That this they did in the Saxon times, and for some Reigns after the Conquest, Nationally ; Joyning Closely with the Laity in Civil Debates, and taking their Sanction along with them in ALL ECCLESIASTICAL ACTS and Ordinances.

This I have shewn to be no way true, neither on the State Side, nor on the Church. The Lower Clergy (for of them it is that He Speaks) never joyn'd any otherwise than as I before observed with the Laity in Civil Debates : Nor did the Bishops and Prelats take them into their Ecclesiastical Acts and Ordinances. The Affairs of the Church were transacted by the Bishops and Prelats alone in their Ecclesiastical Councils : If afterwards the King, and his Lords, thought fit to Confirm by a Civil Law, what the Others had Order'd by their Own Spiritual Authority ; it is no more than what is often done still ; without ever intituling the Prince and Parliament, to any joynt Synodical power with the Bishops and Clergy.

III. “ That they divided afterwards from the Laity and from One Another ; and Attended the Parliament not in One Body, but in Two Provincial Synods, held under their Several Archbishops.

Here Dr. A. clearly shews whom he before meant by the Clergy. The Bishops never divided from the Laity : They always continued, as they still do, to sit and Act with them in Parliament. The Clergy therefore of whom He speaks, must be Those under the degree of Bishops : Let us see what it is that He farther affirms to this Purpose of them.

IV. “ That tho' it do's not Clearly appear when this Practise first had its rise, yet SURE WE ARE, that it is between four and five hundred Years Old ; and has for SO LONG, AT LEAST, REGULARLY, OBTAIN'D ; excepting only the Interruption that was given to it by the Premunitory Clause, inserted into the Bishops Writs ; which ONCE AGAIN WARN'D, and brought the CLERGY Nationally to Parliament.

We have here another plain declaration whom we are to understand by the CLERGY : They are those who by the Premunitory Clause were, and are summon'd to Parliament ; that is to say, the Body of the Lower Clergy. In opposition to these two Assertions, I have fully proved, that the BODY of the LOWER CLERGY never did Attend upon the Parliament in the times of which he speaks ; And I do here once again Call upon him to prove if He can, by any tolerable Evidence either of Law, or Fact, that they did. SURE WE ARE, he says, that for SO LONG AT LEAST (i. e. from the middle of King HENRY the 2d's Reign, as He elsewhere states it) this practise REGULARLY OBTAIN'D. A practise which REGULARLY OBTAIN'D ; and of which a Man can truly say WE ARE SURE, may, I suppose, be Evidently proved. Let Him therefore make such a proof of it, as may convince us that it is true : Or, at least, let him plainly and clearly Answer what I have before Offer'd to prove that is certainly false.

V. “ That a strict Compliance with this Clause was at first Exacted by the Crown and paid by the Clergy ; but that they SOON found ways of being Released from the Rigor of it ; And PREVAIL'D UPON THE KING to Accept of their former way of Assembling with the Parliament, in Two Provincial Synods, in lieu of that Closer Attendance, which the Premunientes Challenged ; the Forms however being still kept up, by which the Kings Right of Sum-

"moving them Immediately to Parliament was declared all along, and "their Obligation to Obey his Summons in the Way it prescribed was duly "Acknowledged.

This is the Great Assertion on which the present Argument depends, and therefore ought to have had a suitable proof? How has Dr. A. Confirm'd it? Has He produced the Original Contract, the Articles of Accommodation between the King, and the Clergy? Has he Offer'd any One Record; nay or so much as the Report of any One Credible Author, to prove that ever there was any such Agreement made in this Case? But it may be He Collects it from History, and has shewn that the Clergy did thus Exchange their Parliamentary, for a Provincial Attendance upon the Parliament; and that the King made no Remonstrance against it? This therefore I have proved to be Both ways intirely false. * That the Clergy did not so soon give up their Parliamentary Attendance, as He would make us believe: * That they Continued it to the time of King Henry the 6th: * That they fell off gradually from it; and the King, who had his Business done in Convocation, troubled not himself about it. As for their Attending upon the Parliament in two Provincial Convocations, 'tis so apparently Untrue; so contrary to the Evidence of Fact, that nothing was ever more Erroneously Asserted. I have taken some Pains to Examine this Matter from the time that the Premunientes was first put into the Parliamentary Writ, to the passing of the Act of Submission. By my Account not above One Parliament in Thirty had the Two Provincial Convocations Concurrent with it; or, by consequence, Attendant (as He calls it) upon it. Which those were, the Scheme of this whole Period, which I shall therefore here subjoyn in the following Tables, will shew him. Let him try how far he can reduce the Proportion, and fill up the Vacuities which Occur in it: And answer the Offer which I here freely make to Him, "that if
"from the Time of King EDWARD the 1st, to that of King HENRY the 8th, He "can prove by the like Records, that One Parliament in Ten had the Two Convo"cations so Attending as he says, upon them, I will give up the Cause;
"and Confess Him to be as Extraordinary a Man, as his Friends speak
"him; Or (which is, I believe still more) as He himself thinks Himself "to be.

K. HENRY
the VIIIth.

Having given this Ocular Proof of Dr. A's Error in that upon which He was to build the Main force of his Argument, I shall need say very little to what follows. If the Convocations, as it now very Evidently appears, did not Commonly meet with the Parliament, as He pretends, nor had any Regard in their Sessions to it; If our Kings Called them, sometimes at the same time with it, but much more frequently at some Other; If when the King called Both the nearest to one Another, the Archbishops either hasten'd, or delay'd their Convocations for their own Convenience, and the Ease of their Clergy, to such Other times, as they liked better; If in fact, it appears, that sometimes no Convocation at all was held during the whole Session of Parliament; sometimes only One; Often the Parliament and Convocations met at three different times; nay and in different Years too; I think no Demonstration can be plainer in a Matter of this Nature than this must make it; that the Parliament and Convocations had no such Necessary Relation to, or Dependence upon, One Another, as Dr. A. Asserts; but that the King and the Archbishops were always at liberty to Call them when they thought Good, without any respect to the meeting of the One, in the Assembling of the Other. And if this relation fail, then all that follows must fall with it, and pass only for, what it truly is, a meer Chimera; The issue of a warm Imagination; not the Law or Rule of our Constitution. However let Us hear what He has farther to Offer.

Rights, &c.
pag. 75.

V I. " These Provincial Assemblies, tho' held apart from the Parliament, yet belong'd to it; Met by the Parliamentary no less than the Provincial Writ, and were State Meetings as well as Church Synods.

That these Provincial Assemblies belong'd not to the Parliament, I have sufficiently shewn. That they met not by the Parliament Writ is so plain, that One would wonder how any Author should adventure to Assert that They did. But I must not repeat here, what I have so largely proved before; That the two different Writs by which the Clergy were Called to Parliament and Convocation, do unanswerably prove them to be two Different Assemblies; and, in reverse of Dr. A's pretences, Evince the One, to have neither any Relation to, nor Dependence upon, the Other.

V II. " In them (the two Convocations) Parliamentary Matters were transacted, and Parliamentary Forms and Methods Observed: The Members of Them were intitled to Parliamentary Wages, and Enjoy'd Parliamentary Privileges.

Why Dr. A. adds the Word Parliamentary to the three first of these, I should be glad to know. Nothing is properly Parliamentary, but what is so peculiar to the Parliament, as not to Agree at all, or not to be Equally applicable to any Other Assembly. But now no matters were treated on in Our Convocations; No Forms or Methods Observed in them; No Wages paid to the Members of Them; but what were transacted, observed, and paid, in Our Church Councils, as well as in Them. And yet I hope Dr. A's Parliamentary Affection is not so warm, as to turn them too into Parliamentary Assemblies. As for Parliamentary Privileges they Enjoy'd None before the time of King Henry the 6th, and then that was by Act of Parliament Granted to the Convocation which had always been Enjoy'd by the Parliamentary Convention. A Plain Demonstration that the Convocation was not, as He affirms, by our Constitution, a Parliamentary Convention: For if it had, it would most certainly by the Rules of the same Constitution, have always Enjoy'd the Great Parliamentary Privilege; so late, and that by a positive Law, Extended to it.

V III. " The Inferior Clergy, tho' divided in Place from the Lower Laity, yet JOYN'D with them OFTEN in the same ACTS, and PETITIONS; and were still Esteem'd and Called the Commons Spiritual of the Realm. And what THEY, and the PRELATS (EGO ET REX MEUS) in Convocation did, was long after the Separation spoken of in Our Records as done in Parliament.

Dr. A. must bring some new Evidences of this if He means to be credited; for I will adventure to say He has not yet advanced any One proof of it that will bear an Examination; or that has not had a sufficient Answer.

I X. " These Parliamentary Conventions of the Clergy were held first near the time at which the Laity Met; afterwards with a Latitude: But this Irregularity

"gularity was Reformed before the Reformation of Religion, and their MEETING K. HENRY
 "ING and DEPARTING FIX'D within a DAY of the Assembling, and Dismission the VIIIth.
 "of the Parliament.

How our Convocations have been held, and what respect they have had to the Sessions of our Parliaments, for the last 240 Years, I have before shewn. How truly Dr. A. Represents their near Meeting, and Departing, since; I shall hereafter Enquire. In the mean time, this is clear from what has been already said; That during this Period, our Convocations have not been any such Necessary Assemblies as Dr. A. affirms, Essential to our Constitution, and by Rules thereof Obligated to Attend upon Every Session of Parliament.

But I must not close up this part of our History without taking Notice of One thing more, for which Dr. A. has been pleased to treat me neither with the Civility of a Scholar, nor the Charity of a Christian. I had affirmed, in my Other Treatise, that the main End and Design, for which our Princes were wont to Summon our Convocations, was for their Aid; to Obtain the like Supply of their Clergy there, which they Received from the Laity in Parliament.

Sect. 79:

How true this was I have now in the Course of my History Sufficiently shewn. Our Kings in their Writs of Summons plainly speak it; and scarce a Convocation was Called for the first Hundred Years, without a particular Declaration of it. Being met, for as many Years, little else was done by the Clergy on the Kings Account in them. If they took that Opportunity upon their Own account, to draw up their Grievances; to present them by the Archbishop and Bishops to the King; and by their Mediation to desire a Redress of them; yet was not this the End for which the King Assembled them; nor did they often find it, by the success of their Complaints, so to be. In short; the Points which I affirm'd, I still abide by: 1st * That the Main End of our Princes in Calling these Assemblies at all, before the Act of Submission, was to obtain a Supply from the Clergy, (This I have abundantly proved already :) And 2^{dly} * That the reason of their Calling them at the time of the Parliaments Session afterwards, was that the Grants which they should make, and which were wont to be Confirm'd by their Own Spiritual Authority before, might be Ratified by the Authority of Parliament Afterwards.

Well; and what says Dr. A. to this matter? "Why this is so FALSE and SCANDALOUS a REFLEXION upon our PRINCES, and those MEETINGS; and upon the CONSTITUTION its self, that I wonder how it could drop from the Pen of an English Divine, that had any Regard left for his Church or his Country: And how EVEN THIS WRITER, as meanly as he may think of SYNODS, and their Powers, could yet prevail with himself to say it.

Rights, &c.
 pag. 269.

The Man is in a Passion, and therefore must be excused if He do's not Write so Accurately, any more than so Civilly, as He ought to do. But pray Good, Little, Angry Sir, what have State Convocations, or as you call them, Parliamentary Ones, to do with Church Synods, and Their Powers? Or who Authorized you to apply what was spoken of the One, to the Nature, Business, or Power of the Other? Ecclesiastical Synods, we all know, were called for other purposes: They met not for State Affairs; and even when they did Grant Money, yet that was not the End, much less the main End, for which they Met. It was just the contrary in our State Convocations: They were held for Civil, not Ecclesiastical Affairs. And tho', in process of time, Church Business was sometimes transacted in them, yet that was not the End for which the King Called them; but an Occasional Use, which, being met, the Archbishop and Bishops made of Them.

Let us then Lay aside the Ecclesiastical Synods of our Archbishops Assembling, and reduce the Point to its proper Bounds: That the Great End for which the King Called, or rather Commanded our Metropolitans to Call their Convocations, was for the Aid of his Clergy: To receive that Help from them in those Assemblies, which they did not care to be brought to Grant in Parliament. And upon this true State of it, let this Warm Orator flourish as He please; I dare affirm He shall never be able to Answer the Arguments, which I have from plain, and positive Records, produced in Proof of it.

But I will Examine his Reasons, after having once again premised, what I have elsewhere Observed; That to make Good the Negative, that this was not the Great End for which our Princes required these Convocations to be held, it is not sufficient to shew that some Other things were Done by the Clergy when they

K. HENRY they were Assembled, but that it was for that Other Business, and not for their Aid, that they were Called by the King.

the VIIIth.
Sect. 80.
Ibid. pag.
270, 271.

To Dr. A's first Argument; That "Money has been as frequently given, by Parliaments as by Convocations, and has been as much the design of Calling them; Nevertheless the Reason and End of those State Meetings, is not to be fetch'd purely from Money, but Redress of Grievances; I have many things to reply. That the Redress of Grievances in those Cases wherein it properly becomes a Parliamentary Affair, is such a Work, as can be transacted no where else but in Parliament, and therefore must necessarily be done there. Will Dr. A. please to tell us, what Other Peculiar Affairs there were for Convocations heretofore, that could not have been transacted but only in those State Meetings? And then shew, that those Affairs were as duly, and constantly the Business of the One, as the Redress of Grievances has been of the Other. The High Court of Parliament has always been the Supreme Court of Judicial Determinations, as well as of the Legislature of this Realm. Its Power, and Business, has been not only to Defend the Kingdom by their Counsel and Aid, from its Enemies abroad; but to Regulate the Civil Government, to make new Laws, to Repeal Others already made; to hear Causes; to offer and receive Impeachments against the Greatest Ministers of State; And, in One Word, to keep the whole Policy in Order at Home. To exclude all the Other Ends of its Assembling, and to reduce the whole to Aid, would therefore be as Absurd, as it would be False. But what is there like this in the Convocation? The Civil Interests of the Church, the State of the Clergy, for that very Purpose Call'd to Parliament, were to take care of. For the Spiritual Policy, Each of our Archbishops had his Provincial Council, which He Summon'd, Held, Managed, and Dismiss'd at his Will; as the needs of the Church required. The Convocation was an Assembly Called by the King for State Ends; and of those, I again affirm the main to have been for Aid; to Demand and Obtain those Supplies of the Clergy there, which they would not be prevailed with to Grant Elsewhere.

Again: Can Dr. A. shew me in all the Clause Rolls, where our Kings have in their Writs of Summons expressly declared their design in Calling of their Parliaments to have been for their Aid? Where at the Opening of the Parliaments, our Lord Chancellors, by their Order, have Year after Year, Demanded a Supply of Money, and seldom or never mention'd any other End of their Meeting; any Other Design of the King in Calling of Them. Yet this I have shewn, not Once or Twice, but constantly to have been the Case of the Convocation. Our Kings in their Writs have avow'd the Aid of the Clergy to have been the sole Reason of their Call; And by their Commissioners, when met, have Declared it to be the main Business, on which He expected they should Consult.

There is therefore no Manner of Parallel in the Case between the Parliament, and Convocations, as to this Matter: Nor can any Argument be drawn from what is the End of holding the One, to what has been, or ought to be, the End of Calling the Other.

But Dr. A. Go's on; and in answer to what I alledged not as a Matter of Argument, but only as an Occasional reflection; viz. That little was done in these Antient Convocations more than Granting of Subsidies to the King; will Undertake to shew as a Second Argument against my Assertion, that this is a Great Mistake; for that much Business besides was done by them; nay that we Owe to these Meetings the whole Body of our Provincial Constitutions. Should He be in the right, yet still this would not come up to the Point, unless He could also shew of this Other Business, as I have done of their Subsidies, that it was for the doing of it, that the King Required them to be Assembled: The Question here being not what the Clergy did in their Convocations when they were met together; but what it was that Moved our Princes, at any time, to Assemble them. However I will follow him in his Proofs; and see what He has to Offer, even in a Matter not much to the Purpose, to justify his Wrath, or Rather his Fury, against me, for having spoken the plain truth in this Matter.

"That the Clergy when met had a great deal of other Business to do, besides raising money, appears from Numerous, and Undeniable Arguments. And if Dr. W. cannot find 'em, as he says, it is because he has not look'd where they ought to be found, or at least not with that care He ought to do in Order to find Them. Had He look'd into Spelman, or Lytwood, methinks He might

 Dr. A. speaks? And where did They do this? Were They the Convocation Clergy?

 look into Spelman and Lynwood, the Authors to whom He sends me, and see Sect. provin-

Conventions? And then let him remember that the Kings Design in Calling of the Clergy together, was not for passing even those few, but for their Counsel and Aid; the meaning of which Phrase, I shall more fully Explain by and by.
 In short, as These Canons, and Constitutions, were the most of them made in the Provincial Councils of our Archbishops held for Church Affairs, by their own Me- tropolitocal Authority, so at the Passing a great part of them, the Provincial Bi- shops and PRELATS only were present: And for this I am ready to enter on a particular Proof, whenever Dr. A. pleases.

But he goes on. " Had he (Dr. W.) look'd into our Historians as nicely as ' Rights, &c.
 " he would be thought to have done, particularly into Harpsfield and Antiquit. pag. (272.)
 " Britann. He would have found, that they were taken up often in foreign, and " more often in domestick affairs, of the Utmost importance: In deputing some " of their Members to General Councils, (a) and preparing their Instructions: (a) Harpsfield, " In restoring peace to the Church, when it was broken by the Clashing of pag. 610, 611.

 some of these matters in their State Assemblies, when the frequency of those (d) Ibid. 618.
Meetings had much abated the Usage of Provincial Councils in our Church; and 654. brought our Metropolitans to Consult of the Affairs of the One, very often in the Other, I do not deny. But then when they did this, they Acted not as a Con- vocation, but as a Council. The King Conven'd them for his Own State Ends; but being met for those, the Archbishop, by his Ecclesiastical Authority, Employ'd them about Other matters than those for which they had first been Assembled.

And accordingly the Earliest of Dr. A's Instances Rises no higher than the 1st of King Henry the 4th. The preceding Age, when our Archbishops kept up a more Exact Distinction between the Kings Convocations, and their Own Synods, afforded him none of these weighty Remarks. Then the Business of the Convo- cation was Money; and Money only. For that they met; and little more than that, was therein debated of by them. But in process of Time a Confusion ensued: The Archbishops turn'd their Convocations into Synods; and took the Opportunity of the Clergy's meeting upon the Affairs of the State, to deliberate with them about those of the Church.

However that I may not seem to Decline, rather than to Answer his Allegations; let us come to Particulars, and see what his Instances will amount to.
 3 In the Synod of 1408, to which he first refers, the Clergy, he says, deputed 3 Harpsf. pag.

 that they did; but then withal I do affirm, that that meeting was a proper Ec- clesiastical Council, and not a Royal-Convocation: And for this I refer to what I have before alledged in Proof of it.

His Second Synod is of the same kind: It was held the same Year; Called upon the Occasion of the same Schism, and was purely and properly an Ecclesiastical Council, not a State-Convocation.

The third Instance from 4 Harpsfield is the very same with those already con- 4 Harpsf. pag.
 sider'd. It belongs to the same Synods, and the same Business; and therefore 608.
 the same Answer may suffice to have been given to it.

His 5 fourth Testimony is from the Synod, of 1399. Now that Convention met 5 Ibid. pag. 618.
 by the Sole Authority of the Prior and Chapter of Cant. in the Vacancy of the See:
 The King neither Summon'd it to sit; nor made any Use of it when sitting; more than to pass a Complement upon them for their Kindness to Him, and to beg their Prayers on his behalf. This therefore again was no Royal Convocation; nor can

To his last ¹ Instance, I have two things to offer: 1st; It was not properly a State Convocation: It met by the Popes, as well as by the Kings Authority: It met wholly about Ecclesiastical Business; and, which Dr. A. ought especially to consider, no Parliament met either with it, or near it. But to allow that it was nevertheless a Convocation; such an Assembly as we are now discoursing of. Did the King Call it to resist the Papal Encroachments and Provisions? Was that his main End; nay, or was it any part of his Design, in directing the Convening of it? Let the Reader judge by a short touch of the History of it. ² The King, with the Assent of his Council, had granted the Bishoprick of Eli in Commendam to Lewis Archbishop of Roan; and Pope Eugenius Confirm'd the Kings Grant to Him. By this Royal and Papal Provision He became seised of it, April the 3^d. 1437. The Archbishop of Canterbury stood out a long time against the King in this Affair; and great Contests arose between Him and the Proctors of the Commendatory Bishop upon this Account. To support Himself the better in this Controversy, wherein He had both the King, and the Pope, against Him; in the Synod before mentioned of 1438. called by the Popes Order for choosing of Proctors for the Council of Ferrara, the Archbishop proposed this, as the Second Cause of his Convening of his Clergy: ³ "That the Pope, by his Letters, had provided, and committed the Church of Eli, by way of Commendam, to the Archbishop of Roan; which being a new thing, and of ill Example, as he there shew'd by many Reasons; might turn to the great loss and detriment of the Church of England. And therefore, He told them, that he would have them to Consult, and Deliberate about it.—This is the Case to which Dr. A. refers us: Let him now tell us, whether He thinks this in good earnest to have been One of the Causes for which the King caused this Council to be held; which after all was truly an Ecclesiastical Synod, not a State Convocation; and apply'd its self both in this and the next Session, only to the Affairs of the Church.

But it may be his next Proofs will be more pertinent; let us take a View of them. ⁴ "But above all; had he (Dr. W.) look'd into the few old Acts, and Journals of Convocations saved out of the general Wreck, and yet remaining, He would have found that the Articuli Reformandi, or Gravamina Cleri, were put up almost at every Session: That Subsidies were seldom Given without them, and that they were suggested often, when no Subsidies were Given.—Now to allow again for the truth of all this, which yet Dr. A. wrote at a Venture; not upon any Examination that he had then made into these Particulars; and against which many just Exceptions might be taken, were I at liberty to enter on a full enquiry into these Matters: My former question still returns; Did the King Summon the Clergy for this Purpose, to draw up these Articles and Grievances; Or was this their Own Work, which they took care Themselves to do, when they were Met together for the Other End, and Purpose, for which I affirm, they were Generally wont to be Called by Him? Let the Kings Own Writs, the most Authentick Testimony that can be recurr'd to in this Case, determine it between Us. If he can shew me from them, that this was the Avow'd End for which the King Call'd them, as I will presently from the same Writs shew Him, that the Other, which I offer'd, viz. for their Aid and Assistance, was; I shall yield. Otherwise, I must again desire Him to shew, for what Other Purpose besides that of Money, the King Assembled the Clergy in Convocation; not what Other Business they Themselves did, when they Came together there.

Why yes, something of this Dr. A. will shew; and that indeed is to the Purpose: Let us hear how he do's it. ⁵ "Reforming Grievances (says He) was so much the END of the Clergies Conciliary Meetings, that the ARCHBISHOP mention'd it oftentimes in his very PROVINCIAL MANDATE. It would have been more to his purpose, could He have said that the KING had done it in his ROYAL WRIT. But we will be content with what he is pleas'd to give us, since we cannot have what we desire. What are his Instances of this? Why He offers two; the Synods of 1328, and 1341. A Scanty Induction, if pertinent; if otherwise, a poor and ridiculous Fallacy. Well, and what Synods were these two? He tells us himself, They were PROVINCIAL COUNCILS STRICTLY so called? So that in short then, all this Argument Ends, at last, in this little Sophistry; that the Archbishop in two Mandats of Councils strictly so called, speaks of the Reformation tion of Grievances as the Great Business of their Meeting: And therefore, The Reformation of Grievances; and not Subsidies, was the main End for which our Kings Caused the Clergy to be Called to Convocations, and the Great Use they made of them when they were Assembled.

But I proceed. ¹ "As they (the Clergy) were always sure of his (the Archbishop's) good Offices, so sometimes it has so happen'd, that He himself has stood in need of theirs: And accordingly the Subject of their Debates has been how to Screen an Archbishop from the displeasure of his Prince. With what strange security do's this Man write? and refer us to Authors, for that wherein they speak directly contrary to his Allegations from them. Take this story in Dr. Heylins own Words; and let the bare relation of it be, as it is, a sufficient Answer to the Use which he would make of it.

² "Together with this Parliament was held a Convocation, as the Custom is: ² In the beginning whereof, an Instrument was produced under the Seal of Archbishop Grindall for substituting Dr. Jo. Elmore, then Bishop of London (a Prelat of great Parts and Spirit, but of a contrary humor to the said Archbishop) to preside therein: Which in the incapacity of the Other he might have challeng'd, as, of right, belonging to Him. Nothing else Memorable in this Convocation, but the admitting Dr. William Day, the Dean of Windsor, to be Prolocutor of the Clergy; the passing of a Bill for the Grant of Subsidies; and a Motion made unto the Prelats, in the Name of the Clergy, for putting the late Book of Articles in Execution. (So wonderfully was this Convocation Employ'd in Other Affairs, besides the Grant of Subsidies!) "Nothing else done WITHIN those WALLS, tho' much was agitated, and resolved on by those of Grindall's party in their PRIVATE MEETINGS. Some of the hotter Heads amongst them had proposed in Public, that the Clergy should decline all Business, even the Grant of Subsidies, till the Archbishop was restored to his Place and Suffrage. But this could find no Entertainment amongst Wiser Men. Others advis'd, That a Petition should be drawn in the Name of both Houses, by which her Majesty might be moved to that Restitution. And tho' I find nothing to this Purpose in the Public Registers (which may sufficiently evince that it NEVER PASS'D AS AN ACT OF THE CONVOCATION) yet I find that such a Petition was agreed upon, and drawn into Form by Dr. Tobie Matthews, then Dean of Christ Church, and by SOME FRIENDS presented to her Majesties Sight, &c. This is Dr. Heylins Account of this Matter: I shall only add that so far were these Friends from SCREENING the GOOD ARCHBISHOP by what they did, from the displeasure of his Prince, that the Historian expressly takes notice, ³ "that no such Answer was given to this Petition, as by his Friends had been Expected; but that He continued under his Suspension till the time of his Death.

³ Ibid. p. 250.

Dr. A. goes on: ⁴ "Sometimes they have consulted of Measures for Advancement of Learning, and Encouragement of Universities; and have come to Resolutions very much to the Honour, and Advantage of those famous Bodies, and have, by that means, made way for them when under a Cloud to the Favour and Bounty of Others. Dr. A. is here again upon his Old Fallacy. The Conventions to which he refers were those of 1417, and 1421. The One a profess'd Ecclesiastical Council; the Other called meerly by the Authority of the Archbishop, not by any Order, or Mandate from the King. Now what is it but a Manifest departure from the point in Debate, concerning the End of our Kings in Calling of Convocations, and the Use which they generally made of them, to entertain Us with the Story of what was done in such Assemblies, as the King Call'd not; tho' sometimes, as in these very Cases, He did indeed make a profitable Use of their Meeting.

⁴ Rights, &c. pag. (273.)

⁵ "At some times the Regulation and Improvement of Grammar Schools at other the looseness and disorders of the Stage, have been the Subject of their Debates. He should have said, have been the End for which our Kings have Assembled them, and the main Use they have made of them when met. For there is no Controversy between Dr. A. and me, Whether the Clergy in Convocation, did not frequently Debate of, and Determine, concerning Other Matters besides Subsidies. Here therefore we must again enquire not what they did, but what it was for which the Prince Assembled them; and should we fail even there, it would be no great wonder. The times, when these Convocations sate, were very Critical. The One met towards the latter End of King Henry the 8th's Reign,

⁵ Rights, &c. ibid.

HENRY when Archbishop Cranmer drove on the good Work of the Reformation, as fast as he saw it prudent, and Advisable to do: The Other about the Middle of Queen Marys, when they were as diligent to undo, what King Edward the sixth and his Father before had done. So that we ought not to think it at all strange, if in such times, when both our Governors, and their Clergy, had such Affairs upon their Hands, and were so Eager in the pursuit of them; Our Convocations were also more busie and employ'd, than they had commonly been for a hundred years before.

Sec. 83.

But we will take his own Proofs. In 1555. The Clergy in Convocation deliberated, he says, about the Regulation and Improvement of Grammar Schools. In a Synod which did so much more, and more considerable Church Business, I wonder why that Instance alone was pick'd out by him. On that very day (which in my Notes is January the 8th. not the 7th, as he quotes it;) they debated about the Propriety of Certain Words, in order to the Translation of the New Testament; to say nothing of many Other things which were debated of in this Assembly. There was then no want of Church Business to be done in this Synod: But was this nevertheless the main design of the Queen in Calling of it? Let the minutes themselves which remain of this Convocation determine between us; where we are told that the Prolocutor being presented, at the Second day of their Meeting, the Clergy were order'd to return, and choose Eight, or Ten of their House to come up to the Lords, with their Prolocutor to hear what was to be declared to them not only on the King and Queens Behalf, but also of the Cardinals (Poole) concerning the Public good of the Realm and Church. What was said to them when they came up, I shall set down in the Words of the Minutes themselves, as being the least liable to exception; "Quibus vice Omnium Dom. Eliens. dixit, Unam Causam hujus Conventus Provincialis esse, uti Prelati & Clerus Cant. Provinciae illustrissimis Dominis Regi & Reginae, multo ere alieno gravatis, & pecunie penuria laborantibus, de aliquo Grato Subsidio Eis elargiendo subveniant: Commemorans maxima illa Beneficia, quae dignitas Regia huic Clero haecenus impenderat, tam remittendo primos fructus, & perpetuas Decimas, quam etiam restituendo de sua Gratia Clero omnia illa Beneficia sive Sacerdotia Unita, quae olim Monasteriis Collegiis, &c. unita fuerunt. ---" This was what was order'd to be said to Them ex Parte Regis & Reginae. As for the Remainder, that which was to be declared to them from the Cardinal, it concerns not our present Debate, and therefore I shall not need to make any transcript of it.

Altho' then not only that other Business which Dr. A. mentions, but much more, had He thought fit to take notice of it, was done in this Convocation; yet even here the main End of the Queen in holding this Synod was for their Aid; which accordingly they, in the first place, took into their Consideration, and declared their Agreement to it, at the very next Session. Indeed in the Other Convocation 1541: not Only no such Aid was at all treated of in that first Session of it, but the King himself declar'd, by the Archbishop, to them; that He had call'd the Prelats and Clergy together for Other Purposes. The Words of the Archbishop to this Assembly, as soon as he had admitted the Prolocutor of the Lower House are remarkable, and may deserve to be particularly taken notice of. "Tunc exposuit Eis, EX PARTE REGIS, quod intentio Ejus erat ut ipsi inter se deliberarent de REFORMANDIS ERRORIBUS, &c. & ibi tradidit Prolocutori quosdam libros Examinand. et ut conficerent leges de Symonia vitanda, & referrent judicia sua prox. Sessione." Dr. A. therefore needed not to have singled out one particular point from a Synod whose whole Debates turn'd on these Matters. But how do's this contradict my Affertion? Or prove that because this particular Convocation of 1541. was called by the King for Church-Affairs; therefore these Affairs, and not Subsidies, were the Main, or rather Only End, of our Kings Assembling such Conventions? If Dr. A. can make up a fair Induction of Convocations Call'd upon such other Accounts as he asserts to have been the Proper End of their Meeting, and the Main Use which our Kings made of Them being met; He will then indeed do somewhat to invalidate my Affertion. But otherwise a single Instance (nay or several more, should he be able to discover any such) will only shew that I had reason to limit my Proposition, as accordingly I did, in the very passages which himself Cites, and Grounds his Quarrel against me upon; "All the Use that was GENERALLY made of them, was to concur with the Other Estates in Granting Money to the King; which having done they were COMMONLY"

“ dismiss’d without entering on any Other Business: “ The main design our Princes K. HENRY “ seem to have had in Assembling these Convocations, &c. was to get Money from the VIIIth.
 “ them. --- This was the Great Use the King was wont to make of our Convocations.
 “ --- For the most part the great End our Kings had in summoning of them was to “ get Money from them. These are the Passages which Dr. A. himself recites as the most Obnoxious in my Book; and all these amount to no more than this;
 that this was Usually the Chief design which our Kings had in appointing of these Meetings; but is so far from denying, that it rather implies, that sometimes they might have some Other End for their Summoning of Them, and something else for them to do when they Came together.

This therefore might be a full, and fair Reply, to his last Allegation; the only pertinent Instance he has yet brought. But indeed if my Notion of this very Assembly be right, even this Instance will prove as little to the purpose as any of the foregoing: And I shall Offer it with the Greater Assurance, not only because I am fully convinced of the truth of it; but because whether it be allow’d of by Dr. A. or no, my Cause is in no danger. My Opinion then is, that that last Synod of 1541. was a proper Ecclesiastical Council, as well as a State Convocation; and in that Capacity did Those things, One of which Dr. A. has quoted against me.

For the better clearing of which Notion I must observe that before the 25th of King Henry the viijth, as our Kings had a Right to require the Archbishops to Summon their Clergy together in Convocation, whenever they thought it necessary for their Affairs, that they should be Assembled; so our Metropolitans had likewise a double Right, which by the Act of Submission, pass’d that Year, they were deprived of: 1st: That they could also, at their own Pleasure, freely Call their Provincial Prelats, and Clergy together, to deliberate with them about the Affairs of the Church, in a proper Church Synod. And 2dly: That having Conven’d them in Convocation, for State Ends, in Obedience to the Kings Writ; They could either by their Order Require them, or by their Allowance permit them, to Enter upon Spiritual Affairs; and thereby make Use of them at once both as a Council, and as a Convocation.

Being by that Statute tied up, so that from thence forth they could neither Assemble any Synod without the Authority of the Kings Writ; nor having call’d them as a Convocation, could Authorize them to Act as an Ecclesiastical Council without his License; We have now no Means left to judge what kind of Assembly the Clergy thus conven’d are, but by the Powers it has from the King when met, and the Business which, in vertue of those Powers, it do’s transact. If the Clergy be call’d together by the Usual Writ of a Convocation issued out from the King, and Executed by the Archbishop, after the manner it was wont to be, before the Passing of that Act; the Clergy so conven’d are, by that Summons, a Convocation; and Authoriz’d to Enter upon any such Business as a Convocation was wont heretofore to do. And therefore so long as they continued to dispose of their own Money, they needed no other License or Authority, (notwithstanding the 25th H. 8. c. 19.) to Debate of, and agree upon any Subsidy that they thought good for the King. They have also thereby a sufficient power to consider of their Civil Grievances, and to make any Address, or Request to the Prince, which they shall think necessary with relation thereunto. But still, by this Summons, they are no more than a Convocation for Civil or State Purposes; a Church Synod they are not, unless they are farther Empowr’d. When therefore the King, having thus caused them to be Summon’d together in Convocation, Grants his License unto them, according to that Act, to enter upon Church-Business; He thereby makes the Assembly, which before was legally no more than a State-Convocation, from thenceforth become a Proper Provincial Council. He gives it a new Power which before it had not; and by that means puts it in a Capacity of doing such Business as before it might not Lawfully have done.

Now this was the Case of the Meeting in 1541. The King order’d the Archbishop to Call his Clergy together in Convocation. They met by Authority of the Kings Writ, and in Obedience to the Archbishops Mandate. Had the King stopp’d there, they would have been only a Convocation; and their proper Business would have been, Consilium & Auxilium; to debate of, and to grant an Aid to the Prince, for the Defence of the Church as it is a Member of the State. But the King had at this time another Design in Assembling of the Clergy, and another

K. HENRY
the VIIIth.

Use to make of Them. He therefore commanded them, by the Arch-Bishop, and in Consequence of that Command He Licensed them, as the Statute directed, to deliberate about the Reformation of Errors, and other Proper Conciliary Matters: And by so doing, he not only Enlarged the Powers, but (in the Eye of the Law) Alter'd the very Nature of the Assembly. He made it a Council, as well as a Convocation; and in that Capacity it debated of and did those things, One of which Dr. A. is pleased to object to me.

As for his next Instance (which according to his usual Confusion runs us a hundred Years backward) relating to the Auncel-Weight; it has been already consider'd in its proper place, and thither I refer Dr. A. for my Answer to it.

To his last parting Remark, that I confess the King frequently sent his Prohibitions to the Convocation, and that this implies that they were otherwise Employ'd than in Money matters; I reply in short; that to Convocations call'd by his Own Writ, (and of such I must be understood, when I speak of the Kings design in calling of them) no Prohibition was ever sent. Let Dr. A. first shew that his Allegation is true, and then I will consider what is needful to be said to take off the force of it.

* Ibid. pag. 269.

And thus have I follow'd this Author, thro' all that he has Offer'd within the Period, and even beyond the Time I have hitherto been treating of; to shew that Our Kings had some Other Ends in issuing out their Writs for the Assembling of our Convocations than to obtain an Aid of them; and that this was not the Great or Only Use, which they generally made of them. What he farther adds from the Convocations of the last Century, will more properly be consider'd as I pass thro' the History of it. In the mean time let the Equitable Reader now judge, What this warm Man has at last brought in Opposition to my Assertion, with which He is so much Offended? Or how he has proved it³ to be that False and Scandalous Reflection upon our Princes and those Meetings, and even upon the Constitution its self, that at his first setting out, He charg'd it to be?

Sect. 85.

Shall I need in return to this Noise, and Nothing Else, to resume again the several Instances by which I have shewn my Assertion to be most undoubtedly true, in the several parts both of this, and the foregoing Chapters; and thereby prove yet more plainly than I have already done, that Dr. W. did both know something of these Matters, and did not dissemble his knowledge of them: And therefore, is neither to be Pittied for his Ignorance, nor yet to be Detested for a much worse Quality; As in his kind Dilemma, He is pleased to state the Case, upon this Occasion? I will then briefly declare the Ground of my Assertion from these two Considerations, which Dr. A. who is so great a Master in these Matters, will, no doubt, quickly shew me to have been as much mistaken in, as I was in the Position which I built upon them, (1st) From the Original of these Kind of Convocations? And (2dly) From the Authentic Testimonies of those very Writs, by which they have been Summon'd; and the constant Intimations of the Kings Pleasure to them, when they came together.

(1) As for the first Original of These Assemblies, I have before shewn that it was about the time of King Edward the 2d, that they began to be settled; and the Occasion of them was this. His Father, King Edward the 1st, had by the Premunitory Clause brought the Lower Clergy, as by his Other Writs he had done the Lay Commons, to Parliament. His design in so doing was to demand, and obtain the more easily, from time to time, an Aid of them there, than He thought He could do in their own separate Meetings. The Clergy to avoid this, industriously declined coming to any Resolutions of a Subsidy in those Conventions. They alledged that the Regular Clergy being Call'd but in a small number thither; they could not do any thing without consulting together in a fuller Body, in some Provincial Meeting of their Own. Sometimes the Other Clergy Either came not at all, or but in a very little proportion, to it. They stood upon their Exemptions; and pretended that they were not obliged to Obey a Lay Summons: And tho' the King provided against this, by issuing out Provincial Writs to the two Archbishops to Summon the Clergy of their respective Provinces to Parliament; yet they had an Answer ready to that too; that the Archbishop could not Lawfully Summon them out of his Own Province; and so One half of the Clergy had still a Pretence for their absence, notwithstanding they were Called by their Archbishop to Parliament.

By

By these and the like means, they soon brought the King under a Necessity of HENRY the VIIIth. complying with them; and leaving them to meet in their Own Provincial Congregations; where they were more easily induced to gratify his desires. This therefore gave the first Ground to the setting up of those Assemblies which we properly Call Convocations; and which were in this especially easily to be distinguish'd from the Provincial Councils of those times; that the One after a little while, (when things Settled into this Method) were called by the Archbishop in Obedience to the Kings Writ; the Other by his Own Metropolitcal Authority; without any Order, or Authority from the King so to do. The One were Assembled for the obtaining of those Aids of the Clergy there, which they refused to Grant in Parliament: The Other for such Ecclesiastical Affairs, as the Circumstances of the Church required their deliberation of.

If therefore the End of this Assembly may be taken (as in all reason it ought to be) from that which Apparently gave the first Occasion to the Introduction of it; and, but for which, there never had been any such Assemblies Conven'd by the King at all; then the Aid of the Clergy must be allow'd to have been the main End of our Convocations; As certain it is, and I have before shewn, it was the reason for which our Princes did Consent first, to the meeting of the Clergy after this manner; and afterwards did Require them, whenever they wanted their Aid, to be thus Called together by their Archbishops.

(2) And for this I appeal to their Own Writs of Summons; which was the Other proof I proposed to make of my Assertion. For if in those Publick Instruments it be avow'd that the Cause why our Kings commanded the Archbishops to Summon their Convocations, was for their Aid: If they therein press and require them to do what in them lay to induce their Clergy to Grant their Aid to them: If this, and this only, be Alledged as the End of their Assembling; and if this be the Language not of One or Two such Writs, but of Maney, nay of most of them, till they fall into a Common Form, which implied the same thing; Then I conceive it must follow, that as we cannot any Way better know what was the true End and Occasion of these Meetings, than from the solemn Declarations of Those who Call'd them; so neither ought we to doubt but that That ought to be accounted the true Occasion of their Assembling, which these Writs set forth to Us as such.

Sect. 86.

To proceed therefore to a particular Enquiry into this matter: One of the Antientest Convocation Writs that I have met with, is that of King Edward the 1st. Ao. 1290. a few years before he Call'd the Clergy to Parliament. The Province of Canterbury had granted him a Supply in their Meeting at Eli, October the 2^d. He therefore directs his Writ to the Archbishop of York to Call his Clergy together for the same End: --- Cum Venerabilis Pater Joh. Cant. Archiepiscopus, & ejusdem Provincia Clerus totus Decimam de Anno presenti nobis liberaliter concesserunt --- paternitatem vestram affectuose Requirimus & Rogamus quod nobis si placeat Curialitatem consimilem, vel aliam honorabilem & decentem concedere, & vestra Provincia Clerum ad Eam nobis similiter concedendam, modis quibus melius Expedire videritis, inducatis.

Anno 1310. The Archbishop of Canterbury expressly conven'd the Clergy of his Province, at the Kings Request, to anticipate the Payment of the Triennial Tenth, imposed by the Pope upon the Church.

The next Year, 1311. The Archbishop of York summon'd his Clergy in like manner by Order of the Kings Writ; ad tractandum nobiscum de prefato Subsidio per dictum Dominum nostrum Regem a Nobis petito, & ad consentiend. & Faciend. ulterius super Illo quod Communi videbitur Judicio faciendum.

Two Years after Ann. 1313. The King having obtain'd a Subsidy of the Clergy of our Province, Order'd the Archbishop of York to Convene his for the same purpose. The Archbishop Obey'd, and Summon'd them in these Terms: Nos etiam ex parte ejusdem nostri Regis cum Magna fuerimus instantia requisiti quod Praelatos & Clerum nostra Provincia Efficaciter inducere Curaremus, ut consimile Subsidium ob causam praedictam eidem Domino nostro Regi concederent.

Anno 1314. The King issued out his Writ for the Clergy of our Province, to meet the morrow after the Ascension, Ad tractand. -- super Competenti Auxilio a Clero Provincia vestra Cant. nobis impendendo. The words are the same in the Writ of that Year for the Clergy of York, who were to meet the morrow after Trinity for the same End.

K. HENRY
the VIIIth.

Anno 1316. The inscription of the Convocation Writ upon the Clause Roll, is, De Convocatione Cleri faciend. pro Subsidio Regis, &c. 9 E. 2. m. 17. d. And the Purport of it is the same, ad tractand. & consentiend. --- de certo Subsidio nobis ut premittitur faciend. The whole Writ runs to the same Effect, and was alike sent into Both Provinces.

The Archbishop of Canterbury holding a Provincial Council the same Year after Michaelmas, the King directed his Letters to it after the same Manner; as in my account of this Year may more fully be seen. Having obtain'd what he desir'd in our Province, He order'd a Convocation to be Call'd for the same End in the Other. He declared his Necessities to them; Order'd their Convention, and then pray'd them de Nous faire ascun Covenable Eide --- as may in the Writ more fully be seen.

Anno 1318. The King renew'd his Request in the like manner to the Clergy of York. The Archbishops Mandate thus expresses it; that He had been with great Instance required to Call his Province together, and there effectually to induce them, ut ab eodem Clero sibi ex premissa Causa competens Subsidium concedatur. For this He calls them ad tractandum in dicta Convocatione --- super negotio antedicto, ac ad faciendum ulterius super illo quod Communi videbitur Judicio faciend. He wrote also in like manner to the Clergy of our Province; whom he required the Archbishop to Assemble in Crastino Purificat. super hujusmodi Subsidio Nobis faciend. as the words of the Roll are.

It would be too tedious, or as Dr. A. speaks, too Dry a Task to pass thus minutely thro' all the following Years. I will therefore take the Liberty to refer the Reader to the foregoing History of my Two last Chapters, who desires a more particular account of this Matter; and Content my self to touch only upon it, at such easie Distances, as may suffice to make my Induction full, and yet not Engage me in an Endless Repetition.

Rot. Claus. 16. Edw. 2. m. 20. is thus intituled. Pro Rege de Subsidio à Clero Provinc. Cant. & Ebor. procurand. The Writ recites the Mischief done by the Scots, and the Kings Resolution to repress them. What charges this would put him to; and what Interest the Church, as well as State, had in this matter; for which he hoped that they also would manus apponere adjutrices: And therefore he Orders each Archbishop to Convene his Clergy; Et in eodem Concilio expositis Negotiis & Necessitatibus predictis, quanto utilius & expressius poteritis Auxilium Competens a Prelatis & Clero --- terminis competentibus & festinis nobis solvend. procuratis Concedi.

As Edward the 1st and 2d began, so King Edward the 3d continued these Assemblies: And Aid was still the Great End for which he Call'd them. In his first Year, He order'd our Convocation to meet at Leicester; and required the Archbishop to be there at the time appointed, and to use his labour and diligence que tiel Eide nous soit grantes d'ont nous nous pouvons sentir Comfortes et Aides: &c. The Archbishops Mandate runs to the same effect, He Calls his Clergy, Una nobiscum tractaturi & Ordinaturi super Subsidio & remedio competentibus imponend. in premissis. The remedy spoken of was that of a mistake committed in the Parliament at Lincoln, which hindred the Clergy from Granting a Supply there. This I mention least any one should think some of Dr. A's Business might possibly be couch'd under that doubtful Expression.

4. Edward the 3d the Clause Roll is thus intituled; Pro Rege, de Auxilio habendo a Clero pro resistentia Guerra Francia. And the Writ requires the Archbishops to Call their Convocations, Manus apponere adjutrices: And that they should Eis dicta Negotia & Pericula imminencia serius Exponere; and thereby induce them quod in tanto necessitatis articulo tale Nobis Subsidium faciant pro tantis periculis evitandis, quod per vestram & ipsorum subventionem Jura & Honorem nostrum & totius Regni nostri Conservare, ipsosque & totum Populum nostrum ab hostium incurribus tueri & protegere valeamus.

7. Edward 3d. The King thus Writes to the same effect; that Considering the imminent danger which threatned them, and that omnes fideles nostri pro supportandis Oneribus defensionis Regni, &c. manus tenentur apponere adjutrices, they should Assemble the Convocations to treat about the premises, Vestrumque & suum Consilium & Auxilium impensur. The very same Phrase Occurs in the title of the next Writ of the same Year: De Convocatione Cleri faciend. ad Tractand. super Consilio & Auxilio Regi concedendo. And that this Counsel and Aid, related to their Debating about a suitable Subsidy to be Granted to him, the Body of the Writ shews; which recites first the Kings Confidence in the Archbishop, quod pro defendendo & recuperando Corona nostra Regia Juribus nobis vigilanter velitis assistere, & in Opportunitatibus quantum ad vos attinet efficaciter Opem ferre: Then gives an Account of his Expedition into Scotland; and how by that means innumerable & quasi infinitos sumptus nos effundere Oportuit. That nevertheless Other Affairs broke out, in quibus Vestro & aliorum Prelatorum & Cleri Regni nostri Consilio & Auxilio indigemus: And for this End commands the Archbishops to Summon their Convocations, to treat of the same Affairs, vestrumque & suum Consilium & Auxilium impensuri.

The Writ of the next Year, 8 Edward the 3d, is, if possible, yet more full to the same Effect. It expressly requires the Convention of the Clergy ad Tractandum & Consentiendum super aliquo Auxilio competenti --- Nobis concedendo; nor mentions any Other Business. So do those of the 10th, and 11th of Edward the 3d. The Writ to the Archbishop of York 13th of Edward the 3d: is all for Subsidy. In another of the same Year to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Consilium & Auxilium, are again plainly Expounded after the same manner as before: So is it in that of the 16th of the same King to the Archbishop of York. The Writs of the 25th of Edward the 3d. to both Archbishops, expressly require their Convocations to be called for the same purpose. They recite the great Burdens of the King, and the Dangers of the Kingdom: They require the Help of the Clergy, and that to this End they should call them to their several Convocations, Et expositis Eis dictis Negotiis ibidem, ipsos ad aliquod Competens Subsidium Nobis in Auxilium supportationis dictorum Onerum Concedendum cum Efficacia inducat.

I put these things together the more briefly, because I have taken particular Notice of the most of them, as I have pass'd thro' the Years to which these Writs belong; and I have there made exact and particular References to them. The Writs of the 33d of Edward the 3d. differ in words, and are shorter than many of the foregoing: But the sense is still the same. They Recite the gravia Pericula quæ tam per invasiones Scotorum quam aliorum inimicorum nostrorum, &c. tam sanctæ Ecclesiæ quam Regno evenire verisimiliter formidantur: And they order the Convocations to be called; and that there inter vos & ipsos de aliquo salubri & congruo remedio pro Conservatione & Defensione Ecclesiæ & Regni prædictorum contra pericula prædicta Ordinare curetis; Ut ex hoc tam vobis quam dicto Clero in vestris agendis teneamur specialius in futurum.

To hasten to the End of this long Reign: Anno 45. Edward the 3d; the Writs speak fully out as before. They declare the Burdens lying upon the King; Ad quorum Onerum supportationem absque Adjutorio fidelium nostrorum non sufficimus sicut scitis. How the King had thereupon demanded a Supply of them; and now order'd the Archbishops to call their Convocations. Et expositis Eis dictis Negotiis ibidem ipsos ad aliquod Competens Subsidium nobis in Auxilium supportationis dictorum Onerum Concedend. cum efficacia inducere. This was the stile, or rather the very words, of the following Convocation Writs Anno 47 Edward the 3d. the last that remain upon the Clause Rolls.

The First of Richard the 3d, run exactly to the same sense, and require the same thing: That the Archbishops should Cause their Clergy to be Assembled in Convocation after their usual manner; Et eis dictis negotiis, & periculis ibidem plenius expositis & declaratis, ipsos ad Subsidium in hoc casu competens & necessarium in Supportationem dictorum Onerum et Sumptuum nobis concedend. eo specialius et cum efficacia qua magis sciveritis vel poteritis tanta necessitate causante inducat. The like is the form of those of his Second Year. The Writs of the 3d. 4th. 5th. 6th. 7th. 8th. 9th. 10th. 11th. and 12th. are all in the same Words, with those of the Second. Nor are those of the Other Years much different. In this they All agree (that of the 20th Year excepted which runs in general terms) not only in Sense, but even in Expression, that the King requires the Archbishops to Summon their Convocations; Et ipsos ad Subsidium in hoc Casu competens et Necessarium, in supportationem dictorum Onerum Nobis concedend. eo specialius et efficacius quo magis Sciverint aut Poterint, sollicite inducere.

Thus expressly do the Kings Writs, for a Hundred Years together, openly and plainly speak the End of their Commanding these Convocations to be held, to be for the Granting of Aids to them. If in the following times they fell into the more General Expression of Counsel and Aid; yet the Interpretation of the preceding

the VIIIth.

ceding Age sufficiently determines the Sense of those Words; and gives us to understand that they still meant the same thing, and called them together for the same End.

The 2d of King Henry the 4th is in the Old Express form: It recites the sumptuosae et immensae Onera that lay upon him, pro defensione et salvatione Regni, &c. nec non Ecclesiae Sanctae. And it orders the Archbishop to call his Convocation; et ipsos in hac parte ex causa praedicta ad Subsidium in hoc casu Competens et Necessarium --- inducere. The same is the form of his 5th Year. Those of the 7th and 9th of King Henry the 5th run in the like stile; and direct to the same End. From thenceforth the Convocation Writs have been drawn up almost wholly in the same general terms that they now are, and sometimes before were. But then the meaning of them has been all along Explain'd, ex parte Regis to the Convocation; by such Commissioners, as they have been wont to send to it; And Dr. A. too well knows, to need my Information, that what has been declared to them from the King by his Commissioners, as the Cause of his Calling them, has been generally, I might say constantly, for their Aid and Assistance, with a very few Instances, to the Contrary. Those who have Examined the Acts of our Convocations know this to be true; And I am ready from thence to make an Express proof of it, if Dr. A. shall think fit to deny the Allegation, and thereby give me Occasion so to do.

Let this then suffice to shew upon what Grounds my Opinion is founded, which I formerly advanced, and in despite of all his Wrath, do still adhere to, viz. That the Great Design and End of our Princes in requiring their Archbishops to Summon these Convocations, was Generally this; for the Aid of their Clergy. I shall now leave it to Dr. A. to prove (if he can) by the like plain, and Authentic Induction, that any thing else that He shall please to lay down against it, was an Equal, or a more Eminent, and Principal Inducement to them in this Case. Till that be done I shall, I hope, be Excused, if I leave Him to his own Rude, and Unlucky Dilemma, which he was pleas'd to Level at me; "If Dr. A. knows nothing of these things; He is to be pittied for his Ignorance: If He do's, and yet dissembles the knowledge of them, He is to be detested for a much worse Quality. Let him take his own Choice, whether of these He would have the World agree upon: But let him remember that without making some satisfactory proof in this particular, That our Kings had Commonly some Other more primary Ends in Assembling these Convocations than that which I advanced, under One of these Condemnations He must fall, by his Own Sentence; which otherwise, I do assure him, should never have been made my Censure.

CHAP. IX.

Dr. A's Last Argument to prove the Right of the Convocations to Sit and Act in Time of Parliament, drawn from CUSTOM, proposed, and stated. The Insufficiency of it shewn, supposing that there were such a Custom as He pretends: The matter of fact examined; Whether there has been any such Custom or No?

SECT. I.

WE are now come to the last of those Arguments, by which Dr. A. pretends to prove the Right of Our Convocations to Meet and Sit during the Session of every Parliament. I have before shewn, that neither the Canons of the Church have any Authority to confer such a Right upon them; Nor has the Constitution of our Government made the Calling, much less the Meeting, and Sitting of the Convocations, necessarily Concurrent with that of our Parliament. That the Modern pretence of Attendance in this Case, is not only a New Invention; but such as the Practise of above 200 Years, after the settlement of our Great Councils upon their present Establishment, do's apparently contradict. In all which time not One Parliament in Ten had either of the Convocations called together with it; Nor One in twenty, if in thirty, had Both. The truth is the very very Constitution of our Parliament, were men willing to be convinc'd, is of its self an irrefragable Argument to prove that the Convocations, of which we are now discoursing, were never design'd to be either any part of it, or any Attendants upon it. For by that the State of the Clergy is Summon'd together with the Laity, as the Representative Body of the whole Clergy of the Realm; and was intended to Appear on their behalf there. To this Great Council They have had their Writs of Summons ever since the time of King Edward the 1st; and in Obedience to those Writs, they continu'd for several Reigns, to come to it. There they Acted in a National Body, under their Prelats, with the Other Estates in Parliament: And had not their own Wilfulness forc'd our Princes upon Other Measures, there had never been any such Meetings as Those of our present Convocations known in our Country. In short; To this Great Assembly of the three Estates of the Realm, the Clergy are still Called by the Kings Writs, as they ever have been; and the Bishops do still continue to come: And I think no Demonstration can be clearer than this, in a Matter of this Nature; that the Estate of the Clergy being call'd Nationally to Parliament, by the Kings Parliamentary Writs, and being by vertue thereof an Essential Part of that Great Council, and Represented there; the Parliament is thereby compleat in its Ecclesiastical, as well as in its Lay Members; and has no need of any Other Assembly of the Clergy to make up the Integrity of it. This I am sure must be allowed; Or (to omit such other Inconveniences as will attend a Contrary Assertion) it must be granted that our Parliaments for the first 200 Years were a very defective Body; in all which time I have abundantly shewn; that the Two Convocations seldom, or never, met at the same time with them; and very often our Parliaments both met, and rose without any Convocation that may but seem to have had so much as a distant Regard to Them.

To proceed therefore to Dr. A's last Argument, taken from the Custom of our Convocations ever since the 25th of King Henry the 8th, to Meet and Sit in time of Parliament. That so they have done, they tell us is Undeniable: Now this Custom having been thus Observed for above 150 Years last past, do's, they say, give the Clergy a Right thus to Meet and Sit; and therefore they cannot without a great Injustice be denied so to do. This is the Argument; and this I find urged not only by Dr. A. but by some Others, who are not very fond of his Other Notions; but rather disclaim his Parliamentary Pretences, as Vain and Erroneous.

In return to this Allegation, two things there are that will need to be Enquired into for the better discovery of the force, or rather Weakness of it.

1st. Supposing that there has been such a Custom as they Pretend; How far that Custom shall prevail against the Royal Prerogative of the King, and the Jurisdiction of the Metropolitan, and give the Clergy a Right to Meet, and Sit, during the time of Parliament, in despite of Both?

2^{dly}. Whether there has been any such constant and continued Custom, as is pretended in this Case?

But before I enter upon these disquisitions, it will be fit that we take a true state of the matter in debate, that so we may Go on upon a sure Bottom; and know both what it is that is Contended for; and upon what grounds the Claim of Right, in this particular is built.

Sect. 3.

As for the former of these, the Right which Dr. A. in this Case contends for, it is this; A Right not only of being Summon'd by the Kings Writ, and the Archbishops Mandate thereupon to Convocation, but of Meeting and Sitting too: p. 69. Of Assembling, and Acting, p. 71. --- Of Assembling and Sitting: p. 268. Or as he more fully delivers his sence: p. 267. "The Clergy have a Right to some" what more than a bare Summons: They have a Right actually to Assemble;
" to be form'd into a Body; and to fill the Chair of the Lower House; And, if " they have any Petitions, or Motions to make in Church-matters, they have " a Right to Sit so long as till they have made them: For thus they have been " always Accustom'd to do: --- Now this Right He accounts to be so far Vested in the Body of the Convocation (or rather of the Lower Clergy) as to leave it no longer in the Kings, or the Metropolitans Power to hinder the Exercise of it For being Called by the Kings Writ, and Assembled at the time prescribed, in the Archbishops Mandate; He affirms, that neither the One, nor the Other can, from thenceforth, Prorogue them, till they have had their Sermon, Chosen their

Rights, &c.

K. HENRY their Prolocutor, and considered what they have to do ; Nor afterwards without their Consent ; or at least without a tacit Allowance, and Intimation given, That they have Nothing to Do. “ Dr. W. is, He says, the first Writer that the VIII. b. Ibid. pag. 75. “ has ever Asserted these Meetings to be Precarious ; and put it in the Princes,

“ or the Archbishops Power, whether they will have such Assemblies or No. And in another place speaking of the “ Reasons, which may Occasionally “ move Inferiors to Claim the Recontinuance of these Meetings, He tells us, this “ may be One, That their Right begins to be question’d by the Discontinuance. Now of their being Summon’d, and Meeting, in Parliament time, there has been no Discontinuance: This therefore Dr. A. cannot mean. The Discontin-Ibid. pag. 23, 24. “ the Superior shall take care to Assert his Own [Right] at the same time that “ He sets aside Theirs : And Commanding Them to Come, shall yet not suffer “ them to Assemble in Form ; nor let them, instead of being a Convocation Le- “ gally to Confer together, and to frame their Requests to their Lordships, the “ King, or Parliament, be so much as a Congregation once to say their Prayers “ together, and hear a Sermon. This it seems has been the Result of the Archbishops Arbitrary Prorogations ; and this plainly fixes the Charge ; or rather the Scandal, upon Him.

It is to the same Effect that he speaks p. 77. where taking particular Care, to inform us that what He contends for is the Holding, not the Calling only, of the Ibid. pag. 77. Convocation, “ for that (says He) is the Right we speak of ; He adds, “ A Right “ that has been all along Own’d by Constant Practice ; or if perchance not Ex- “ ercised at some particular time thro’ forgetfulness, or Distraction (to allow “ the utmost, and more perhaps than can be proved) yet was never Purposely ; “ and, if I may so speak, Regularly neglected till now. But more plain is the load which upon this Account He lays upon the Archbishop, p. 115: Where having shewn how much the Convocation may Do, without any License from the King, notwithstanding the Act of Submission ; He thus proceeds to Reflect upon the Metropolitan for having prevented this, by his Illegally Proroguing of them :

Ibid. pag. 115. “ And whether such Applications are necessary, should, I suppose, be left to “ the Convocation to determine ; tho’ Others afterwards may either second, or “ reject these Applications ; Who may in these Cases have the power of Judg- “ ing, but not of Prejudging the Actions of a Lawful Assembly. This can be- long to no Body but the Archbishop, who indeed is by all these Circumstances as Evidently pointed out, as if he had been expressly named, as He was. p. 75. And what follows, p. 116. confirms it to Us : “ The Innovation made in these Matters, “ has begun within these Ten Years last past. For tho’ it has been usual to Ibid. pag. 116. “ Adjourn Convocations a few days after they had Met, and Sate, when there “ was little or no business to do ; yet it was never till Ibid. pag. 264. — “ This New Practice (which Dr. W. in my Opinion by as New Law justi“ fies) we know the date of ; and have Reason therefore to obviate it whilst it “ is New : and to take some Care that it may not in a little time be Able to plead “ a Quiet Prescription.

“ Time out of Mind, the Custom has been, that whenever the Parliament has “ Met, the Convocation (should not only be Summon’d) but Meet too : And “ accordingly for some Ages now it has met with it ; and been Opened in Form, “ by the Archbishop, or in the Vacancy of his See, by some Bishops Commis- “ sion’d from the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury ; Divine Service has been “ said ; a Sermon preach’d, and a Prolocutor Chosen. There are Instances in- “ deed when they have Gone no further than this, and done no other Business ; but “ it was when they had no Other Business to Do ; for they were always put in- “ to a Posture of doing it, and into a Capacity of making such Motions and Re- “ quests as they should judge proper for the Good of the Church, or the Re-“ drefs of Grievances. Till late Years it was never known that Convocations K. HENRY the VIIIth.

 “ should Meet [‘time after time] purely in Order to be Adjourn’d: That “ plaints, or even to put themselves in a Condition of Offering of Them. This “ Custom we know is but Nine Years Old; whereas the Contrary Custom is as Old “ as these Assemblies themselves are: And if Custom be the Law of Convocations, “ (as Dr. W. allows it to be) He will be pleas’d to tell Us, how this Establish’d “ Custom can be broke in Upon, and set aside, without a Breach of the Law;

 “ and whether the Clergies not being Suffer’d to Meet, and form Themselves into “ a Body, according to the Intent of their Summons, be not (upon Dr. W’s.
 “ Principles) as plain a Violation of their Rights, as it would be not to Summon “ Them.

Here then we have, I think, a full, and clear Account, of Dr. A’s Claim on behalf of the Convocation, that is, in his meaning, of the Lower Clergy there. For as in Dr. A’s Estimation the Convocation of this Province, is the Only Convocation that he seems to have had any Regard to, in settling the Rights of an English Convocation; so the Lower House, is that which in his Extraordinary Regard to the Episcopal Establishment of the Church of England, He, for the most part, means when He speaks in General of the Convocation. The Summ of it is this; That as the King is Oblig’d every Parliament to Summon the two Convocations, and to let them Sit without any disturbance on his Side, during the Session of Parliament; (and accordingly we must with Gratitude Acknowledge that his Late Majesty did duly, and constantly do this, how much soever Dr. A. has been pleas’d in his Ignorance of the History of that very thing for which he writes, to Reflect upon him as if he had not;) so being Call’d by the King, they have a Right in despite of their Metropolitans, the Legal Presidents of their respective Convocations to Meet; to Go to Prayers; to hear a Sermon; to Choose a Prolocutor, and to make what Motions soever they think Good; Who are not to presume to exercise their Power of Prorogation till the Clergy shall think fit to give Them leave; either by Expressly telling Them that they have nothing to do; or by sufficiently intimating of it to Them by their doing of Nothing when they are Met. Rights, &c. pag. 267, 268.

This is the Claim, both with respect to the King and the Archbishops: And we are thus far Happy, if Dr. A. will please to let us be so, that the One has not hitherto broken in upon in upon these darling Rights; tho’, it must be confess’d, if the Case be so as he pretends, the Others have apparently Offended in this Particular; and thereby merited that Chastisement which this warm Presbyter is pleas’d, with a peculiar freedom, and severity, to give them for it.

The Grounds on which he builds this Claim, is Custom; And that so Old, so Un-interrupted, as to warrant Dr. A. to assert, the Assembling of the Convocation in time of Parliament to be Essential to our Constitution; and to give a Legal Right to the Clergy not only to be Summon’d, but to Sit too: So that in Short the Archbishops by their late Prorogations of them, have not only infring’d the Liberty of the Church, but broken in upon the Parliamentary Establishment of the State likewise. The Charge runs as high on this side, as the Claims of Right did on the Other; And it will be necessary for me to shew that this is Dr. A’s true sense, and No Aggravation of my Putting upon his words. Let us hear how He sums up his own Performances. p. 76. “ The result of all is this, that if Rights, &c. pag. 76.
 “ some hundred Years Custom can make a Law, then we may without offence af“ firm it to be the Law, that the Convocation should Sit with every New Parlia- “ ment: If the true Notion of a Convocation be, that it is an Assembly of the “ Clergy always attending the Parliament, then it is no presumption to say that “ we have the Same Law for the Sitting of a Convocation as we have for that of a “ Parliament. And by this Law the Clergy — are not only under a Duty to At“ tend, but have also a Right to Meet; So that as their Writs for Assembling “ Concurrently with a Parliament, are not meer Letters of Grace, and Com“ plement, but to be Emitt’d ex debito Justitiæ, and whether the Government “ has any thing to propose to them or No; so likewise are their Assemblies at “ such times to be held by the same Law, notwithstanding it may be pretended “ that there is no Occasion for them. And, in another Place, speaking of the Ibid. pag. 263.

HENRY
the VIIIth.

Clergies Right of Meeting and Sitting in Convocation together with every New Parliament, He tells us that the Objection against this might have been dispatched in two Words, by saying, "That the Clergy have certainly a right of Meeting and Sitting in Convocation thus often, because thus often they have for some hundred Years Met and Sate: And this is a plain short Answer, which is capable of no Evasion.

This is the Custom from which he inferrs his right: a Custom of some hundred Years: As in the next Page he calls it to the same purpose, of some Ages; and Time out of mind. And yet more fully, as to the Strength of his present Argument from it, p. 267: Where he doubts not to lay his Claim in these words: "If Custom therefore creates a Right, we are sure the Clergy have a Right to somewhat more than a bare Summons: They have a Right to Assemble, to be form'd into a Body, and to fill the Chair of the Lower House; and if they have any Petitions or Motions to make in Church matters, they have a Right to Sit so long as till they have made them; For thus they have been Always accustomed to Do. This he had before asserted as to the Kings part of Assembling the Convocation in Parliament time: p. 251. "Since Custom is the Law of Parliaments, and it has Perpetually been the Custom to issue out these (Convocation) Writs to the Archbishops, whenever Writs went out for the Parliament, it is Certain that the Clergy have a Right to these Provincial Assemblies in Parliament time on the Account of this antient Prescription. And here He equally Asserts it as to the Archbishops Duty of permitting them actually to Sit, at least till they shall signifie their own consent to be Prorogued.

What we have here seen in these very large, and General terms of some hundred of Years Custom; Custom time out of mind; Always; and perpetually Accustomed, and the like; He elsewhere puts some Bounds to; and we shall do well therefore to Enquire what his Limitations are, that so we may the better judge of what force his Argument drawn from this Topick is. P. 215. He tells us, that the two Convocations have for near 400 Years past constantly Attended (the Parliament) and are therefore, in this respect, as stated an Assembly as the Parliament its self. To the same effect he both Asserts, and Argues, p. 251. "If a Custom, says He, of three or four hundred Years standing will not create a Right, I know not what will. When he first set out on this Notion, his thoughts were warm, and he run his Custom somewhat higher; p. 28. He told us that "thus the Case had stood for 400 Years, and Upwards, to speak at the Lowest. But that is no great matter: It is more wonderful to see how far he has elsewhere sunk this pretended Ancient and Immemorial Custom of many Ages; to One Century and a half; which indeed is All that with any Colour of Truth can be affirm'd in this Case, and in which I shall hereafter shew more defects than he is aware of: p. 68. "Sure we are that the Convocations of the Clergy have (as has been said already) for above 150 Years been us'd to Meet and Rise within a Day of the Parliament: And if Custom therefore be the Law of Convocations, as it is of Parliaments; (and we have Dr. W's word for it that it is) then is it Law that the Convocation should meet Only and Always in time of Parliament. And therefore p. 75. having own'd some Difference in point of Time to have prevail'd for above a hundred Years together in the meeting of these two Assemblies, the Parliament and Convocation; He adds; "That this Irregularity was Reform'd before the Reformation of Religion; and their Meeting, and Departing, fix'd within a Day of the Assembling and Dismission of the Parliament; and, says He, this Custom has Now for above an Age and half Continued. For so long therefore (not to say how much longer) the Convocation has been a Word of Art, which signifies a Meeting of the Clergy in Time of Parliament. He adds, That such Meetings have by all that understood our Constitution been held Necessary. Dr. W. being the first Writer that has ever asserted them to be Precarious; and put it in the Princes, or the Archbishops Power, whether They will have such Assemblies or No.

I have now put together Dr. A's sense as well as I could gather it from the several parts of his Book: What his Opinion is, or on what to fix in this case, is pretty hard to determine. Immemorial Customs, which have always and perpetually Obtain'd, are certainly in All Cases of Great Authority; and especially very Sacred in the Eye of our Own Law, a good part of which is built upon no other Foundation. A Custom of 3 or 400 Years, in the Business of our present sent Constitution, ought to be held no less Sacred; especially in the Opinion of ^{K. HENRY} those who derive the perfect Establishment of our present Form of Parliament, ^{the VIIIth.} from no higher an Original than the Latter End of King Henry the 3^d, or the middle of King Edward the 1sts Reign; that is, from about the same distance of time, that Dr. A. assigns for the Settling of his Convocations, in their Duty, or Right (I know not whether I should call it) of Attendance upon it. And could this have been made out, without Examining any farther into the Nature or Original of such a Custom, I would, for my part, have freely Closed in with Dr. A. and have stood upon the Prescription of it. But the Error and Falseness of this pretence has been too apparently discovered already, to need any farther Enlargement upon it. I have shewn as plainly as Any thing can well be shewn, that to the time of King Henry the 8th, and in good part of his Reign too, no such Custom did Obtain in this Kingdom. That from King Edward the 1st, to King Henry the 8th, for above 200 Years the Convocations seldom, or never fate, at the same Time with the Parliament. But the King, and the Archbishops were at their perfect liberty to Call their Parliaments, and Convocations, according to their own Pleasure; and did Convene them at the same, or at different Seasons, as they thought it best suited with their Convenience to do.

To so much therefore of Dr. *A.*s Argument, as pretends to Time out of mind; to 3 or 400 Years Custom, in this Case; my Answer is briefly this: There was no Custom for the Convocations being either Summon'd, or Sitting, either in, or during, the Time of Parliament, before the 25th Henry the 8th: nor can therefore either the Kings Prerogative, or the Metropolitans Authority, be at all affected by any thing that has been, or can be Alledg'd, before that Time. Our only business will be to Enquire, How the Case has stood since? Whether from that time forward it has been the Constant Custom for the Two Convocations to Meet and Sit with every Parliament, after that strict Manner, that Dr. A. now affirms they ought to do? And whether, if it has, that Custom shall so far Limit and Determine both the Kings and the Archbishops Right of Summoning, and Proroguing these Assemblies, that it shall no longer be in their Power, either not to Call Them, or having Call'd them, to Prorogue them, when, and while the Parliament is Assembled? And to the End the Matter of Right may be the more clearly discuss'd, without any Mixture of what has pass'd in point of Fact, since the time to which this debate doth properly belong; I will

Ist Absolutely Suppose, that from the 25th of King Henry the 8th the Convocations have always been Summon'd by the Kings Writ, with Every Parliament; and been suffer'd by the Archbishops to Meet and Sit, without any such Prorogations as are now complai'd of; during Every such Session of Parliament; and upon that Supposition will Enquire; How far such a Custom shall prevail against the Kings Prerogative, and the Archbishops Metropolitans Authority; and give the Clergy such a Right to be Summon'd and Assembled; to Sit and Act, as Dr. A. Claims on their behalf? And having clear'd that, I will then proceed in the

II^d Place to Examine the matter of Fact; and Enquire, whether there has been any Innovation made in the late Reign; any thing done either by the King, or our Archbishops, which had not been done, by former Princes, and Metropolitans?

First then; Supposing that from the time of King Henry the 8th to the present Reign, the Convocations have been duly Summon'd by our Princes, and allow'd to Sit, and Act, during the Session of every Parliament, by our Metropolitans; Let us Enquire whether such a Custom shall so far Prevail against the Prerogative of the One, and the Authority of the Other; that it shall be no longer in the Power of Either or Both, to deny them such a Liberty of Meeting, and Sitting, as is now claim'd by Dr. A. on their Behalf? And this we will try,

1st. By the General Rules, and Principles of the Canon Law consistent in this matter, with the Laws of the Realm, and therefore it if not of an absolute force to Oblige in such a Case, yet neither lightly to be Rejected. And

2^{dly}, By the Maxims and Determinations of our Own Law, which to be sure we must abide by in this Particular.

1st. That Custom, tho' never so Inveterate, is not always of Force to Introduce a Legal Right, much less to Destroy a Right both by Law, and Custom vested in another Person, or Corporation, is a Principle that all Laws and Constitutions of Government have ever agreed in. The Canon Law, I am sure, is very positive in this particular: In which these, and the like Principles, are received as certain, and authoritative, ¹ Si Consuetudo ratione non constet, non est servanda: ² Veritate & Ratione contraria Consuetudini manifestata, cedere debet Consuetudo: ³ Consuetudinem Ratio et Veritas semper Excludit: And therefore ⁴ Consuetudo est servanda, vel ea cui suffragatur Veritas, vel ea cui saltem non est contraria Ratio et Veritas. But on the other side, ⁵ Mala Consuetudo non minus quam perniciofa Corruptela vitanda est.

Upon these first principles equally allow'd of both in the Canon and Civil Law; we find several other Consequential Rules establish'd, in the reason of which tho' we do not agree with the Canonists, yet may they serve nevertheless to illustrate the Maxims before laid down, and shew thus much at least with Reference to the Point in Hand; that Those make too great a hast to their Conclusion, who overlooking the Nature, and Quality of the things for which they plead a Prescription, content themselves with this Uncertain, and I think in the present case very false, Inference; That for such a Summons and Assembling, as we now speak of, the Clergy have Custom on their side: And therefore they are by Right intituled to them; so that neither the King nor the Archbishop can Legally refuse the One, or hinder the Other. Such are for Example these: * That no Custom can be valid, which derogates from the Liberties of the Church; or by which any Grievance is brought to it. * That all such Feudal Customs are void, by which Clergy men are, upon the account of their Lay fees, Convened before a Sæcular Lord. * That no Custom can prevail, whereby to make the sentence of a Lay-man valid in an Ecclesiastical Cause. * That no Exempt places can plead Custom for the Public Celebration of Divine Offices in the time of a General Interdict; with many Others of the like kind.

Señ. 8.

But not to insist upon the doubtful, or Erroneous Inferences, which either have been, or may be, drawn, from certain and true Principles. In this both Law and Reason agree; That, to give to any Custom the Authority of a Law, these following Conditions are required; * That it must be in a Matter that is Capable of a Prescription: * That it must carry a Natural Equity with it: * That the Custom must have had a Reasonable beginning; and neither have been introduced, nor kept up, by Error. * That it must have the consent of the Prince, or of such Other Person, whose Authority is primarily concern'd in it: * That it must be in its self Reasonable: And lastly, * That the Acts, upon which the Custom is founded, must have been design'd to introduce a Law; and to have Effect and Obligation as such. We will briefly Examine the present Pretences of Dr. A. on behalf of the Convocation, by these Measures; and that under the (3) following Enquiries:

(1) Whether the Thing it self, which is here founded upon, and Claim'd by Vertue of this Supposed Custom, be such as is Capable of being Prescribed by Custom?

(2) Whether the Acts, by which the pretended Custom in this Case must have been introduced, were such Acts as are requisite to found an Authoritative Custom upon? And,

(3) Whether the Custom here alledged, has had all that Authority that was necessary to Give the Force of a Law to it?

Señ. 9.

(1) Whether the thing it self, which is here founded upon, and Claim'd by Vertu of, this Supposed Custom be such, as is Capable of being Prescribed by Custom?

That there are a great many things, in which it is generally agreed, that Custom has no force, no body can doubt, who has either at all enquired into these matters, or considered them as he ought to do. It is one of the Conditions Essentially requisite in such a Custom, as is to have the Efficacy of a Law, that the Thing prescribed by it, be neither Evil, nor Unreasonable. ⁶ Suarez Go's yet farther: He tells us, that to make a Custom valid to the End of a Law, it must not only be without any of these Defects, but must be positively Useful and Honest. Infomuch that he doubts not to place the very Form of it in these Two: "Ideo illius quasi forma, says he; erit Eiusdem honestas et utilitas. He makes

makes the very same Qualifications, Objectively taken, to be the final Cause of it too: "Utilitas publica vel Ratio Consuetudinem Honestans; as his words are. And, in another Place, he adds yet more; where shewing that in a Lawful Custom all the necessary Conditions do concur, which are requisite to make a Law, and from thence Arguing that it has a sufficient force to Introduce a Law; He gives this Account of the matter of it: "That such a Custom ought to be Reasonable; And that it will be so in Order to this Effect, if its Matter be not Contrary to the Law of Nature, or of Revelation; if it be Profitable to the Public Good; and not too Difficult, vel a Communi more honeste vivendi Exorbitans. And in this the whole Body of the Canonists and Civilians seem generally to agree with him.

I have already shewn what the Maxims of the ² former of these are to this purpose: As for the latter, I shall only mention a Constitution, or two of the Roman Law to the same Purpose; such as that of the Digest: ³ Quod contra Rationem Juris receptum est, non est producendum ad Consequentias: And that other of the Code; ⁴ Consuetudinis Ususque longevi non vilis Auctoritas est; verum non usque adeo sui Valitura momento, ut aut Rationem Vincat aut Legem.

But here then a difficulty will arise, What Custom is to be adjudged Useful, and Reasonable, and so Capable of Obliging; and what Unreasonable, Unprofitable, and Dishonest, and therefore to be condemned as a Corruption, not received as a Custom? This is a Question, which has given some trouble both to the Casuits, and Canonists in the Resolution of it: Who after many Considerations, seem willing to come, as to what concerns the matter of Practice, to this Conclusion; that the Determination hereof must be left to the Will, and Decision of the Judge; who must follow his Own Reason, and Conscience, in it. But this is a direction that will not satisfy in our present Case; I will therefore Endeavour to Give some farther light to it; at least so much as may suffice to answer my purpose in it.

And, First it is out of all doubt, that where the ⁵ Matter of any Custom is in its self morally Evil; and Establish'd by such Acts as no Humane Power can justify, or make Lawful; there the Custom its self must necessarily be both Wicked and Unreasonable; and so Uncapable of inducing any Obligation, but only to Repentance and Reformation.

Secondly: ⁶ If the Custom be not directly Sinful, yet if it carries a Moral Turpitude, or Indecency along with it: so as to render it Unbecoming the Nature of the Thing, to which it is Applied, or the Persons who Use it; such a Custom, I conceive, may justly be accounted Unfitting & Unreasonable, and so Incapable of Obliging. Let us take the Instance, which Suarez gives us of this. Suppose then, It should have been the Custom of any Countrey to celebrate some certain Festivals by Indecent Sports, or Exercises; such as Baiting of Bulls, or the like; it cannot be doubted but that such a Custom being, tho' not directly Unlawful, yet in its self Indecent, and Unsuitably Applied to the Celebration of a Sacred Festival, ought for that Reason to be Rejected and Disallow'd.

Thirdly: A Practice that is neither in its self Morally Evil, nor Indecent, but on the contrary is Good and Commendable; may yet be Unreasonable, as to the Inducing of an Obligation, because it would be too Burdensome to the People; Or Otherwise inconsistent with the Necessities of particular Persons, Or prejudicial to the Public Good. ⁷ Should a Practice, for Example, be set up in any City, or Corporation, that so many days in the Week all persons should shut up their Shops, and laying aside their Ordinary Business, should give themselves up intirely to fasting, and prayer; to the service of the Church, and the Exercises of devotion; tho' this be in its self not only a Lawful, but an Excellent Practice; and if voluntarily done by such Persons as could conveniently spare the Time, and bear the Discharge of it, highly Commendable; Yet to introduce such a Custom as should in this Case become Obligatory to a whole Society; and Lay a General Constraint upon all the Members of it to comply with it, would be both Burdensome, and Unreasonable; and in Order to such an End, the very Practice its self would deserve to be Censured as Rash and Inexpedient.

Yet farther: Fourthly: There are some things, which are of such a Nature, as to be above, and beyond the Power of Custom alone, to Reach, or Controul: Such are the Rights and Prerogatives of the Supreme Authority in every Society, whether Ecclesiastical, or Civil; Because indeed, not only the force of Custom, but all the Other Laws, which are made with respect to Public Society, do subsist by Vertue of the Supreme Authority within that Society, and must therefore be Inferior to it. And it would be altogether Unreasonable in its self, and contrary to the Public Good, that Custom should Destroy that, by whose Authority it prevails; and for the sake of which alone it either was, or ought to have been Introduced. Thus in the Ecclesiastical State, founded in Hierarchy, and Establish'd upon the Order and Authority of the Bishops and Prelats of it; which partly the Institution of Christ and his Apostles, and partly the General Agreement and Practice of the Christian Church, has settled in it, No Custom, which would subvert, or change the Essential Rights or Priviledges of this Politie, can be adjudged to be either Useful, or Reasonable; nor by Consequence of any force by the Laws and Constitutions of the Church. To give some Instances of this, which occur in the Canon Law, and have been adjudged to this purpose by it. ¹ Some Persons pretended by Custom to Exempt themselves from paying such Procurations, as were due to their Bishop, and his Officials, upon the Account of their Visitations. This was declared to be Invalid; and the Custom resolved to be of no force: Because the Visitation its self being a Matter of Common Right, wherein not only the Authority of the Bishop, but the Good Government, and Ordering of the Church is concern'd; whatsoever depends thereupon, or is necessarily united to it, as the Support of the Visitor, in the Discharge of his Duty, in that particular, is; belongs to the very Policy and Government of the Church, and therefore cannot by any Custom be Prescribed against.

For the same reason it has been ² agreed, that no Diocess can plead a Custom, to be Exempt from the Visitation of its Proper Ordinary: Because this would break the Discipline of the Church; would obstruct the Correction of Manners; would overthrow the Power of the Ordinary, and be contrary to the Public Good and Welfare of the Society.

In like manner; ³ It has been judged, that for any Persons, or Corporation, to be Exempt from the Obedience of their Proper Prelat, No Custom can be pleaded; because this would divide the Members from their Head; would break the Nerves of all Church discipline, which consists in the due Obedience of Inferiors to their Superiors; would Evacuate the Laws of the Church, which require such a Subjection; and so, in the End, would tend to the Disorder and Destruction of the Church.

The Case is the same in the Civil, that it is in the Ecclesiastical State, and founded upon the same Reasons. The Peace of the Public; the Security and Welfare of the People; the Defence both of their Persons and Property; and the Authority of the very Laws themselves, All depend upon the Safety, and Preservation of the Government, which is Legally Establish'd in every Place. Whatsoever Custom therefore is contrary thereunto; or would Weaken the Constitution of any Civil Government, or any considerable part of it; must, upon that account, be look'd upon to be Unreasonable within that Society; and Inconsistent with the Public Good of it; And being so, must for that reason also be declared Null and of no force. Hence it is, that all Customs, which would Derogate from the Authority of the Prince, or those just Rights, which either the known Constitution, or Laws of the Government, have vested in him, have in all Estates been esteemed an Undue Usurpation: And whenever any such Customs have been alledged (as sometimes they have been by seditious Persons, and for ill Ends) they have still been accounted Violent, and Unlawful; and if by unjust force they have for a while prevail'd, yet have they always been Reprobated, as soon as things have return'd to a quiet state, and that the Voice of Law and Reason were to be hear'd against them.

But much more is this clear in such Cases, where only One Part of the Society, would, by the pretext of Custom, diminish the Authority by which the Whole is Govern'd and Supported. Because should this be allow'd, the Consequence would be, that some particular Persons, or Corporations, might justly make their Own Separate Advantage, by that which might turn to the Detriment of the whole. A thing so Unreasonable in Society, that the Civil Law would not suffer Custom to affect so much as a Common Road, or to deprive the Public Public of the Use of it, for the Benefit, or Conveniency, of a particular Town, Village, or Person, which might happen to Gain by it.

The Summ then of this Matter is this; That whatsoever Custom would introduce any Right or Priviledge, that is Morally Evil; or Indecent; That is Unreasonably burdensom to the People, Or Otherwise Prejudicial to the Society; which being Admitted, would Weaken, or Subvert the Order and Government of the State, into which it should be introduc'd, and shake the very Constitution, under which it is to be Establish'd, must be counted a Wicked, or Unreasonable Custom, and as such not qualified to Oblige.

I shall close up these Remarks with that discourse of Suarez, wherefrom the Maxims of the Canon Law, which declare, that All such Customs are Unreasonable, as are neither Supported by Reason, nor agree with the Canons of the Church; and again, that Those are to be held to which are Supported by Reason, and do agree with the Canons. He doubts not to Affirm, That a Custom is to be judg'd Unreasonable, if it be Destitute of Reason, tho' it be not apparently Contrary to Reason. And from thence draws this Inference; That to enable any Custom to introduce a New Law, there is more required, than that it should be barely Honest; and therefore Reasonable in Order to that End. For beyond that, says He, it must also be consider'd, whether it has the Other Conditions of a just Law; namely, that its Obligation be tolerable; and that it be Profitable to the Public Good. To Enable it to Repeal a Law already made; it must have some Reasonable Cause, for which it should be introduced in Opposition to the Law: Because otherwise it would be Unreasonably Set up against it: forasmuch as, Generally speaking, to Repeal a Just Law, without a Lawful Cause, must needs be Unjust.

From these Maxims and Opinions of the Schoolmen and Canonists, which, I confess, seem to me to carry with them as well the Force of Reason, as the Authority of Law; Let us now see, what the Conclusion must be in our present Case. Before the 25th of King Henry the viiith, it is certain, that the King had Authority, when ever He pleased, to direct his Writ to Either of his Archbishops, and to Require them to Call a Provincial Convocation of their Prelats and Clergy for such Ends as, when they were Assembled, should be declared to them. They were neither by Law, nor Custom, Obliged to Issue out their Writs for this purpose at some Certain times; nor Restrain'd from doing it at any Others. This, I say, is Certain; and I will venture to add that I have proved it, beyond all Controversy, so to be.

Till that time the Archbishop of Each Province was, in like manner, at Liberty, to Assemble his Respective Provincial Suffragans and Clergy, not only at such times as the King, by his Writ, Commanded him so to do; but whenever He thought it necessary; or that it would be for the Good of the Church that they should be Called together. In both Cases, whenever the Metropolitan sent out his Mandates for their Assembling, they were obliged to Obey; and to Attend at the time and place which He assign'd for that purpose. Those who either neglected, or Refused, to come, (if any such there were) were pronounced Contumacious by Him; and Punish'd after such a manner as the Laws of the Church directed, and the Quality of their Offence did seem to Require.

Being thus Convened, the Archbishop was thus far Obliged by the Kings Writ, as having Assembled the Convocation at his Command, to continue its Sessions till the King had declared his Business to them, and they had sufficiently deliberated upon it, and given their final Resolution concerning it: Which having done, He Either presently Dissolved the Meeting, or Continued it still on: at his Own Pleasure, and by his Own Authority. Whilst they sate, He freely Presided either in Person, or by his Commissioners, over them: He prorogued their Sessions as He saw fit; Directed their Proceedings; and by his Concluding Suffrage, either confirm'd, or Disallow'd of what was done by them.

By the Act of Submission, made in the 25th of King Henry the 8th, the Kings Prerogative in this particular was somewhat Enlarged, and the Metropolitans, Authority, not a little Abridged. For from thenceforth, the Arch-Bishop was Restrained from Assembling his Provincial Synod without the Kings Writ to License, and Authorise him: which was all the Change that was made in this point, from what had been both the Law, and Practice before. Since the passing of that Act, it has been the General Custom for our Kings to issue out their Writs to

to their Archbishops, to hold their Convocations when ever They have Assembled their Parliaments. This they have done by their Own free Will and Pleasure; not in pursuance of any Law, which either Required them to Order the Archbishops to Call Them at those Seasons; or Restrain'd them from Commanding them to Call them at any Other times. But they found those Seasons to be the most convenient for their Affairs; and the Obvious Reason of the thing its self, which I shall hereafter observe, shews it to have been so. As to our Archbishops, excepting in the One particular of not being now at liberty to hold their Provincial Councils at their Own Pleasure, without the Authority of the Kings Writ, they do in all other Respects Remain in the same State they were before; with Relation to their Provincial Suffragans and Clergy: And particularly, they have the same Authority; to Preside over their Synods, and to direct their Proceedings, as ever they had before the making of that Act. Only, as before, whenever they Called their Convocations in Obedience to the Kings Writ, They were Obliged to continue their Sessions in such wise as the Kings Affairs Required, and for that were answerable to Him; so were, they afterwards, in like manner, Obliged to take his Directions, as to the menagement of these Assemblies when convened; and not to deprive the Prince of the Opportunity, of making whatever use of them, He had either been Accustomed, or should otherwise think fit, Legally to Do.

In consequence hereof, as the King has Generally caused the Convocation to Meet in Time of Parliament; so, for the most part, having had business to Propose to them; the Archbishops have likewise Order'd their Actual Assembling; Have caused a Sermon to be preach'd; a Prolocutor for the Lower Clergy to be chosen; and the whole Assembly to Sit from time to time, as the business to be done by them has Required. If nothing was to be done for the King, nor had They any thing to Recommend to them, or Require of them, Themselves; in such Cases they Met but seldom, and in a very small Number; and that in Order to their farther Prorogation, And all this as it has Pleas'd the Metropolitan to Order and Appoint.

Sect. 13.

This is the case (at least we are now to Suppose it so to be) And the Questions to be Resolved upon it, are these: 1st; Whether the Kings Customary Calling of the Convocations in Time of Parliament, and Suffering them to continue under the Government of their Respective Archbishops during the Session of it; (before the End of which They have not Ordinarily interposed, to put an End to their Assembling) and the Clergies Meeting thereupon, shall have such a force, as to Oblige the King by the meer Authority of such a Custom, Necessarily to call them at such Times, whether He will or no? And so lay this double Restraint upon his Prerogative; That He shall be Absolutely Obliged to Summon the Convocations with every Parliament; and shall be precluded from the Power of Summoning them at any Other Time? And, 2^{dly}; Whether the Archbishops, having, in Obedience to the Kings Command, and for the dispatch of such business as He had for the Clergy to do; Or otherwise by their Own Will, and the advice of their Suffragans, generally Suffer'd, or rather Commanded, the Clergy to Meet, as often as they thought needful, in Order to those Ends; Have by this Customary Allowance, or Precept, so far deprived themselves of their Metropolitain Authority of Presiding over, and Proroguing their Convocations, that it is no longer in their Power to Exercise it as the King shall Direct, or as They Themselves shall think fit, but that They are Obliged, by this Custom, to let them Meet, Sit, and Act, as they have commonly been wont to do, tho' they should think it to be neither Necessary, nor Expedient to the Good of the Church; but rather needless and inexpedient, that they should do so?

This I take to be the true state of the Questions under debate; and in Answer to both, I do humbly conceive, that supposing such a Custom, as is here alledged, yet neither the Kings Prerogative, nor the Archbishops Authority, shall be Affected by it; Because They are not such Matters in which Custom has any Force; or ought to be allow'd any Power to Oblige.

Sect. 14.

For 1st. As to what concerns the Kings Prerogative in this Case, it neither arises from, nor depends upon any Particular Laws: It flows from the Constitution of the Government, to which all Laws and Customs within the Realm are subordinate; and therefore is above being Limited, or Determined by any thing less than an Express Law of that Constitution. It is true by a particular Law made with

with the Common Consent both of the Clergy and Kingdom, the Prerogative HENRY the VIIIth. was thus far Enlarged beyond what it had been before ; that the Metropolitan should not, from thenceforth of his Own Accord, call a Convocation, without the Princes Allowance ; but should have his Writ to Authorize him so to do. But the King had always a Right antecedent to that Statute, or any other Positive Law, to Command his Archbishops, whenever he thought fit, to Assemble their Respective Convocations ; and the Archbishops were always obliged to Obey his Command, and Assemble them accordingly. Now this being a Right of the Crown, which the King by his Royal Prerogative, and the Constitution of the Government, is Vested withal ; nothing can deprive him of it but that which has power to Alter the Constitution, which no Custom of any Particular Body, or Corporation, has Power to do.

If, in answer to this, it shall be said, that this Custom do's not Destroy, but only Limit the Prerogative ; and that This Custom may do ; I must beg leave to Reply, that in my Apprehension such a Custom do's totally Destroy the Prerogative in this Particular. For it makes that Power which before was free, and Royal become, by this means, Necessary and Constrain'd. For so it must needs be, if all that Remains to the King, in this Case, be but this ; that He shall be Obligated, whether he approves of it or no, to Issue out his Writs for the Convocations to Meet, whenever the Parliament Sits ; and shall not be Permitted to Call them at any Other Time, than when the Parliament is to be held, tho' He should have never so much Reason, or Occasion, to move him so to do. Men may give things what names they please ; but when all is done, where there is no Freedom, there can be no Prerogative : much less such a Royal Power ; as our Kings, by the Constitution of our Realm, were Endow'd with, and have never yet given their Consent to be deprived of.

Whether it would be for the Good of the Church, that such a Custom should be allow'd the force of a Law ; may I think very justly be question'd. Parliaments now-a-days are frequently Assembled, and long continued. If this Custom be valid, then must All the Deans and Archdeacons, and a Great number of the most Eminent Clergy of the whole Realm, be all that while Obligated to leave their Business, and Countries, and met together in two places, and there spend four, or five months in the Year, to their Own Great Cost, and to the neglect of their functions and Cures ; and that at a time, when the Bishops are absent from their Diocesses, upon the Account of the Public, and therefore their subordinate Ministers ought the Rather to be personally present in them. To Meet thus together at such times when there is any Real business to be done for the Good of the Church, that may countervail the trouble, charge, and inconveniences of their Assembling, is readily acknowledged to be useful and necessary. At such times therefore, and for such Affairs ; They ought not only to be permitted, but Required so to do. The Metropolitans will certainly desire it ; and no Good Prince will Refuse them the liberty of it. But to be Obligated, at all adventures, to Assemble so often, and to Sit so long, as every State Council is called and continued, would I conceive, be a Great Burden to the Clergy ; and of detriment to the Church : And as, for that Reason, no Custom ought to be pleaded for it, so neither should any be Allow'd to deprive the King of that Power, which alone can protect the Church against so Great a Trouble and Inconvenience.

How far the Allowance of such a Custom may be prejudicial to the State as well as to the Church ; I shall not pretend to divine. But sure I am no Custom can be valid for One part of the People, which may turn to the Public Injury and Detriment of All the Rest. And thus far the whole Realm must be concern'd in it, as not to admit of any Custom, that would weaken the Reins of Government ; and Obstruct the Lawful Exercise of the Kings Royal Prerogative ; and thereby deprive him of the Power of either not Assembling, or of proroguing, or dissolving the Convocations : if any difficult Times should come ; and the Clergy should take part with the Divisions of the People, and by their Counsels or Actions, when met in a Body together, should help to increase the Public Disorders : All which I may presume to say Carries no Impossibility in the Supposition, tho' I hope it should never be verified in their Practise.

I conclude then ; that this Custom, as far as it concerns the Kings Prerogative ; being contrary to the Essential Constitution of our Government ; inconsistent

K. HENRY
the VIIIth.

with the Rightful Power of the Sovereign, burdensom, and injurious to the Church; and which may turn to the Public Detriment both of Church and State; is for the Matter of it, Unfit, and Unreasonable, and therefore such in which Custom cannot Oblige.

As for what concerns the Metropolitans Right of Prorogation; that also I take to be such a Right as Custom alone has not Authority sufficient to Deprive him of. The Metropolitical Jurisdiction has now for these 1400 Years past been settled, and Received in the Christian Church. Our Own Church in particular has been confessedly founded in it; and we can Scarcely carry our Christianity its self higher than we can do the Exercise of it. Now the (3) Great Branches of the Metropolitical Jurisdiction by the Canons of the Universal Church are these; To Consecrate the Provincial Bishops; To Visit, and in certain Cases determined by the Canons, to Order the Affairs of the Province; and to Call, and Preside in the Synods of it. The Synodical Power of the Metropolitan, is therefore an Essential Branch of his Metropolitical Jurisdiction: Which He enjoys by the Canons of the Catholic Church, and by the Universal, and truly Immemorial Practice of it.

Now such an Authority as this, I do presume, cannot be taken from any Metropolitan, by the bare Custom of any One Province: Because this would be to make a breach in the Government of the Universal Church; would weaken the Metropolitical Authority; would give an ill Example and Scandal to Other Churches; and be little less than to form a Schism in Policy, for the Clergy of One Province to depart from the Received Jurisdiction, practised and allow'd of in All Others; and by the General Canons of the Church, (which we profess to Receive, and I suppose pretend not to alter) prescribed to Us, as well as to Any. If the Essential Rights of the Metropolitical Jurisdiction above mentioned, may by so little a Power, as the particular Custom of some One Church be destroy'd; I do not see but that in time One part of it may be lost as well as the Other: And so the Metropolitan be left destitute of all but the meer Name; without any Canonical Rights, or Powers to support his Character, or to Govern His Province.

Whether the Public Good, and Order of the Church will allow of such Principles; as do not only actually Rob the Archbishop of One of the highest and chiefest Exercises of his Metropolitical Authority, but may open the way to deprive, if not him, yet Other Metropolitans of all the Rest, may deserve to be Considered. As also, whether it would not be very dangerous to the whole Policy of the Church Catholic, to allow, that a Particular Custom, or Non-Usage of Power, in One part, shall Abrogate the General Rules and Canons of the Whole; and introduce a Practice quite Contrary to Them. In Matters of Great Moment the Remotest Consequences ought to be weighed. We all know how violent the Affections of most men are after an undue Liberty; and how hardly they are brought to yield even to the most Lawful Exercises of Authority, if contrary to their Interests or Inclinations. And what Attempts the prevailing in so considerable a Point may encourage, if not in the same Province, yet in Other parts of the Church; and how this may, in time, not only divide, but weaken, the whole Episcopal Establishment of it; I shall leave it to Those who are the most fond of this Pretence, in the present Case, to consider. In the mean time, I shall only beg leave to suppose yet once more, as to our Own Concern in the matter under debate; Should such Heats arise, or such things be agitated, in any of Our Convocations, that without putting a present stop to them, the Clergy might lose not only the Affections of the Laity, but the very Protection of the Civil Government; might run themselves into a Premunire; Or form such parties among themselves, as would be Scandalous, as well as otherwise Injurious to the Church; And should they, in the height of their Carrier, not only not tacitly consent to the Metropolitans Proroguing of them, but openly declare against it. Would not this be of a mighty prejudice to Religion; to Themselves, and to the Public, to have them left to their Own Will; to discharge them from the Power of the Metropolitan, on such, or on any Other the like Reasonable Occasions, to suspend their Assembling.

But of the Archbishops Power of Prorogation I shall say no more, that Argument having been fully not only Handled, but Exhausted, by another Writer. Only because that is the thing chiefly contended for, and indeed all that there is any Pretence of Custom to support; that the Clergy ought not to be prorogued till till they have been at Prayers, have heard a Sermon, and Chosen a Prolocutor; K. HENRY

the VIIIth.
Give me leave to Ask but this one Question, and to the Reason of Mankind I shall submit it to determine what Answer is to be given to it; would it counter-vail the Expence, and Labour of above a hundred Clergy Men, at the worst time of the Year, to undertake a Journey of Sixty, Eighty, or a Hundred Miles; only to Come up to London; to answer to their Names; and hear a Sermon; and choose a Prolocutor; and then take it for a favour to have leave to go Home again, and tell their Neighbours what they had done? Is it not of greater Benefit, and a more Rational Practise; for the Metropolitan, in a Fatherly tenderness to his distant Clergy, to assure them that they shall not be surprised; When there is any business to be done, for which they shall be Required to Choose a Prolocutor, and Meet in Convocation, They shall have a timely Notice given Them of it; and in the mean while He will Excuse their Absence, and not Exact their Attendance, nor Treat them as Contumacious, tho' they do not Appear according to their Summons? This is the truth of the Case; let Common Reason say which is most for the Advantage of the Church; and would be least Oppressive to the Members of it?

But because it cannot be doubted but that both the King and the Archbishops were in Possession of the Power now denied to them, as well as I take them to have still a Right to it; so that Custom in this Case is alledged with a design to Destroy the Antient Power, and Prerogative of both, and to Convey it into other hands, who can pretend to no Other Right to it but what Custom must give Them, I must not conclude this point without taking notice of that Just Rule of Suarez to this Purpose: "That to Enable any Custom to Abrogate a Law before in being, it must have some Reasonable Cause for which it should be introduced, in Opposition to the Law; because otherwise it would be Unreasonably set up against Law; forasmuch as to repeal a Just Law, without a Reasonable Cause, must needs be Unjust. Here therefore I would desire to be inform'd; What is that Just, or Reasonable Cause, for which either the Prince should, by this Custom, be deprived of his Prerogative, or the Metropolitan of his Authority? Wherein have they either of them Abused the Power, with which the Constitution of the Realm, and the Canons of the Church, have entrusted Them? Or what Detriment has Experience shewn to have come either to the Clergy, or People, by their Exercise, or Enjoyment, of it; This those who Alledge Custom in this Case must shew; or their Argument must be disallow'd: For the Principle on which it proceeds, is Certainly both Just and Reasonable; That no Rightful Power ought to be destroy'd, without some Cause, or Reason, for the Annulling of it. And Custom is then only of Force, when it has Reason of its side; but is on all hands allow'd to have none, if it be against Reason; as till this be shewn, we must perfume it to be.

Let this then be the first Exception against the Authority of Custom in the present Case; that the Power and Prerogative, which is endeavour'd to be Destroy'd by it, is such, against which no Custom has any Right to prescribe. The next Enquiry will carry us yet farther; Viz.

(2dly) Whether those Acts by which the Custom here insisted upon must have been introduced, were such Acts, as are sufficient to found an Authoritative Custom upon?

For the better discovery whereof we must distinctly consider two periods of time; The beginning, and the prosecution of every Custom; How it came at first, to be introduced? and by what Acts it was afterwards Establish'd?

Concerning the former of these, it is, I think, universally agreed both by the Lawyers and Casuists, that if a Custom takes its Rise not from Reason, but Error; if the Foundation of it were not laid upon a just design, to Establish that which by a Due Continuance, and Repetition of Acts, afterwards becomes a Custom, and so Obliges; but was owing to Chance, or Fortune, to no Reasonable purpose at all, or to an Erroneous One; in that case the Custom it self will be Invalid; and the Ground of it being declared, and proved, to be faulty, the Force of it will be taken away, and its Obligation be Renderd Void and of no Effect.

The Civil Law is expresse to this purpose: 'Quod non Ratione introductum est, sed Errore privatum, deinde Consuetudine obtentum, in aliis similibus non obtinet. Digest. lib. 1. Tit. 3. Sect. 39. From which our own Dr. Zouch, not to mention any Others, lays down this Maxim, that Consuetudinis initium debet esse Rationabile; and so the Antient Glossators

HENRY Glossators understood it, tho' the following Civilians inferr'd a quite contrary Doctrine from it.

Lib. vii. cap.
12.

¹ Suarez is positive to the same effect; He lays it down as one of his conclusions in this Case; That no Acts done by Error, or Ignorance, can introduce a Custom; and he alledges that Rule of the Law for it; Consuetudo procedens & Ratio quæ in Consuetudinem evasit, custodienda est: Which, says He, supposes that the Custom ought to proceed from Reason, not from Error; Because that if it arises from Error, as soon as the Error shall be discovered, all the seeming Reasons of the Custom will Cease; and then the Custom also must Cease with it; which cannot Subsist without Reason.

² See Suarez
Loc. cit.

The Acts then which begin a Legal Custom, must be Just and Reasonable. They must not proceed either from Mistake, or Ignorance: Otherwise no subsequent practice can make it oblige any longer than till the Original Defect of it shall be discover'd. Let me add farther that both those, and all the other Acts by which it is introduced, and establish'd, must also be Free and Voluntary: Because they give Authority to the Custom, not upon their own Account, as they are such, or such Acts; but as those Acts do declare the Consent of the People, and by that Consent make a Law. Now no Acts can declare the Consent of any Persons but such are free; In which they have it in their Power to Act, or not to Act; and again to Act thus, or Otherwise, according to the Dictates of their Own Reason, and the Liberty of their Own Wills. ² And therefore some have thought it needful to put such a Consent into the very Definition of a Custom that is to Oblige: And those who do not expressly make mention of it there, yet nevertheless agree that it is to be look'd upon as implied in it.

cap. 12.

It is for this Reason, that a ³ Custom cannot be introduced by any Acts which arise from Force, or Fear: Especially if the Force be Great, and the Fear such as may move a Constant man. Because these hinder the Freedom of Action; and thereby disable those Acts which proceed from such Motives, to be proper to declare the Consent of any People; or by consequence to Oblige them by what is done upon such Grounds. And for the same Reason what is done in Obedience to a Written Law, tho' never so often Repeated, or never so long continued, cannot introduce any Custom; because in that Case Men Act by a Moral Constraint; They are not at Liberty to Choose, or Do as they please, but are determined to Conform their Practice to what the Law requires. Indeed, if a General Custom prevails to Neglect altogether the Observation of a Law; or not to Obey it strictly, according to the Letter of it, but with such a Latitude as seems more accommodated to the Good or Ease of the People, and these Customs Obtain; the former may, in time, abrogate the Written Law, as the Latter may Determine the Observation of it, to such a manner, as has been Customarily allow'd of by the Prince, and Practised by the People. But if the Law Commands any thing to be done, and the People Customarily Obey according to the Law; there no Custom is introduced; only the Written Law is Continued, and Kept in Force, by a due and regular Execution and Observation of it.

⁵ De Legib.
Lib. vii. cap.
12, & 15.

But this is not yet all: The Acts by which a Custom is to be introduced, must not only be Rational and Voluntary: free from Error, Ignorance, and Constraint; but they must moreover be done with an express Design to found a Custom upon them. So ⁵ Suarez again determines: Ad Consuetudinem non sufficiunt Actus, sed necesse est ut fiant Animo inducendi Consuetudinem. And in this He tells us he has both the Doctors and Lawyers on his side. And the Reason of it is plain; Because otherwise the People might Oblige themselves against their own Wills, or at least without having any thought, or intention so to do; supposing that whatsoever were Customarily done by them, without any design of making a Law of Custom by it, should nevertheless bind, and tie them necessarily hereafter to do, what they had usually, for some time, done. But indeed, the very nature of the Acts, by which alone it has before been shewn, that a Custom can be Establish'd, do's argue the Necessity of this: Seeing no Act can be properly Voluntary, as to the Effect of introducing an Obligation, but what Intends so to do. If it do's not Intend it, and yet by a frequent Repetition should nevertheless Oblige, we must then say that a People may Oblige themselves by their Own Acts, without knowing what They do; a Principle which we have before disclaim'd, as Contrary to the reason of the thing its self; and inconsistent with that Knowledge and Liberty, without which no Custom can be of any force to to Oblige. In short, as in a Written Law, which proceeds primarily from the K. HENRY the VIIIth. Will of the Prince, it is of the very Essence of such a Law to be intended by Him; so is it no less Essential to an Unwritten Law, which begins with the People, and derives its force immediately from their Consent, that it should not be Valid without their Intention, which would be in Effect to make it so without, or it may be against their Consent.

It is for this Reason that ¹ Suarez admonishes us, above all things to consider in Customs, whether they were Design'd for such, or whether they Came up without any such Intention; because if They prevailed without any Intention to establish a Customary Right of Obliging, they are not proper Customs, nor such as will make a Law. And this Intention must be an Intention not only of Fact, but of Right: A Will not barely to introduce a Custom, but by that Custom to Establish an Obligation. As the Lawyers express it, it must arise from such Acts as were done cum animo inducendi Consuetudinem; and that by Custom, jus in posterum fiat.

The Summ then of this matter is this, That to make a Custom Obligatory, and of Force in Law; it must proceed from a Reasonable Beginning; it must be Carried on, and Establish'd by the Voluntary Acts of the People; such as may suffice to declare their Free and Unconstrain'd Assent to it, and desire of it; And those Acts must be done with an Intention of Introducing a Legal Obligation; and after such a Manner as may suffice to shew that that was the Design of those who did Them.

But a Custom may be Establish'd not only by positive Acts, but by a Cessation of Acting; And a Law, or Right, be sometimes Annulled by the One, as well as Introduced by the Other. And this Desuetude the Civilians doubt not to call by the Name of Custom too: ² Desuetudo, i. e. says Gotofred, Consuetudo vincit Legem. Now of this all that I shall at present observe, is this: That as such a ³ Non-usage may be either Negative, or Privative, as the Schoolmen speak; so must it be carefully consider'd, whether of the Two it is; because the former can have no Effect as to the Establishing, or rather Abrogating of a Law; tho' ⁴ the Other may. Now a Negative Omission, or Non-Usage of any Right, is that ⁵ which consists meerly in a present, Actual Forbearing to do that, which a man has, a Lawful Right, whenever he thinks fit, to do. It implies a Suspension of the Act, not a Renuntiation of Right; And denotes a man only not to have Exercised some Privilege, which He had the Power to have Used, and may Exercise when ever he will hereafter. But a Privative Omission is of another kind, it is such an Omission as Carries a tacit Intimation along with it, that the Person so Neglecting to Use his Right when He might, and ought to have done it; do's intend thereby to depart from it; and by a Continued, and Customary Neglect, to introduce an Opposite Right against it.

³ In Dig. lib. 1. Tit. 3. Sect. 32.

⁴ Suarez de Legib. lib. vii. cap. 6.

To apply now these General Rules to the Particular Cases under debate. I have before shewn that our Kings by vertue of their Prerogative Royal, had always a Right to Require our Archbishops to Summon their Respective Convocations, whenever they thought it Necessary, or Expedient to their Affairs, that they should be Assembled: and that accordingly they did do this freely, at All Times; without any Necessary Regard to the Sitting of the Parliament, nay or even to the Assembling of the Convocation of One Province, in Calling that of the Other. It is agreed, that since the time of King Henry the viiith our Kings have not Commanded the Archbishops to hold their Convocations, but about the same Time that they have also Assembled their Parliaments. But then the most that can be said in this Case is but this, that here has been a Negative Omission, or Dis-Use of their Prerogative, with Respect to the Calling of them out of the time of Parliament. They have not Assembled them at any Other times, 'tis true: They saw no Occasion for it, but they might have done it; and so whenever they please they may still do it. For even the point of Custom, in this Case, is, after all, on their side. Their Prerogative, as to this matter, consisting wholly in this; not that they had Authority to Call the Convocations at this time, or that time; In, or Out of Parliament; but that they had Authority to Call the Convocations freely whenever they pleased; and if they liked the time of Parliament best, and therefore chose to Call them then rather than at any Other; Even, by so doing, they have Asserted their Right, to Call them whenever they think Good; which was their Original Prerogative, and is still, by Custom, as well as of Right, as much so as ever it was.

Here

HENRY
the VIIIth.

Here therefore there will be no Ground for any plea from Custom, to affect the Kings Sovereign Power and Authority; till it shall be proved, that by Calling the Convocations in time of Parliament, our Princes did intend to abridge their Prerogative, to limit themselves to that Particular Season; and to Renounce their Right of Calling them at any Other. But that must be proved some other way, than by their meer Omission of such a Practice, because not being Restrain'd in the Use of their Power, in this matter, They were at liberty to Call the Convocations at any time that they pleased; and we ought to presume that it was in pursuance of this Liberty that they did Call them in time of Parliament; and that They freely chose that Season, when they might as freely have pitch'd upon any Other.

And for the same Reason, neither will the Custom of Calling the Convocations with the Parliament, Oblige the Prince, of Right, to Call them at that Time: Because the choice of the time being left to his Own free Will, and not Originally determined by any Law, or Custom to that Season; the actual Doing of it at that Time must have been the Result of his Own Voluntary Choice; and so have Confirm'd, not Abrogated, his Right, of choosing such times for their Sitting, as he shall judge to be most Expedient for it.

As for our Archbishops, they have neither Gain'd, nor Lost any Right or Privilege in this Case. Their Duty has ever been to obey the Kings Writ; and to Summon their Convocations at such Times as He requires them so to do; and the same it continues still to be.

The Prelats and Clergy, being Summon'd by their Metropolitans, have always Met in Obedience to their Mandates, at such Times and Places as they have Respectively prescribed to Them. Their Acts, in this Particular, have been nothing else but meer Acts of Obedience to their Superiors, in the Legal Exercise of their Authority over them. Now such Acts, I have before shewn, can introduce no Right by Custom with Regard to them; which were morally Necessary, not Voluntary Acts; and tended to nothing but to strengthen the Power of the Metropolitan; by adding Custom, as well as Right, to his Authority; and Obliging the Provincial Prelats and Clergy, in pursuance of the One, as well as the Other, to Obey his Synodical Mandats, and Assemble according to the Tenor of them.

Señ. 18.

If it shall be said, that the Clergy may possibly have intended Somewhat farther by their Assembling than barely to do their Duty in Obedience to the Mandates of their Archbishops; and particularly, might have design'd by their Constant Attendance in Convocation at such Seasons, to introduce a Custom of Necessarily Meeting at that time; I must desire to be excused if I cannot admit of such a Supposition. As for those Prelats and Clergy, in whose time this Custom began, it must be absurd to think that they could have had any such Intention. The King was then not only at Liberty, as He still is, to Convene the Clergy when He pleased, but had actually been Accustomed to Call them out of Parliament Time, as well as during the Session of it. How could they foresee that not only King Henry the viiith, but all his Successors would from thenceforth Confine their Writs to these times? Or not foreseeing this, nor being otherwise assured of it, how could they Intend to Introduce such a Custom, as is now pretended to derive its Original from their Practice? If in process of time the Clergy having for the most part lost the memory of the former practice, and measuring the Customs of past ages, by the Usage of their Own, began to imagine that it had been always the Custom for the Convocation to Meet with the Parliament; and so design'd by Assembling, not to Introduce, but to keep up, a Custom, before, as they thought, Establish'd; Their Intention was Vain, and of no force in Law; because it was grounded upon a Gross, tho' Vulgar, Mistake; and that Mistake being Rectified, they either ought to Change their Intention; or, if they do not, 'tis no Great matter, they cannot conclude the Kings Prerogative by it. In short; The Case here is not, what some of the Clergy might possibly in latter times have Intended, but what the Nature of the Acts, on which the Custom is pretended to be build, required that they should both have Understood and Intended by them: And that was plainly this; To Obey their Metropolitan, in Assembling at his Command; but as for confining either the King, or Archbishops, by such Acts as were done meerly in Obedience to the Authority of Both; 'tis an Absurdity in the very nature of the thing to Suppose, that Either the One or the Other, should loose their Power by the Exercise of it; nay, and which is is yet more, the Inferiors gain a Right against them, meerly by their own Customary obeying of them.

As to the Archbishops Right of Proroguing the Convocation when Assembled; certain it is, that our Metropolitans, have not only had a General Right by the Canons of the Church to do this, but have Immemorially Exercised that Right at their Own Will; and been Obey'd by their Synods in the Exercise of it. They have in all Ages Prorogued their Convocations, when, and as often, as they have thought fit; and that since the Act of Submission, as well as before, which has abridged them of no Power in this particular, that they ever Enjoy'd. The only Restraint which they lie under, is with Respect to the King, whose directions they are to take; that so they may not defeat his Ends by what they do: But having done that, they are at Liberty towards their Clergy, who have always Submitted to their Prorogations, and never, that I know of, made any Exception, till now, against their Authority in that Particular.

Now this being so, I do conceive that the Custom of not Proroguing them till after they had Met two, or three times; had heard a Sermon, and Chosen a Prolocutor, (which is the Great thing in which some men complain that an Innovation has been made) cannot either deprive the Metropolitan of his Right in this Case, or Give any Right to the Clergy not to be Prorogued till these Preliminaries are over: Because all this depends upon the General Power of the Metropolitan in this Case, to Prorogue his Synod when He pleases; which having by Custom, as well as Right, preserved; and being upon both Accounts allow'd to Him, the Rest will follow in Consequence from it; That if He has a General Power to Prorogue His Convocation whenever He pleases, He may do it at One time as well as at Another, and that the Kings Assent being supposed, He is to be directed only by his Own Reason, and the Circumstances of things, in the Doing of it.

Nor do's the Argument, which is drawn from Custom against this, signifie any thing in this Case, so far as the Clergy are concern'd in it: It amounts to no more than a meer Non-Usage, or Negative Suspension of his Power. He did not prorogue them, when He might lawfully have done it; and if He had so done, would not at all have Exceeded the Just Exercise of his Authority thereby. But he had his Reasons why he did not Do it; and those for the most part obvious enough; There was business for them to do on the Kings behalf, or it was the Princes pleasure, that they should deliberate on other Matters; and therefore He Required that as they were Summon'd by his Writ, so they should Sit too for the dispatch of the Business for which He had Orderd them to be Assembled. Or, it may be, the Archbishop himself thought it fit that they should Sit; or he was advised by His Suffragans, Or, desired by His Clergy, that They might do so; and therefore I do not say He permitted them; but Order'd them to Meet, to Choose a Prolocutor; and do the Other things which were done by them. But it do's not yet appear that ever the Metropolitan suffer'd them to Continue their Sessions, because they had a Right to Hold them; or because He had no Right at all, or none till these Preliminaries were over, to Prorogue them. On the contrary; whether they Sate, or were Prorogued; whether they Chose a Prolocutor, or Rose without doing it; (which in fact they sometimes did;) It appears from all our Records, that They did All in Obedience to their Metropolitans Command. Their Acts were not Voluntary, nor did they proceed from their Own Motion; but They were directed, and Over-Ruled by their President; and therefore These Acts can infer no Custom but what must be against themselves, viz. a Custom of Obedience to the directions of their Metropolitan when met, as well as to his Mandatory Summons in Meeting.

If therefore we look up to the Original of this Custom, so much now insisted upon; for the Clergy to meet in Convocation, to hear a Sermon, to Choose a Prolocutor; then to Sit, and Do what Business they had to do; the Reason of it before the Act of Submission, was plainly this; because they were not then Called a-course with the Parliament, as they have since been: But only at such times as the King, or Archbishop had somewhat Expressly for them to do; and it was therefore necessary for them thus to Meet, and Proceed, in order to the doing of it. Since that time, till within these last forty Years, there has for the most part been something for them to Do likewise; which Required these Preliminaries to be Observed; and account for the Reason of them. And when there has

has not, it is well known that they have, for that Reason been Omitted; as from the History of the Convocations of the Other Province, the Acts of which alone Remain perfectly to Us, shall hereafter be made appear. That therefore the Clergy have not Generally been spared the trouble of Attending at the Provincial Convocations, but have been obliged to Meet and Sit according to their Summons, was not Owing to any want of Power in the Archbishop of either Province to Prorogue them, but to the business which was to be Done by them; and obliged our Metropolitans to Require their Appearance.

If we consider the Acts by which this Custom is supposed to have been introduced, they were Acts of Obedience to the Command of the Archbishop. They were not free, and Voluntary Acts; but Morally Necessary; and by such no new Right can be Gain'd by them.

This Custom did not begin with the Clergy in Convocation, as all Customs ought to do; but it proceeded from the President. The Archbishop required his Prelats, and Clergy, thus to Meet, Sit, and Act; and it was in Obedience to his Authority that they did so.

When they first thus Met, and Acted by Vertue of his Command, it do's not appear that they had any the least thought of Usurping upon the Power of their Metropolitan thereby. They often petition'd to be dismiss'd; but never, that I can learn, till this time, pretended to a Right, Superior to his Authority, to Meet, Sit, and Choose a Prolocutor, or assumed to themselves the Judgment of the Expedience, or Inexpedience of their Sitting; so that without the Express, or Tacit Consent of the Lower Clergy, it should not be in the Presidents Power to Prorogue his Own Convocation. If afterwards any Notions were got into their heads, that they had a Dependence upon the Parliament, and were to Sit whilst that Sate, yet neither then did they suppose it necessary Actually to Assemble together all that time; Or if they had, yet the very Ground of that supposition being, upon Enquiry, found to be an utter Mistake; no Right can be derived to the Clergy by it.

In short; whether we consider the Summoning, or Sitting, of the Convocation; all the Acts of Both, have been Acts of Authority in the King and Archbishops; of Duty and Obedience in the Prelats and Clergy. If any Custom therefore were to be founded upon them; it must have been this only; that whenever the Clergy are legally Summon'd by their Metropolitan, in Vertue of the Kings Writ, they are Obligated by Custom, as well as Law, to Assemble; and being Assembled, to Meet, Act, and Adjourn from time to time, as the King shall direct their President; and the President Order and Require Them.

There is yet One Condition farther required, to make any Custom Effectual in Point of Obligation; which brings me to the Last Point I proposed in this Case to consider, Viz.

(3dly) Whether the Custom here alledged has had all that Authority that was necessary to give the force of a Law to it.

It is generally agreed that Custom being an Un-written Law, and design'd to have all the Effects and Powers of a Written one: No Authority can suffice to introduce a Custom, but the same that might have made a Law; and that therefore the Consent of all such must be given to the One, that would have been Required to the Other. This both the Canonists and Civilians agree in; and the Schoolmen second them in it. They tell us that in Civil matters to make a Custom Valid, the Civil Magistrate; in Ecclesiastical, the Proper Prelats must Consent to it, or it will not Oblige. Suarez enquiring into the Chief Efficient Cause of a Customary Law, lays down this position, Primum omnium statuendum est Consensum Principis in Consuetudine introducenda necessarium esse. And this He tells us is the Common Opinion of the Doctors, a few only Excepted; who admit this in Ecclesiastical, but seem to doubt of it, in matters of Civil Law.

To determine what Consent of the Prince is requisite in Order to this End; The same Suarez first distinguishes between his Personal, and Legal Consent. The Personal Consent of the Prince is that whereby He Expressly allows of it, Either antecedently, by giving Leave for such a Custom to be introduced; or by, his Consequently or Concomitantly, Approving of it: And that again, either Expressly, or Virtually, as by seeing and not hindring of it. The Legal Consent of the Prince is that which not the Prince himself, but the Law gives: When a Custom has all those Conditions, which by the Law, (made and agreed to by the Prince) are Allowed to be sufficient to render it Valid. That the former of K. HENRY the VIIIth. These is sufficient to give Authority to a Custom, no One can doubt; and Suarez affirms, as I think he has Good Reason to Do, that the Latter is so too.

But how shall it be known, in the former of these Cases, whether the Prince do's give his Personal Consent or no? If he Expressly declares it there is again no difficulty. If he do's not, yet if He sees, and knows, and allows of it, 'tis Generally held that that is sufficient to declare his Consent to it. But then ¹ Suarez adds a Condition of some Difficulty: He says, it must be morally certain that the Princes Allowance is not barely Permissive, but Operative; and such as carries his Approbation, as well as Sufferance, with it. How therefore shall this be found out? He tells us by the Nature of the thing, and the necessity of it: If his Approbation be Reasonable; or that a Bare Permission thereof would not be Sufficient for the Safety and Benefit of the People. And this, at last, is only in Ordinary Cases: For if it be a Matter of such Moment as ought not to be concluded without a previous Examination of the Cause, Great Deliberation, and a mature Resolution, it is then still doubted, whether the Prince ought not to Give his Express Consent, before the Custom have the force of a Law.

supr. Cit.

Nor are we yet at an End of our difficulties: For tho' we should be sure of the Princes Consent, yet if he Consents thro' Error; if he be led by any Mistake in the substance of the thing which he Approves, or for want of a Due Understanding of it, that Consent is of no Effect; but the Rule of the Law comes in to his Relief, that Consentire non intelligitur qui Errat. The same is the Case if his Consent be Unreasonable; that is, should it either be Contrary to Reason, or not supported by it: So that in short then, to give a legal force to any Custom; besides a suitable Matter, and a sufficient Usage; there must concur the Consent of that Authority which has the proper Power in that Matter; and that Consent must be some way or other duly declared; And neither be surreptitiously obtain'd, thro' Error or Ignorance; nor otherwise be destitute of such Reason, as may justify the Approbation which is given by Authority to it.

Upon these Common Principles of Law and Reason, I would now beg leave to ask Those who so much cry up the Validity of Custom in the present Case; By what Arguments can they satisfy any mans Reason, or Conscience, that either the King has Consented to such a Limitation of his Prerogative, or the Metropolitan to such an Abridgment of his Power, as they would perswade us ought, of Right, to be made of Both? Have our Princes ever Expressly declared, that They were willing to be Obligated always to Summon our Convocations in time of Parliament; and never to Call them at any Other Season? Or because that cannot be pretended; Have They otherwise Given any Legal Intimation of it?

That our Kings have Generally since the 25th of K. Henry the viiith summon'd these Assemblies to Meet at the same Time with their Parliaments, for such just and weighty Reasons as determined them so to do, is confess'd. That having had Occasion frequently to do this, they have not thought it necessary to trouble their Bishops and Clergy to Meet at any Other times, is also Agreed. But that by Either, or Both these, they ever intended to determine their own free Prerogative; and sink it from a Royal Authority, into a necessary Obligation of making Themselves only the Chief Issuers out of Writs for the Convocation, but without either a Power to Refuse the doing of This at some times, or a Liberty to Do it at Others; is, I am sure, a thing that cannot without the utmost Unreasonableness be supposed; and therefore it must either be very plainly proved, or it must be absolutely Rejected.

If it shall be said, that whether they Intended it or no, yet by going on in such a Practise, by Calling the Convocations for 150 Years past, Always, and only in Time of Parliament, they have Introduced a Custom which they have now no Authority to break; besides what has been said before concerning the Inability of meer Custom to prevail against the Royal Prerogative, I must beg leave to add; that Princes are not to be Surprised. What they do not Intend, or do not foresee the Consequence of, neither can they be Obligated by it. The Rights of the Crown are too Sacred, and of too Publick a Concern to be destroy'd by Error or Ignorance. If the Prince should do something Really to defeat them, (which however it do's not appear that in this Case he has done) yet He is to be supposed not to have intended it; And therefore as soon as ever the Ill-Consequence is discover'd, the Error is to be Rectified, and with that, all the Effect of it is from thenceforth to be Reputed as Void, and of no force.

K. HENRY

I will not now dispute how far a Prince, in such a Limited Monarchy as Ours is, can Consent to the diminishing of the Rights of the Crown, without the General Consent of His People; or at least of the Estates of the Realm in Parliament. It is enough to determine the present Point that it is yet to be proved, that our Kings have ever Consented to Deprive themselves of any part of their Royal Authority, in the business of Ordering the Convocations, and that without their Consent, it is most certain that, they cannot lawfully be deprived of it.

Sect. 23.

Nor do's it appear that our Archbishops have ever Consented to give up their Right of Proroguing the Convocations, any more than our Kings have done their Power of Summoning of Them. In this latter respect we all know that both the Metropolitans, and their Synods agreed to Submit their Own to the Kings Authority: And the Parliament by a Statute confirm'd, what they had before Consented to. The Archbishops therefore of this Realm are thus far Abridged beyond those of some Others; that they cannot hold a Provincial Council, without the Authority of the Kings Writ to Enable them so to do. But that they ever Consented to a like Determination of their Power in Governing their Councils when met; so as not to be able Legally to Prorogue them but after so many previous Sessions; when such and such Circumstances were over; and then too with the Express, or at least presumed Allowance of their Clergy, as well as with the Assent of their Provincial Bishops; is what I have never heard; and am pretty confident, will never be proved.

And thus have I shewn what Exceptions may justly be made against the Authority of Custom in the Present Case, with Respect both to the Prerogative of the King, and to the Jurisdiction of the Metropolitan. The Principles on which I have proceeded, are the common Maxims of Law and Reason: And such in a matter of Ecclesiastical Politie, ought especially to be regarded; and if not to be allow'd the strict Obligation of a Law; yet at least to be consider'd for the Evidence of Reason, which I am perswaded shines thro' the most of Them. How justly I have applied them to the Points under debate, I must leave it to Every One to judge as He shall see Cause. This only I may be allow'd to say; that if but any one of the Considerations, which I have here offer'd, shall stand Good, (as I would willingly flatter my self, they All shall) it will suffice to destroy the Authority of Custom in this matter; And shew that till some better Reasons be produced for it; neither ought the King to be Abridged in his Freedom of Summoning our Convocations, nor the Archbishops in their Liberty of Proroguing of them; No, nor yet the Convocations themselves to be deprived of the Benefits and Advantages, which may, upon Occasion, be derived to themselves from Both.

Sect. 24.

I proceed,

Illy, To Examine this same Pretence of Custom, with respect both to the King, and the Archbishops; by the Maxims and Determinations of our Own Law.

And that I shall Do in this following Method:

(1st) I will Enquire how the Law of Custom stands with us, as it regards in Common both the King and the Subject. And, (2dly) I will shew, what particular Provision has been made by our Law in defence of the Kings Prerogative on these Occasions.

(1) In Enquiring into the Law of Custom in General, I cannot begin more properly than with the description which our Books give of such a Custom as shall be accounted of force with us. In the Case of Tanistry, Reported by Sir Jo. Davis, fol. 31, 32. it is said, that Custom in the Intendment of the Law is such a Usage as has obtain'd vim legis, and is indeed a binding Law to such particular Place, Persons, and Things, as it Concerns. That such a Custom cannot be Establish'd by Grant of the King, nor by Act of Parliament: but is Jus non Scriptum, and made by the People only of such a place, where the Custom obtains. For where the People find any Act to be Good and Beneficial; and fitting and agreeable to their Nature, and Disposition, they Use and Practise it from time to time; and so by the frequent Multiplication, and Iteration of such Acts, Custom is made. And being Us'd time out of mind, obtains the force of a Law. So that in short, Custom is a Reasonable Act, Iterated, Multiplied, and Continued by the People, ple, time out of mind: And this (says the Report) is the Definition of Custom, which has the Vertue and Force of a Law. K. HENRY the VIIIth.

If this be a Good account of the Nature of Custom, as I conceive it is; it will follow that in this our Common Law concurs with the General Reason of the thing its self, which from the Canonists and Civilians I before accounted for; That the Acts by which a Custom is Introduced, must be Acts of the People; who by their own long, and voluntary Exercise of them, Establish a Custom first, and so (if other Circumstances concur) Obtain some Right by it, which otherwise they would not have had. And in this particularly, distinguish such an Unwritten Law, from a Written One; that the Latter may, and must Originally proceed from the Authority of the Prince; whereas the former is founded upon, and Arises from, the Free Acts of the People; who first by practice introduce a Custom, and then by long (or as our Law requires, Immemorial) Usage, Give Force and Authority to it.

To make such a Custom Good in Law, two things we are told, are required; A Reasonable Beginning; and a Sufficient Continuance; and of Both which therefore We must consider what our Law Books say.

[1st] The Beginning of Custom, 'says the Report, I before alledged; ought to be upon a Reasonable Ground and Cause. For if it were Unreasonable in its Original, No Usage or Continuance can make it Good. Quod ab initio non va- luit tractu temporis non Convalescet. And to this the 2 Judges in Court agreed, in the Case of Paramore the 41 Eliz. That Customs ought to be such as may in Reason have had a Lawful Beginning, or may in their Common Intent consist with Reason: Otherwise they are not truly Customs, but pretences of Customs, and Vain Words. Sect. 25. Davis fol. 32. Case de Tanistry. 2d Anderson fol. 152.

It was upon this Maxim that Littleton long before determined, that if the Lord of a Mannor should prescribe that there has been a Custom within his Mannor, time out of mind, that Every Tenant within the same Mannor, who marrieth his Daughter to any Man without License of the Lord of the Mannor, shall make fine, and have made fine, to the Lord of the Mannor for the time being this Prescription is Void; because None ought to make such fine but only Villains. For every free man may freely marry his Daughter to whom it pleaseth him, and his Daughter: Et pur ceo que cest prescription est encounter Reason tiel prescription est void. The note of my 4 Lord Coke on which last passage is to be observed. "This (says He) Contains one of the Maxims of the Common Law, (which therefore here again agrees with the Civil and Canon Law before treated of) "That All Customs and Prescriptions that are against Reason are void. The same 5 Littleton speaking of another Custom; that, if any Cattel were upon the demesns of the Mannor, there doing dammage, the Lord of the Mannor for the time being has used to distrain them, and the distress to retain till fine were made to him for the damages at his Will; declares it to be a Void Custom upon the same Ground, pur ceo que il est encounter reason, that a Man should be judge in his own Case. And then Concludes with this General Rule: Et issint tiel prescription ou ascun autre prescription Use, si ceo soit encounter reason, ceo ne doit estre allow devant Judges; Quia malus usus abolendus est. And "Every Use, says my 6 Lord Coke, is Evil, that is (as our Author saith) against Reason. Quia in Consuetudinibus non diuturnitas temporis, sed soliditas Rationis est consideranda. Sect. 209. 1st Institute. 4. 1st Instit. fol. 140. Ibid. Sect. 212. 6. 1st Instit. fol. 141.

But here then the Difficulty returns which we before met with upon the like Occasion: How we shall know when a Custom is Unreasonable; or sprang from an Unreasonable Beginning? For this our Law Books among Others give Us the following Rules. Sect. 26.

1st, If a Custom be plainly and evidently against Reason, there is then no difficulty for any Man who will but use his Reason to find it out and be satisfied that it is so: And being convinc'd of its Unreasonableness, He may also be sure that it can be of no force in Law. Thus 7 Mich. 18 Jac. a Custom was alledged by Peter Barker Vicar of Stower-Payne, that Lambs ingendred, faln, and bred upon any One Tenement, or Living, in the same Parish, altho' they belong'd to several Owners, have been Cast, and Reckoned together, as if they were but One Mans; and the Tenth or Tythe Lamb of them so Counted together, have been pay'd for Tythe. The Court was of Opinion that this pretended Custom, was Unreasonable and against Law. Because that by this means it might fall 7 Hobart. Rep. pag. 329.

fol. 151, 153

fall out that some might have but One Lamb, and that might be taken for Tythe, and He that had more, should pay nothing at all. But in the Case of Paramore before mentioned, the Unreasonableness do's more plainly appear. It was alledged that by Custom, time out of mind, it had been used, that if a Citizen of London were indebted to a Burgeſs of Sandwich, ſuch Burgeſs might make plaint in the Court of Sandwich, &c. by Custom; where if He were caſt, it was the Uſage to write to the Mayor and Aldermen of London requiring them to hear the Cauſe, and to ſend to them the Defendant, or Anſwer in Bar, &c. This was repeated three times: If thereupon Neither the Defendant appear'd, nor was Anſwer in Bar ſent to Sandwich, then it was the Custom to Give Judgment againſt the Mayor and Comonalty of London for the Debt, and ſend them notice of it; that if they paid it not, Judgment of Wythernam ſhould be given out againſt them. And if they did not then pay in 15 days, the Mayor and Jurates of Sandwyck concedere voluerunt Cap. in Wythernam verſus quemcunque Civem prox. venient. ad Sandwyck, Et custodire voluiſſent quouſque, &c. This now was a Custom evidently Unreaſonable to take the Body of One Man, and detain him in Priſon upon a Judgment Given againſt a Third Perſon, and that for the Debt of Another: Car eſt merement injurious de faire un frank home a perdre ſa liberty par le offence ou det de third Perſon, Et le Reſon eſt, Quia quis pro alieno facto Puniendus non eſt. Many Other the like Caſes Occur in our Law-Books, which have been determined after the ſame manner, upon the ſame Ground. But to be more particular upon this point.

* Brownl. &

2. If a thing be Incongruent, that is Diſagreeable to the State and Condition; or to the Nature of the Perſon, or Thing for which Custom is pleaded, it ſhall alſo for that cauſe be look'd upon, in the Eye of our Law, to be Unreaſonable. So my Lord Coke, Rowles againſt Maſon; where He gives this Ground and Authority in Law for it: "10 Edward the 3d. 5. Leet cannot be belonging to a Church, inſomuch that it is incongruent; and a Spiritual thing ſhall not be pertinent to a Temporal, and ſo e Converſo. And ſo in the 5 Affiſe. 9. Hill and Granges Caſe. Com. Turbary cannot be Appurtenant to Land, inſomuch that it is incongruent; but it ought to be to a Houſe. So in Time of Edward the 2d, Tenant of the Mannor preſcribes to have free Bull and Bear, and it is not good for the reaſon aforeſaid; Otherwiſe it is of the Lord of the Mannor: And 9 Henr. 5th. 45. Custom in Leet to preſent Common; and adjudg'd that it is not good, inſomuch that it wants Congruity, for it is not proper to the Court.

* 1 Inſtit. fol.
116. b.

3. If a Custom be introduced to Deſtroy the Right of another which He Enjoys by the Common Law; it will thereby be accounted in the Eye of the Law to be Unreaſonable, and as ſuch Void. For the Common Law is the General Custom of the whole Realm: It is the moſt Antient of all Customs; and founded upon the Principles of Reaſon; and was therefore firſt received as Law, becauſe it appear'd to be both Uſeful and Reaſonable. Hence my Lord Coke tells Us, that the Common Law hath no Controuler in any part of it, but the High Court of Parliament, And lays it down for a Maxim in Law, "That whatſoever was at the Common Law, and is not Ouſted, or taken away, by any Statute; remaineth ſtill. And this Maxim we find on ſeveral Occaſions judicially Confirm'd; an Inſtance or two of which, for the farther Eſtabliſhment of this Remark, I will juſt mention upon this Occaſion.

* Crook. Jac.
pag. 357.

4 In the 12th of K. James the 1ſt, Peplows Caſe was tried in the Kings Bench upon an Error of Judgment in Salop. The Error aſſign'd was, for that in an Action upon the Caſe there try'd, the Defendant was Eſſoynd, and had day per Eſſoyne, & Quarens habuit Eundem diem. At the day appointed, the Defendant being demanded appear'd not, but made default; Et habuit diem per default; ſecundum Conſuetudinem Villa pradiſta, given him by the Court, viz. ſuch a day. At which Day the parties appear'd, and Judgment was given againſt the Defendant per nihil dicit. So the plea was utterly diſcontinued; becauſe when the Defendant made default, no Day can be given unto Him when he was out of Court. And the Allegation that it was done Secundum Conſuetudinem, cannot help it: For, ſays the Report, no Custom can help that which is againſt Common Law.

* Crook. Carol.
pag. 259, 260.

5 In the 8th of King Charles the firſt, the like Error of Judgment was try'd in the Kings Bench in Debt upon an Obligation. The Error Aſſign'd was becauſe the Trial of the Iſſue joyn'd there was by Six Jurats only. It was alledged that it was done Secundum Conſuetudinem ibidem a tempore, &c. and there be multitudes of Re-

Records in twenty several Courts in Cornwal, where Trials may be by Six; So ^{K HENRY the VIIIth.} that if this were reversed, many Others should be reversed. Nevertheless all the Court held, That such a Custom is Void, and against the Common Law. And Jones said, that tho' in some parts of Wales there be such Trials by Six only, it is by reason of an Act of Parliament 34 Henr. 8th, which appoints, That such Trials may be by Six only, where the Custom, hath been so; which proves that when they were united to England, and to be govern'd by the Laws here, such Trials could not be, unless they had been so provided for by Parliament.

When therefore our Law-Books say, that a Custom settled by just and Reasonable Cause used, Bars the Common Law, it must be understood of such Antient Customs, as have been long observed, and were reasonably introduced; and concern only such particular Persons or Places as claim by Them; but must not be extended to destroy that Right which Any other Persons, or Corporations have by the Common Law of England; who are not concern'd in any such Custom, nor ought therefore to be deprived by it of any Legal Interest, which by Law they have a Right to Enjoy.

4thly, No Custom which is introduced against an Act of Parliament, can, in the Eye of our Law, be judged to be Reasonable; because such Acts are the highest Law of All: They Alter even the Common Law it self; and therefore shall much more Over-rule all such particular Customs as shall be set up in Opposition to Them. ¹ And this was another Ground of the Judgment against the Custom of Sandwyck before mention'd: That it was plainly Contrary to the Statutes, against which no one may Prescribe, unless they are aided by some Other Statute. The same is the Sense of my ² Lord Coke; where taking notice of that Maxim of Littleton; That Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabili usitata privat communem Legem, He makes this Observation upon it, Privat Communem Legem, for no Custom or Prescription can take away the force of an Act of Parliament: and therefore Littleton materially speaketh here of the Common Law. ³ It is true there be some Acts of Parliament which do not destroy the Antient Customs which were in Use before the making of them: And therefore it is rightly to be considered of what kind the Act is, to know how far its force, in that Case, shall Extend. But if an Act of Parliament be first made, and still in Use, no Custom can be Rationally set up against it; nor will be allow'd, without somewhat else to support it, as of any strength in the Law.

5ly, No Custom contrary to the Public Good, which is, or ought to be, the End of All Laws; Or that is injurious and prejudicial to Many, but beneficial only to some few, can be accounted Reasonable; or, by Consequence, Obligatory; but must be look'd upon to have been Unreasonable, and Void from the Beginning, and therefore not to be made Good by any Prescription. ⁴ A Custom to receive a Half-penny of Every Footman, and a Penny of every Horseman, that passes over a Common Ferry, may be Good, because it is a Reasonable Consideration: And so over a Bridge which the Lord of the Mannor repairs. But if it were to pay 12 d. it would be otherwise, because it would be Unreasonable, and contrary to the Public Good. So ⁶ Mich. 2. Car. a Custom was alledged, that all the Tenants of a Certain Estate have never us'd to pay more than 11 s. for any Reparation of the Parish Church. This was look'd upon as Unreasonable, because it laid a Burthen upon the rest of the Parish. And the same we are told of those Usages of Hunting of Hares, of Hawking for Partridges, and and the like over, into, and thorough Other Mens Grounds, which makes it never the more Lawful; nor can a Custom be laid for it; or if it be, it will not avail to Justify the Trespafs, and Wrong that is done by it.

To these Rules of examining the Reasonableness of any Custom, I shall add only this Observation, ⁷ that the Determination of all these things Relating to Custom belongs to the Judges of the Realm; The Validity of which must be left to them, from these and the like Rules, compared with, and explained by former Precedents, of which Multitudes are Recorded in all our Law Books to declare.

[2dly] And as a Custom must be Reasonable, that it may be Valid; so must it be Antient, and Continued. And this is, by our Law, said to be Essential to a Good Custom. So my Lord ⁸ Coke; Of every Custom there be two Essential Parts, Time and Usage. Time out of mind; and Continual and Peaceable Usage, without Lawful Interruption. And in this he strictly follows the Rule of his Great Author: Who gives us this Note to the same Purpose: ⁹ Et nota, que nul Custom est allowable mesque tiel Custom que ad este use per tite de prescription; Sc.

de tempore dont memorie ne Curst. And again speaking of a good Custom at Common Law, He tells us 'tis such a Custom or Usage that hath been used for time whereof mind of Man runneth not to the Contrary. And this is proved by the Common Method of pleading Custom, which always is in these Words, 'de tempore cujus contrarium memoria hominum non existit.' Which Words Littleton thus explains, 'C'est autant a dire, quant riel matter est pled, que nul home adonque en vie ad oye ascun prooffe al' contrary ne avoit ascun Connusans al Contrarie.' So that if either any Person be alive who knew the Contrary; or if by any Records the contrary can be made Appear, the Custom fails, and for want of Sufficient Prescription, becomes invalid. So my ³ Lord Coke expressly teaches us to understand it. "For if, says he, there be any sufficient Proof of Record of Writing to the Contrary, albeit, it exceed the Memory, or proper knowledge of any Man living, yet is it within the Memory of Man. And this He tells us is the reason that regularly a Man cannot prescribe, or alledge a Custom against a Statute, because that is Matter of Record, and is the highest Proof and Matter of Record in Law.

Sect. 28. Such are the Maxims of our Law in this Particular: Let us now proceed by these Principles to Examine whether the pretended Custom set up in Derogation of the Kings Prerogative, and the Archbishops Jurisdiction, be of any Legal Force or Authority, to prescribe against either.

And First; That in this Case, there can be no Custom Establish'd to the Benefit of the Convocation Clergy against either the One or the Other, seems plain from hence; that those Acts upon which, if any, the Custom here spoken of, must be founded, were the Free Acts not of the Clergy, but of the King, and the Metropolitans; who therefore alone can gain any thing by the Exercise of Them. It is by them that our Synods have all along been Summon'd, Prorogued, Dissolved; The Clergy have had no other part in any of these Matters, but only to obey their Orders, and to Meet, or Separate as They, by their Writs and Mandates have required Them to do. If therefore the Acts which make a Custom, must be the Acts not of the Rulers, but of the People; If they must be the Free Acts of Those who pretend to introduce a Custom by Them; as both Reason requires, and our first Ground in Law suppos'd, that they must be; it is plain that here can be no Custom in this Case, but only on the side of the King, and the Archbishops; because it is on their side only that the Freedom of Acting has lain. The Clergy have done Nothing but in Obedience to their Authority; and that not in order to Gain a Privilege, but meerly to do their Duty, and keep themselves from those Censures and Penalties, which they would otherwise have been liable unto for their Disobedience.

To put therefore the Case aright upon the Foot of Custom in these Particulars; were there any need of insisting upon it, it should, I conceive, be laid thus: Whether the King having for several Ages past freely Summon'd, Prorogued, and Dissolved the Convocations at his Will; and the Archbishops having constantly thereupon issued out their Mandates in Obedience to his Writs to this purpose; He has not thereby obtain'd a Right, by Custom as well as Otherwise, to Exercise such an Authority, so that the Metropolitans shall upon that Account, were there no other, be obliged to Obey his Commands in these Particulars? And again: Seeing whenever our Archbishops have either sent out their Mandates for the Convocation to Assemble the Bishops and Clergy of their respective Provinces have duly Met at the Time and Place prescribed by them; whenever they have Read, or Caus'd to be Read, their Schedules of Prorogation to them, They have Risen, and look'd upon themselves to have been Prorogued according to the Tenor of Them: Whenever they have dissolved them, they have been Reputed as Dissolved both in Law and Fact thereby; this Custom thus Exercis'd by the Archbishops, and Acquiesced in by the Bishops and Clergy; and Obey'd, not for an Age and halfe; but as our Law requires, de tempore cujus contrarium memoria hominum non existit, shall not give a Legal Right to Them in these Matters, and so far conclude the Clergy that they shall now be Oblig'd by Law to submit to the Exercise of it. This I take to be the only true Application that can be made of Custom in this Case, And I appeal to the Reason of the thing, as well as to the Maxims of our Law before laid down, whether any other Use can fairly be made of it.

Had it indeed been Customary for the Clergy whenever a Parliament was Summon'd, to Meet of Course within their several Diocesses, and choose Proctors for

Or a Convocation, without any Command or License, either from the King or Archbishop so to do: Had these Proctors, so Chosen, come up to London, and Met together with the Deans and Archdeacons in St. Pauls Cathedral; and there by their own Voluntary Agreement had order'd a Sermon to be preach'd; Had Chose a Prolocutor; Sate, Debated, and Prorogued Themselves, as long as the Parliament lasted, without any regard to the Command either of the King or the Archbishop for their so doing: And had the King and Archbishop, time out of mind, Look'd on, and Conniv'd at all this; and never given any Legal Disturbance to Them in their Proceedings; this (supposing it to have had all the other Qualifications requisite to make it Good in Law, which shall hereafter be considered) might have brought in a Custom on their side, and have afforded them a Legal Ground on which to claim the Benefit, if there were any, of it. For then the Custom would have layn thus; That during the Time of Parliament it had been the Custom de tempore cujus, &c. for the Clergy to Appoint their Proctors, and for these Proctors to Meet in Convocation with the Deans and Archdeacons, and to Sit and Act after their own Pleasure there; and that neither the King, nor the Metropolitan, had ever disturb'd them in so doing; And therefore they do plead, that having had such a Custom as this, they thereby have gain'd a Legal Right thus to Meet, Sit, and Debate, at all such times; and ought not now to be hindred by the King or the Archbishop in the Exercise and Enjoyment of it. But as the Case truly stands, and I have before laid it; 'tis certain that as the Acts, upon which the Pretence of Custom, in this Case, is founded, were the Proper free Acts of the King and the Archbishop, not of the Clergy and Convocation; who have done nothing but in Submission to their Authority and in Acknowledgement of their Legal Power over them; so must the Force and Authority of Custom, if there be any in this Matter, lie wholly on their side; and argue the Right of the One thus to Rule and Govern in these Particulars, and the Duty and Obligation of the Other to be thus Ruled and Governed by Them.

But tho' I do therefore look upon the whole pretence of Custom as it is now Alledged in behalf of the Convocation against the Rights of the Prince and Metropolitan, to be utterly defective in its very Ground and Foundation; and upon that account Uncapable of Conveying any Legal Claim of Privilege to them; yet to make this matter the more clear; I will proceed to Examine it by the Properties of a Good Custom, before mentioned; and shew it to be defective in respect of them all.

SECT. 29.

(1) As for the first of these Reasonableness, that I conceive is utterly wanting to it. For what can be more Unreasonable, than to suppose That the King and the Archbishops, should by their own Authoritative Acts destroy their Own Authority; and so Lose their Right by the Exercise of it. Nor is it any less absurd if we put it the other way; That the Clergy by those Acts which they did in Acknowledgment of, and Obedience to, the Authority of the King and Archbishop over them; should Deprive them of their Authority; and in the Reverse of all other Customs, which evermore run on the side of Those who are the Authors of those Acts upon which they are founded, should deliver themselves from the Power of both, by a Long, Continued, and Repeated Custom of Obeying of Both. Yet this is the true Consequence of what is here claim'd in this Particular, which plainly runs to this Effect; That the Clergy having been wont at such certain Times, for 150 Years past, to be Call'd to Convocation, and to Sit and Act there in Obedience to the Kings and their Archbishops Command, have thereby gotten a Right to be Called at those times, and to Sit and Act by their Authority; and the King and Archbishop have no longer any Right to Refuse to Command and Require Them so to do. This is the Case as it is now stated; and if this be not, in the very Nature of the thing, Absurd and Unreasonable, and by consequence Void, and of no force in Law; I must confess I cannot tell what is so.

(2) It is 2dly Incongruous; and for that Reason Defective in the next Condition required, to make a Custom Valid, viz. of the Suitableness of the Custom, with respect to Those who lay claim to the Benefit of it. For it takes away the Authority from the Persons in whom it ought to be, and was by Law Originally Vested; and Gives it to Those who are Legally Unqualified for it; whose part it is to be Govern'd, and Ruled, not to Order and Govern their Superiors. But this

the VIIIth.

this is not all; For this Custom, should it be allow'd, would not only deprive both the Prince and the Archbishop of that Authority, which the Law has lodg'd in their Hands; but would change their free Power not yet limited by Law, into a Prescribed and Necessary Act; a thing as unsuitable to the Character of a King, and a Metropolitan, as the Other is to that of the Clergy. The Case is plainly this: The King had Originally an undoubted Right to Order the Convocations to be held at any Time that He pleased; The Archbishops as undoubted a Title to preside in, and over, their Convocations, when Assembled; and to Prorogue and Dissolve them at their Pleasure, subject only to the Commands of the King. The Clergy had nothing to do in Any of these Matters, but only to Obey the Orders of their Metropolitans; as the Metropolitans were to fulfil the Will of the King.

Of all this Power some there are who would now, by a pretence of Custom (otherwise of no Force) divest both the King, and the Archbishops; and transfer it to the Clergy of the Convocation. They tell us that the King is Oblig'd to Call them at such certain Times; as for Example, whenever the Parliament Sits, whether He will or No; and that He cannot Call them at any Other Times, tho' there be never so much Occasion for them to Meet; or He should never so much desire that they might be Assembled. Being thus Call'd by the King, They add, that the Archbishop shall not have it in his Power to Prorogue Them, till they have sate so long, and done such certain Synodical Acts; in which his Power indeed must intervene, (as both the Kings and the Archbishops, must likewise for their sitting;) but yet that both in this, and that, They shall be oblig'd to Exercise all such Acts of Authority as are requisite to enable them, by Law, to Meet, Sit, and Act, as they please, and to indemnify them in their so doing. Now this must certainly be if any thing, most Absurd, and Incongruous in Law. That the King and Archbishop shall still Continue to have a Right to their antient Power and Authority, and yet shall not have any Liberty in, nor by consequence any Real Right to, the Exercise of it. That the Convocation shall be Legally Subjected to the Government of Both; and yet, at the same time, shall have a Legal Power to Constrain both to Govern them according to their own Measures; not with any Freedom of Judgment, or Power of Using or not Using their Authority; as they see cause (without which there is indeed no proper Use of it at all) but after a prescribed Measure, which is, in truth, to make them only the Officers of the Clergy, to do their Business, and to secure them against the Danger of the Law; Which whether it be congruous to the Character of a Prince and a President, with respect to their Subjects, and Council, I may leave it to any Reasonable Person to determine.

If therefore it be absurd in the Nature of the thing, that a Power should Legally remain in the King and the Archbishop, and yet the free Exercise of that Power be Legally taken away from both; If it be not only Absurd, but Indecent, that the Hands of our Rulers should be tied up in the Exercise of those Acts which the most properly belong to them, as such; and the Right of Limiting them in those Acts be transferr'd to Those who are to be Ruled by them, so that the Authority shall be vested in the One, and the Right of Using that Authority be given to the Other; then must the pretence of Custom here again be Defective; and notwithstanding any such Usage, the King and Archbishop will not only retain their Antient and Undoubted Authority, but retaining it, will also enjoy such a Freedom of Using of it, as naturally follows such a Power; and indeed is Necessarily requisite to a Wise and good Use of it; And the Clergy be still Oblig'd, as they have always been, to Obey, not to Command or Direct their Superiors, in their Legal Government of Them.

(3) That such a Custom as is here insisted upon must, 3dly, be contrary to the Rights of the King and Archbishops at Common Law, and therefore again of no Force, must be allow'd; or it must be denied, that the King and the Archbishops ever had a Right by that Law to Call and preside over our Convocations after such a manner, as I have before shewn, and it cannot be doubted but they had. For if by an immemorial Custom, our Kings have been wont to Summon These Assemblies of the Clergy, or to Cause them to be Assembled at any Time when they saw it Necessary or Expedient so to do; without any Relation to, or Dependence upon their Parliaments; as I have before plainly demonstrated that they have been: If our Archbishops having Convened their Provincial Clergy in Obedience to the Kings Writ, were always wont in Fact, as well as of Right, to Pre-^{K H E N R Y}side over them; to Prorogue and Dissolve them at their Pleasure: If the Clergy^{the VIIIth.} have always submitted to the Exercise of these Acts, and Obey'd both the King and their Metropolitans in Them; then 'tis Evident that they must have had a Right by the Common Law, as well as by the Canons of the Church, and the Constitution of our Government, to this Authority; and that having such a Right, they cannot by the Late Usage of an Age and half, be deprived of it.

But indeed, even the latter Practise, if rightly consider'd as I before stated it, is on their side, as well as we are sure the Antient and Immemorial Custom was. For tho' our Kings have, of Late Times, Call'd our Convocations only in Time of Parliament, yet still it was by the free Exercise of their Authority that they did do so; when they might have done Otherwise; And had it in their Power either not to have Call'd them at those Times, or to have Assembled them at any Other; as I have shewn their Predecessors before them to have done. As for our Archbishops, they have always been thus far Confin'd by the Kings Authority, as to be Obliged to appoint their Clergy to Meet and Sit in such as they directed, and their Affairs required that they should. And thus far they are limited in the Exercise of their Power still. But to their Clergy as they never ow'd any such Subjection in the Use of it, so neither did they ever, by any Custom, yield to it; but have always Prorogued them when, and after such a Manner, as they have thought good, without either asking their Leave, or desiring their Assent for their so doing.

(4) Whether this pretended Custom, were there truly any such, would not athly be contrary to the Act of Parliament 25th Henry the 8th. c. 19. as far as concerns the King, may I think be justly Enquired: Which having not only confirm'd to Him the Power He always of right had to Assemble the Clergy, when ever He thought fit, but in this Particular Enlarged his Prerogative, that from thenceforth the Archbishop should not Call any Convocation without his Writ; and that without any Limitation of Times and Seasons, when, or within which, He should be Obliged to issue out his Writs for that Purpose; must be understood to have Granted that Power to Him with the same Freedom that both his Prerogative required, and our foregoing Princes, till then, had Enjoy'd and Exercis'd it. And what that was I have abundantly before shewn. Which being so, I do humbly conceive, that Whatever Custom would Restrain the King from the free Exercise of his Authority in this Case, (by that Act of Parliament confirm'd to Him) must be accounted to go against the Intention of the Act; And for that, as well as for the several other Reasons before offer'd, be of no force.

(5) How far gly, The Public Good of the Realm may be concern'd in the support of the Royal Authority, in this Case, is a Point, which I shall not pretend to enter upon the Discussion of. This only I may offer; That should there ever chance to arise a set of Turbulent Discontented Men, who by their Own Perversness, or the Management of Others, should take Occasion from such an unbounded Right of Sitting and Acting, without any Controul either from their Civil or Ecclesiastical Governours, to Raise, or Keep up, any Factions or Divisions, among Us; contrary to the Peace of the Church, and the Public Welfare of the King and Realm; it might then appear to have been a matter of no small importance to the State, as well as to the Church, to give up such a Power to such an Assembly; as may some time or other bring the King under this Difficulty, that either He must Dissolve his Parliament, when He has perhaps the utmost need of their Sitting; Or he cannot Dissolve the Convocation, not only tho' He has nothing for them to do; but tho' they should by their violent or disorderly Proceedings, be likely to Cause never so much Mischief to Himself, and to the Publick.

If in Answer to this it shall be return'd, that such a Suggestion is a little hard, and ought not to be admitted against such a Body of Men, as 'tis to be hoped both know their duty better, and will more religiously practise it, than to make such Use of the Liberty now contented for; I shall only say, that I hope the same. But yet in Matters of Publick Concern, where the Peace and Interest of a Church and Realm are at stake; all possible Dangers are to be Weigh'd. And why that should not be possible in One Age or Country, which has sometimes happen'd in Others, I cannot tell; but sure I am, should such a Turbulent Spi-

x. HENRY
the VIIIth.

rit break in upon us, there ought to be Somebody intrusted with a Power to suppress it; and to put an End to such an Assembly as by their Sitting (in such a Case) could do no Good, but might do much Harm to Themselves, to the Church, to their Religion, and to their Country.

However it be, the Determination of this is certainly a Matter of Public Concern; and if Those to whom the Judgment of Customs, their Tendency, and Authority, by Law, do's belong, shall think that it might be dangerous to the Public Good to take away the Power of Calling and Proroguing the Convocation from the King, and the Metropolitan; and to Lodge it in the Body of the Clergy, (a Power which the Parliament never but once was Intrusted with, and the Experiment then made, had not such an Effect as to Encourage the Nation, any more than the King, to make it again with any Other the like Body) then it will follow, that for this Reason, as well as all the rest, they must declare it to be void in Law; and such as no Time, or Continuance, can give any force to.

I conclude therefore, that this pretended Custom, being founded, not upon the Free Acts of the Clergy, but of the King and the Archbishop, is not only no Proper Custom as to any Concern of theirs; but if it were capable of being Applied to Them, yet being in its self Unreasonable and Incongruous; contrary to the Rights of the King, and our Metropolitans, both by Common and Statute Law; and, as it may happen, prejudicial to the Public Good, is of no Obligation; nor capable of giving any such Right, as some would now pretend to by it.

Sect. 30.

(6) But to wave all these Exceptions as to the Reasonableness of this pretended Custom, and consider what is 6thly no less required to the Authority of it; I mean its Age, and Continuance. Has it this Qualification at least, if no Other, to make it Good, by the Rules of our Law? Can Those who insist upon it, truly lay it in the only Legal Form by which any Custom with us can be pleaded, That the Clergy have Met in Convocation by their Own Right; such as neither the King, nor the Archbishop, have any Authority to Over-rule, with Every New Parliament; and Sate during the Continuance of it, Time out of mind; De tempore cujus contrarium memoria hominum non existit? I will be positive in my Answer that they cannot: On the Contrary, I do aver that this Custom first began in the Reign of King Henry the viiith: That till then our Convocations were more frequently held out of Parliament Time, than in it: And that for the 200 Years before, there are not 20 Instances upon Record to be found, where the Parliament and Convocations have All Sate Concurrently with one another. And then I shall submit it to the Learned in our Law to tell Us, Whether such a late Custom as is now set up; A Custom labouring under so many Defects, as I have before Observ'd; and built upon such an incompetent Foundation, shall Deprive the Prince of his Antient and Undoubted Right; and force our Metropolitans to give up their Own Authority too; so that during the Session of Every Parliament it shall not be in the Power of the One to Refuse to Call Them; nor in that of the Other to Prorogue Them, or otherwise Hinder them from doing whatsoever Business they shall themselves think fit to do.

Sect. 31.

Godbolt Reports. pag. 235.

If to avoid the manifold Inconveniences under which I have now shewn the pretence of Custom in this Case to lie, it shall be Alledged, that the Strength of their Argument consists not barely in the Usage of the Clergy to Meet in Parliament Time, but in the Kings Disuse of Calling them at any Other Time; And the Archbishops not Proroguing them till all the Preliminaries were over, and it evidently appear'd that they had nothing to do; besides that by our Law a Non-use, or Neglect to Exercise a Right, do's not Extinguish nor deprive any One of his Right; (as it was held by the Court, Mich. 11. Jacob. 1. Comm. Pl. Bishop of Chichester's Case) I must beg leave to say that I am as much puzzled to find out any Disuse of Authority on the One side, as any Custom of the Clergy on the Other. The Right of Our Kings is to Command their Archbishops to Call their Convocations whenever they please to have them Meet. They have Exercised this Right, in Calling them at the Time of Parliament; not because they were Oblig'd to Call them then, but because it was their Will and Pleasure that the Clergy should then be Assembled. The Right of the Metropolitan is to Preside over his Synod, and in consequence thereof to Prorogue it as he sees fit. He has Exercis'd that Right: With respect to the Kings Affairs, and the Convenience of Them, He has taken the Kings Directions in the doing of it: With a due

a due Deference to the Judgment of his Suffragans, He has commonly taken their Advice too. But with respect to the Clergy He has Acted without Reserve: Has Prorogued them as He has thought good; and they have (till now) no less readily Obey'd him in it.

K. HENRY
the VIIIth.

This therefore Both Our Kings and Archbishops have done; and more than this is not pleaded for on the behalf of Either. Our Princes have hitherto, and as we desire they should, so we may presume They will, still continue to issue out their Writs for the Convocations to Meet, whenever They Summon their Parliament. Being Met, we doubt not but that They will leave them to the Conduct of their Metropolitan, as they have always done, during the Continuance of the Parliament. We do not at all question but that our Metropolitans will no less readily Assent to their Sitting and Acting, whenever They shall be suitably requested by their Clergy, or Advis'd by their Suffragans; unless They shall have some very Extraordinary and Urgent Reasons to the contrary. All that is aim'd at in the present Argument is, not to hinder the Meeting or Acting of these Assemblies, but to put the Right of Convening and Governing Them upon its true Bottom; that as Both our Kings and Archbishops are ready to Encourage the Clergy to Meet and Act at all proper Seasons; so They may also have it in their Power to make the last Judgment of those Seasons; and to hinder them from Coming together when they think it would be a Burden to the Church, or Inconvenient to the Affairs of the State to Assemble them; as well as to Countenance and Command their Convention; when it would turn to the real Benefit of either, that they should come together.

And thus have I consider'd the Law of Custom, as it joynly concerns both the Kings Prerogative, and the Metropolitans Jurisdiction; and equally defends both. But I must not forget that I am now in a particular manner concern'd for the King's Prerogative; The Archbishops Authority being not only a little besides my present purpose, but already fall'n into a better Hand; who has Given us more than one Instance of his Ability to Assert it. Let me therefore from these General Maxims of our Law proceed,

Seet. 32.

2dly. To consider what particular Provision our Law has made on behalf of the King's Prerogative, in the Case before Us.

It is one of the Rights of the King in all greater Matters, in which He is by our Laws justly prefer'd before the Subject; 'that whereas Vigilantibus & non Dormientibus jura subveniunt, is the Rule for the One; the King's Plea is Nullum tempus occurrit Regi; as my Lord Hobart tells us; Sheffield's Case; 13 Jac. 1. And this² Sr. John Davis directly applies to such Customs as that which is now under Debate: And thereupon lays down this Rule, that to make a Custom Good, Doct estre submit al Prerogative del Roy, & nient exalt encounter Ceo. Let us see how he reasons to this purpose, upon this Principle: "A Custom, says He, which Exalts its self over the King's Prerogative is also void against the King. For Prescription of Time makes a Custom, but Nullum tempus occurrit Regi. In 49 Ed. 3. 3. the Case of Whit-Towers, the Custom of London was Alledged to make Corporations, and held to be void: Because the King alone, by his Prerogative, can do that. In like manner a Prescription to have Sanctuary for Treason, or to have Catalla felonum, &c. is void against the King, because that such a Privilege Exaltat se in Prerogativam Regis. 1 Henry vii. 23. b. And yet in the former of these Cases the Council argued for the City, not barely from antient Custom, but from a pretence of Allowance in the King too. The Case was put thus: 3 That, by the Custom of the City of London, the Members of any Trade or Art might make of themselves a Common Gild, or Fraternity; and that the King and his Progenitors, having by their Charters confirm'd All their antient Usages and Customs, had, in Effect, Granted this Power to them. But the Court Demanded whether they had any Express Charter from the King to make Gildes and Fraternities when they pleased? They confess'd they had not; but claim'd that they had always been Accustomed to do so; and that All their Usages had been confirm'd by our Kings, and therefore that Particular Usage was comprised under that Generalty. But the Court was of Opinion that their General Charters would not help them, if it were not mentioned in express Words in them.

in Parliament, took Sanctuary at Colchester, and escaping thence made an Insurrection in Worcestershire, and afterwards fled to Culne in Oxfordshire, belonging to the Abbot of Abbingdon, and took Sanctuary there. From thence he was taken by force, and carried to the Tower of London, in order to his Execution upon the Attainder in Parliament. He pleaded the Priviledge of the Place from whence he had been taken; and for that the Antient Charters Granted to the Abbots of Abbingdon, and Immemorial Custom, by Vertue of those Charters, was alledged. But the Original Charter of Kennulph King of Mercia, upon which the Case turn'd, was not produced, but only an Inspeximus of it shewn, in the time of King Edward the Third. It was agreed by the Justices of both Benches, with an Unanimous Assent and Consent, that such a Priviledge could not be prescribed, without the Original Charter ante tempus memoria (altho' the Inspeximus must have been more than a Hundred Years old) and the Reason assigned was, quia materia de proditiōe in se tantum se exaltat in prerogativam Regis, quod non potest prescribi tantum per se. And therefore in such Cases, Oportet monstrare Cartas Regis per Verba Generalia vel Specialia, & allocantias in Itinere post tempus memoria.

fol. 25. &c.

The same had been the Law of the Exchequer Chamber many Years before: Whereupon the occasion of another Custom of the City of London there alledged, that in that City there was a Custom, and had been time out of mind, that if a man leave any Goods in Pawn for any duty Cujuscunque fuerint, He who had such Goods in Pawn should keep them till the debt were paid, for which they were a Pledge: Two Principles of our Law were urged, and by the better Opinion allow'd of; One, that this Custom was Unreasonable, and could have had no Good Beginning, and upon that account was Void, and of no Obligation; tho' it had been the Custom of the City, as it was said, — de temps dont memory ne Court. Car ceo Custome est encontre Comon droit, & en prejudice d'autres a que le property, &c. demeurut, & par ceo ne poit Giser en Custome: Said one. Car tiel chose que n'est Reasonable, ne puit Giser en Custome, said another. Il est encontre Reason q'un charger autres biens, ou terres, &c. & pur ce ne poit Giser en Custom, said a Third. The Opinion, in short, of the better and Greater Number was the same, and may be resolved into this General Maxim; "That whatsoever Custom is contrary to the Right and Property of another, is Unreasonable; and being so, is also incapable of being made a Legal Custom.

The other Maxim, which likewise runs thro' all their arguing is this; That tho' the Custom had been Good, yet the King would not have been Obligated by it. Mesque le Custome soit bon uncore le Roy ne sera lie per Ceo. For which Littleton there, in Particular, alledges several Instances and Authorities; and then concludes, mesque cest Custome soit bon, uncore au Roy n'est rien a purpos. With Him went the Opinion of the Judges; and the Cause was, upon this Principle, carried for the King, as in the Report may more fully be seen. So that should this Custom therefore, which we are now concern'd in, otherwise have had all the Properties of a Good Custom, A Reasonable Beginning; A Congruous Relation to the Parties concern'd; A Time out of Memory, beyond the Power of any Records to controul; Yet being directly prejudicial to the Kings Royal Estate and Dignity, and in Derogation of the Power and Liberties of the Crown, the King would not be Obligated by it, nor would it have any Effect in Law towards Him.

Sec. 33.

2 Rights, &c.
pag. 263.

From what has been said, it may now begin to appear, that Dr. A. (as I said) made a little too much hast to his Conclusion, when (after his usual Method of Asserting things without Proof) he told us that this weighty Argument might be dispatched in two Words, by saying; "That the Clergy have certainly a Right of Meeting and Sitting in Convocation (together with Every New Parliament) because thus often they have, for some Hundred Years, Met and sate: And that this was a plain short Answer, which was capable of no Evasion. A short Answer I do confess it is, but how sound, it may yet deserve to be consider'd. For as I have now shewn, Customs tho' never so Antient, if Unreasonable; if incongruous; if contrary to Laws of the Realm, or the Just and Legal Rights of any Persons who live under the Protection of those Laws; but much more, Customs which Exalt themselves against the Prerogative of the King, and impeach the Royalty of his Imperial Crown and Dignity, are void in Law, and not capable of being made Obligatory by any Prescription. And, upon this Ground, I shall venture to give as short a Reply, and as plain a One too, to his short plain Answer; swer: "There has been no such Custom for some Hundreds of Years, as he affirms; ^{K. HENRY the VIIIth.} and as for that of the Last Age and Half, supposing it to have been such as is pretended, yet will not such a Custom suffice to give the Clergy a Right thus to Meet and Sit; nor Oblige the King or the Archbishop, to Suffer Them so to do.

In a word, these three things I insist upon, and must desire a plain, but not so short an Answer to; if ever Dr. A. means to have me his Convert in this matter: 1st, That (to allow at present for the latter Practise which I shall hereafter Enquire into) there was any manner of Custom, I do not say Settled but begun, before the latter End of King Henry the Eighth, for the Convocations to be Called, and Held with every New Parliament. I utterly deny it, let Him shew that there was, if he can.

2^{dly}. That the Acts of our Kings and Metropolitans, done in the Exercise of their Power and Jurisdiction over their Convocations, in the free Calling, Proroguing, and Dissolving of them, are in their Nature capable of Introducing any Custom in favour of any but Themselves, and their Own Authority, whose Acts they were, much less to the Advantage of Those who only obey'd them in the Exercise of these Powers, and did nothing but in pursuance of their Commands, and that to the Destruction of that very Authority from which they Proceeded. And

3^{dly}. That a Custom labouring under so many Defects; Unreasonable, Incongruous, Injurious to the Rights of our Superiors; of no Age; Contradicted by all our Antient Records, and that so clearly, as to leave no Suspicion of doubt against it; Derogatory to the Royal State and Dignity of the King; and which being Allow'd, may prove no less Inconsistent with the Public Good; is nevertheless to be submitted to as of Force in Law; and fit to prescribe against the Sovereign Authority of the King, and the Canonical Rights of our Archbishops.

But has not Dr. W. himself allow'd the force of Custom in this Case? Has he not agree'd that Custom has prevail'd in this Particular; and that the Constitution of our Government founded thereupon do's give the Convocation a Right to be Summon'd whenever the Parliament is? This I own, Dr. W. did say; and in that He was certainly mistaken. The Occasion of his Error was, that He was led away with the Common Opinion that things had always been, as they were in the last Age; and He had not the Opportunity, when he wrote before, of discovering that Mistake, and so He drew a very false conclusion from it. If Dr. A. thinks Dr. W's Authority of any weight, he will give me leave now to recommend it to Him upon better Grounds than he could heretofore have done it. He was then forced to Reason as well as he could, upon such Materials as he had at hand; which were but very few, and not sufficient for the Work he was about. He has now taken Care to be better Inform'd of these Matters, and therefore thinks himself better able to determine concerning Them.

As for that Maxim, which ² Dr. A. also more than once appeals to Dr. W. for, that Custom of Convocation is the Law of Convocation; I do agree with him that it is: And, upon that very Principle, I do affirm, that the Convocation is obliget to Meet, Act, and Separate, in Subordination to the Kings and the Archbishops Authority. They have always Govern'd our Convocations in these Matters; and our Convocations have always (Time out of mind) submitted to either Authority. And therefore by Custom (the Law of Convocation) as well as by the Constitution of our State and Church, our Convocations are Obliged so to do. The Principle I take to be Sound in Reason, and Good in Law: Let Dr. A. but take care to make a right use of it; and we shall hardly differ about it.

Whether I shall need, after having so fully given my Reasons why I think the pretence of Custom in this case to be of no moment, to take notice of those two Arguments, which Dr. A. has been pleased to Advance in my Name against my present Plea, I cannot tell. However that I may not seem either to slight his Kindness, or to decline his Charges, some short Reflections I shall make upon them.

He introduces them with this Preamble: "Dr. W. himself is forced in good Measure, to agree to this; for he owns That whilst the Clergy were wont to Assess themselves, and their Sitting upon this account was necessary for the Support of the Government; they were not only Summon'd to meet, but were wont actually to Assemble, and Sit, so long as was requisite for them to do for this Purpose. Now 'tis not

R. HENRY “ not forty Years ago since the Clergy were in the undisputed Possession of the Pri-
 “ he VIII. ch. viledge of Assessing themselves: And till that time therefore, even by Dr. W’s “ Confession, they had Custom, and consequently Right, of their side, even for “ Assembling and Sitting, as well as being Summon’d. It is a dangerous thing to fall into the Hands of a Man of Art; who like a subtile Operator in Logic, has got the secret of forcing Reason, as well as Nature, and can Extract any Conclusion, out of any Premises. The Proposition taken from Dr. W’s Confession is this. “¹ That as long as the Clergy continued to assist the Government “ by Granting of Subsidies, the Convocation was Generally allow’d to Sit, as of“ ten, and as long, as was Necessary for that Purpose. Now this, says Dr. A. they did till within these forty Years: The Conclusion which one would have thought should naturally have follow’d from these Premises is, I take it, this;
 That therefore till within these forty Years, the Convocation was wont not only to be Summon’d, but to Sit too, as often, and as long, as it was Necessary for it to do for that Purpose. But Dr. A. is a Man of a Higher Reach, than to be confined to the ordinary Laws of Argumentation: He will infer General Conclu- sions, out of Particular Premises; and force Dr. W. whether he will or no, to Confess that he is in the Right when He do’s so. The Convocation was wont, says Dr. W. to Sit at such Times as the King wanted an Aid of them; and so long as it was needful in order to that End: Therefore, says this Philosopher, The Convocation was wont, even by Dr. W’s Confession, To Meet, and Sit, and Act, (and that Indefinitely without any Respect to any such End) with every Parlia- ment: They had Custom, and consequently Right, of their side, for Assembling and Sitting, as well as being Summon’d.

 &c. pag. 249.

I would willingly, if I could, bring my Acknowledgment, and Dr. A’s Consequence, to a better Understanding. In order thereunto I will adventure, with his leave, to add an intermediate Proposition to make up the Syllogism, and warrant his Conclusion; and then it will stand thus: The Convocation whilst it continued to Grant Aids to the King, was wont not only to be Summon’d, but to Sit too, as often, and as long as it was requisite in order thereunto. But in Order thereunto it was Requisite that it should Meet with every Parliament, and Continue to Sit, as long as every Parliament Sate: And therefore by Dr. W’s own Confession it did not only Meet, but Sit too, whilst it continued to Aid the King. It continued thus to Aid the King till within these forty Years: And therefore, till within these Forty Years, it not only Assembled, but Sate with Every Parlia- ment, &c. during the Sessions of it Quod erat demonstrandum.

If Dr. A. approves of the Proposition which I have added, and without which it is impossible for him to warrant the Inference which he has drawn from my Concession; He will then please to prove these three things in Confir- mation of it; without which we shall still be at a loss: 1st. That the Convocation Granted Subsidies every Session of Parliament; and therefore it was necessary that it should Meet and Sit with every Session of Parliament. 2^{dly}. That in Order thereunto, it has, or ought to have Sate, as long as the Parliament continued: And, lastly, That, by thus Sitting by the Kings Direction, and at the Archbishops Command, for this particular End; it has introduced a Legal Custom, and by that has gain’d a Legal Right, of Sitting and Acting Generally, as the Clergy themselves shall think fit, during the Session of every Parliament; tho’ the reason that introduced this Custom is ceased, and tho’ neither the King directs, nor the Archbishop requires them to do so: Nay, which is yet more, whether they think fit, or not, to allow of it.

Sect. 35.

Having thus far defended my self against the dangerous Attempt made by Dr.
 A. to turn my Own Principles upon me; and force me to Confess, his Assertions be true, which I know, and am perswaded, are evidently false; I shall now proceed to consider the two Arguments which He tells the World I advanced to prove that the Clergy ought not to Enjoy their Customary Right of Meeting and Sitting with the Parliament. “² The One drawn from the true End and Design of Calling the Clergy to Parliament: The Other from the Alteration that “ has happen’d in the Original Constitution of these Meetings. As to the first of “ these, says Dr. A. He tells us, that the true End and Design of the Clergies “ Assembling with the Parliament, was to Raise Money: And that End there“ fore now ceasing, since they left off to Assess themselves, the Right grounded “ upon it ought to cease too. As to the Second; that the Convocation when it “ used

² Rights, &c.

“ used to sit with the Parliament, was a Member of Parliament, but not being “ so now, there is no Reason why it should sit with it. K. HENRY
the VIIIth.

I have already spoken so largely to both these Points, that I shall need only to set my Opinion of them Right, and for the rest shall refer my self to what I have before said with Relation to both. And therefore 1st: That the main thing which moved our Kings first to Assemble the Provincial Convocations of our Prelats and Clergy, was to Obtain the same Aid of Them there, that they had of their Lay Subjects in Parliament, is a truth, which I think, is clear even to Demonstration; I will venture to add which I have demonstratively proved so to be.

As for their Assembling together with the Parliament from the time of King Henry the Eighth: I do now affirm the Ground of it to have been this, that the Parliament might confirm their Subsidies by their Authority; which till the passing of the Act of Submission they never did; but left it to the Clergy who gave them, to Enforce the Payment of them by their own Ecclesiastical Orders and Constitutions. If Dr. A. do's not like this Doctrine coming from my Pen, let Him take it from one of a much better Authority with him; and whose Principles were never yet doubted to run, to the utmost Heighth of a true Churchman. Mr. Fuller having laid down a Position in his Church-History, that when the Parliament notified, and declared the Ecclesiastical Power to be in the King, which the Pope had formerly unjustly invaded; it was done with this Restriction, that the Persons or Property of Refusers, should not be subjected to Temporal Penalty without the Consent of Parliament. Dr. Heylin, after he had made his Answer to it; raises this Objection which, with his Reply to it, I must here take the Liberty in good Measure to transcribe.

“ If it be Objected, as perhaps it may; That the Subsidies Granted by the “ Clergy in the Convocation are ratified, and confirmed by Act of Parliament, be- Fullers Appeal. part. II.
pag. 66, 67.
 “ fore they can be levied either on the Granters themselves, or the rest of the “ Clergy: I answer; that this makes nothing to our Authors Purpose, &c. For,
 “ before the Submission of the Clergy to King Henry the viiith, they Granted “ Subsidies and other Aids unto the King in their Convocations; and levied them “ upon the Persons concern'd therein by no other way than the usual Censures
 “ of the Church. — As for the ratifying of their Bills by Act of Parliament, it “ came up first at such times (after the Submission before mentioned) as the “ Kings of England being in Distrust of their Clergies, did not think fit to em“ power them by their Letters Patents for the making of any Synodical Acts, Ca- “ nons, or Constitutions whatsoever; by which their Subsidies have been levied “ in former times; but put them off to be Confirmed and made Obligatory by “ Act of Parliament: Which being afterwards found to be the more expedite “ way, and not considered as Derogatory to the Churches Rights, was follow'd “ in succeeding times, without doubt or scruple. He is in the right. Before the Act of Submission, when the Clergy were at Liberty to make any Orders, Or- dinances, Canons and Constitutions without the Kings License, they did by such their Ordinances Confirm their own Grants, and needed not the Parliaments Assistance to enforce the Payment of them. Till that Time therefore as all Seasons were alike to the Kings Purpose; so we find that the Convocations were called at Any indifferently; and not restrained either by Law or Custom to the Sessions of Par- liament. But when this Power was limited by the Authority of that Act; So that without the Kings License to make such Constitutions, they had no Power to enforce the Payment of their Own Subsidies; and our Kings being in Distrust of their Clergy, did not think fit to Grant such Licenses to them: A new Way was set on foot to have them ratified by Act of Parliament; which from thenceforth obtaining, obliged the King to Assemble the Convocation together with the Par- liament; and so brought up that Custom, which has ever since prevailed; but was never before practised.

This then is my humble Opinion in this Case, in which if I am mistaken, yet, as I am not the first who advanced it, so neither have I done it without good Reason. Our Princes changed the Method of Confirming the Grants of the Clergy from the time of King Henry the viiith; so that whereas before they were Ratified by the Ecclesiastical Power only, they were from thenceforth enforced by Act of Parliament. This method begun by Them for Other Reasons, they found by Experience to be a more Expedite way, than that which had before been used.

HENRY
the VIIIth.

As therefore in Order to the doing of this, it was Necessary that the Convocations should be held in time of Parliament, so did it from thenceforth become Customary for our Kings to Assemble them at the same Time with their Parliaments. And since Dr. A. will have this to be an Argument against himself, I do now add with him, that this End Ceasing, the Great Motive which first brought on this Usage is thereby taken off; so that now, our Princes are not only in point of Authority (for that they always were) at Liberty to Call their Convocations when they please; but may, in point of Expedience too, do it at any Other Time as well, nay and perhaps more conveniently (with Respect to the Other Province) than when their Metropolitan and his Suffragans are forced to be absent from their Clergy, and out of the Province; and are taken up with their Attendance upon the Affairs of the Realm in Parliament.

To the Other Argument which Dr. A. is pleased, 2^{dly}, to advance in my Name against the Right of Custom in this Case; He will give me leave to say, that it is either very unskilfully, or very unfairly represented by Him. My Opinion is plainly this: That from the Time that the Lower Clergy were called by the Premunitory Clause to Parliament, they have been an Essential Part of the Parliament of England; and together with the Bishops and Prelats have constituted One of the Three Estates of it. The only Change that, I conceive, Time has produced in this matter is, that the Lower Clergy have by degrees left off to Obey, and our Bishops to execute the Parliamentary Summons, and our Kings have tacitly consented to Both. As for the Provincial Convocations, I look upon Them to have been always quite different in their Nature from the Other Convention. They never were, any more than They now are, any part of the Parliament; The principal Members indeed of the One, the Bishops, and the Lower Prelats, were also, let me add, and (in Law) still are, Members of the Other. They are Summon'd to Both; and the former still continue to Sit, and Act in Both. But as the Proctors of the Clergy might always have been, and many times were different, so the Assemblies themselves are, and always were utterly different too in their Legal Nature and Constitution from One Another: And therefore Dr. A. must excuse me if I do not accept of his Favour; nor make use of an Argument founded upon a Change, which, without injury to the Rights of the Clergy, I cannot allow to have been ever made at all.

Sec. 36.

Having thus far disputed with Dr. A. the Matter of Right in this particular; and I persuade my self, sufficiently shewn, that the Custom which He would set up in Opposition both to the Kings Prerogative, and the Metropolitans Authority, has so many and such great Defects, as render it utterly void of all force in Law: I proceed now,

Secondly: To Examine the Matter of Fact; and to Enquire, whether there has been any considerable Innovation in this particular under the Late Government: Any thing done either by the King or our Archbishops, which had not been commonly done by other Princes, and Metropolitans, heretofore.

When this Controversy was first rais'd by the Letter to a Convocation Man; the great Complaint was laid against the Late King, whom that Author took the Liberty to accuse of I know not what Hardships (to say no worse) in his dealing with the Clergy as to this Matter. The Question which he propos'd was

Letter to a Conv. Man. p.

this: "What Law there is that commands or permits their Assembling, Con- ferring, or Resolving as a Convocation, but the Absolute free Pleasure of the Prince? At his very first setting forth upon which he tacitly intimated that the King had hinder'd the Clergy from meeting in Convocation, as by Law they ought to have done."

Ibid.

"Before I give a direct Answer (says He) to this Question, I shall take leave to say, that should it be admitted, that the Assembling of Convocations is entirely dependant on the Sovereigns Will, yet considering the great Need there at present is of One; We cannot doubt of the Kings gracious and ready Concurrence to this purpose, upon the least motion of his Grace, my Lord Archbishop. But this next step was more bold: Had we no hold on his Majesties Kindness and Affection towards the Religion Establish'd by Law, yet should we not suspect his Compliance on the Score of strict Justice: His Coronation Oath Obliges Him to preserve the Rights of the Church of England intire; and we humbly presume that One of the chief of those Rights is a Frequent Sitting of Convocations. In these kind of Preparatory Reflections he go's on for some Pages (all with relation to the King) and then Concludes

cludes in these Words: "Were the Calling therefore of Convocations lodg'd purely in the Breast of the Sovereign, yet could we have no manner of Jealousie of his Princely Readiness to Call Them. HENRY the VIIIth.

But this was only a Preliminary Flourish to prepare us for his main Proofs; which like the foregoing Reflections are all Levell'd against His Majesty, as if He only were concern'd in this matter, and had alone been the great Opposer of the Assembling of our Convocations. I will take up a few of his Passages in Confirmation of this, as they Occur in the Process of his Argument. P. 30. "It is apparent by our Constitution, that the King is entrusted with the Power of Convening Synods and Convocations in respect of the Church, as He is with Summoning Parliaments for the Redress of Grievances, and the Public Safety of the Nation; in the same manner, and under the same Limitations. 'Tis true a Convocation cannot Assemble without the Assent of the King. But the Question is, Whether that Writ ought not to Issue whensoever a Summons goes out for a Parliament? And in another Place to the same Effect, but only more peremptorily, He thus writes: p. 33, 34. "That tho' the King (for 'tis at Him still that he aims) be entrusted with the Formal Part of Summoning and Convening, yet since by the very Essence and Constitution of our Church a Convocation ought to Meet, Sit, and Act — the Fundamentals of our Government shew Him when, and how, that Power is to be Exercis'd; and that it ought not to be at His free Will and Pleasure. In short; p. 36. Having argued from the Jurisdiction of the Convocation that it ought to Sit; He thus concludes again, with Relation to the King: "Now no Man will say that this Act of Jurisdiction was Precarious, and at the Kings absolute Will and Pleasure, whether it should be Exercis'd or not. From all which it is plain, that this Question at first was both Propos'd, and Resolv'd, with a direct Relation to the Kings Authority, and with a manifest Reflection upon a suppos'd Abuse which had been made of it. It is true that in three Lines in the Close of all, He would seem to palliate a little what he had before too Openly advanc'd; and lay the Blame upon the Conduct of the late Archbishop of Canterbury: "You may make, says He, what Inferences you please from hence, as to the Disuse of Convocations under the late Archbishop; We are sure his most Sacred Majesty did never oppose their Sitting and Acting. But still which soever were in fault, the King, or the Archbishop; whether the former ever Oppos'd the Sitting and Acting of the Convocation or Not, the very stating and arguing of the Point suppos'd that the King did not use his Authority in this Case as he ought to have done; tho' the Archbishop should be allow'd to have been the Evil Counsellor, in advising him against it; Or at least in not stirring him up so effectually as he should have done, to a due Exercise of that Power which our Constitution had intrusted him withal in this particular. Letter to a Conv. Man. pag. 63.

And now, would not any one think that something had been done by our Late Sovereign in this particular, very different from what his Royal Predecessors had ever attempted? That either our Convocations had never been Summon'd by Him at all: Or that those Summons had been render'd void and ineffectual, by his Proroguing of Them as soon as ever they were Met? This, I think, is the least that any one could infer either from his Arguments, or his Reflections. And of this Imputation Dr. A. has been so far from clearing his Royal Master, that he has (occasionally) added a new Weight to it. Here therefore, before I proceed to any farther Observations, it will be necessary for me in the first place, to vindicate the Honour of our Late Glorious King; by affirming now, what I shall presently make a particular Proof of, That never were our Convocations more regularly Assembled than under his Government: Never were they left more Free to Meet, if they had so pleas'd, without all Interruption from the Crown, than after his Happy Accession to the Throne.

Be the Innovation then, against which such Outcries have been made, what it will; I dare be bold to say, that Prince, tho' so highly charg'd, was altogether Innocent of any. He constantly Summon'd the Convocations with every Parliament: He permitted his Writs to take place during the whole Session of every Parliament: And never once interpos'd His Royal Authority to Prorogue or Dissolve them, till some time after every Parliament had been Prorogued or Dissolv'd. This therefore will abundantly argue either the unpardonable Malice, or Ignorance of that first Writer, in all his Procedure; and for this I Appeal to

K. HENRY the VIIIth. the Particular Parliaments and Convocations of the late Reign, to the time that this unhappy Controversy began.

Anno 1689. The Parliament met by Prorogation October the 19th: It continued to the 27th of January; and was then Prorogued to the 2d of April following. But before that it was Dissolv'd; February the 6th.

The Convocation of Canterbury met November the 6th: It continued to the 27th of January, and was then prorogued to February the 26th. But by the Kings Writ was dissolv'd February the 13th, a Week after the Parliament.

Anno 1690. A New Parliament began March the 20th. 1689. and sate till the 23d of May 1690.

The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury Assembled March the 27th: Was continued by the President to the 30th of April first, and then to the 17th of October following.

The same Year, the Parliament resum'd its Session, October the 2d: The Convocation its Meeting, October the 17th. The One sate till the 5th of January; the Other continued without any Prorogation from the King till the 5th of June after.

Anno 1691. The Parliament Re-Assembled, October the 22d. and sate on till the 24th of February following.

The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury met the same day with it; and was not prorogued by the King till the 12th of April; that is, till six Weeks after the Parliament was Risen.

Anno 1692. The Parliament sate again November the 4th, so did the Convocation of this Province too; on the same day, and by the same Authority. The Parliament continued to the 14th of March; but the Convocation was left to its Liberty by the King till the 2d of May, six Weeks again after the Other was Risen.

Anno 1693. The Parliament Assembled November the 7th, and sate till the 25th of April after. The Convocation of Canterbury met the same day; and was not prorogued, by vertue of the Royal Writ, till the 28th of April, 3 days after the Parliament had been Prorogued.

Anno 1694. The Parliament sate again November the 12th, and Continued till the 3d of May the next Year. The Convocation of this Province met the same day; and continued without any Interruption from the King till the 7th of May following.

Anno 1695. The Parliament which had hitherto sate being Dissolv'd, a New one began November the 25th, and continued till the 27th of April following. The Convocation of Canterbury met a few days before it, November the 22d. and was not prorogued by the Kings Authority till the 12th of May; a fortnight after the Parliament had been Prorogued.

Anno 1696. The same Parliament Met again October the 20th: The Convocation of our Province the same day. The Parliament sate till the 16th of April; the Convocation continued till the 13th of May, before the King interposed for the Prorogation of it.

Anno 1697. The Parliament began its last Session, December the 3d: and continued it to the 5th of July the next Year. The Convocation of Canterbury met again with it; but it continued longer, to the 12th of July, before it was dissolv'd by vertue of the Kings Writ.

Shall I go yet farther? Let me then add; that the next Year, Anno 1698. a New Parliament began; and with it the Convocation of this Province, December the 6th. The One sate but till the 4th of May; but the Other was left free by the King till the first of June; four Weeks after the Parliament had been Prorogued.

Anno 1699. The same Parliament met again November the 16th, and sate till the 11th of April following. The same Convocation was Assembled the same day with it; and continued till two days after it, April the 13th, before it was prorogued by the Royal Authority.

Such was the Conduct of that Great Prince with respect to these Assemblies: Let the most prejudic'd Person say, if He can, what any Other Prince ever did more to Authorize their Meeting? Or what he would have had his Late Majesty to have done more, to have prevented those Imputations which that Anonymous Writer has, in the Proposal, State, and Prosecution of the present Controversie, with equal Rudeness and Injustice, cast upon his Government?

But

But if there has therefore been no Innovation on the Kings Part nothing done or omitted by him, that was ever wont to be done by any of his Predecessors; where has been the Oppression? Or what is it that some Men have so loudly complain'd of? Is it that the Convocations have not been suffer'd Actually to Meet and Sit, and Do Business during the Session of every Parliament; but have been prorogued by their Presidents from time to time without Entering upon any? So the Letter to a Convocation Man intimated: For that is the Grievance of which He Complain'd, tho' He falsely laid the Cause of it at the Kings door: Let us hear how he made his Friend put the Question to him; p. 1. What Law "is there that Commands, or Permits the Convocations Sitting and Acting, but "the Absolute and Free Pleasure of the Prince? What the Friend here propos'd in the Terms of Sitting and Acting, the Author Explain'd by the other Words before mentioned. p. 21. of Assembling, Conferring, and Resolving as a Convocation. This He elsewhere calls the Sitting of the Convocation; p. 26. And tells us that by the Fundamentals of our Government it ought, in Parliament time (for that He means pag. 34) to Meet, Sit, and Act. In the next page he is more express; He speaks of the Convocation as an Assembly "which was frequently and of necessity to Meet, and Sit too, and Act: And from some other "Allegations He infers, p. 40, That the Clergy were to Sit and Act in Parliament Time. This therefore was evidently the Thing which that Author contended for; and that they were Prorogued by their Presidents, and not allow'd thus to Meet, Sit, and Act, was the Grievance complain'd of; and represented as the peculiar Innovation, and Oppression of the present Government.

In Opposition to this Pretence, I urged among other things even their own great Argument of Custom against Them. I agreed (but in that I was too forward) that the Clergy had indeed, a continued, immemorial Custom, for being Summon'd to Convocation in Time of Parliament; but I denied that they had any such Custom for their constant Sitting and Acting: And affirm'd, that excepting in Order to their Granting of their Subsidies, for which they were always Allow'd actually to Assemble and Sit, they had been Ordinarily Prorogued, without ever Entering upon, or Doing of, any Other Business. My Words in one Place (and they contain the Substance of all the rest) were these. "To settle this first Point, the Sum of it is this. That the Church has a Right to "have its Convocations Call'd, as often as the Parliament is Assembled, I agree. "That the Convocations thus Call'd have a Right to Sit and Act whenever the "Circumstances of the Church require it so to do; I allow also. But that the "Convocation ought of Right not only to be Summon'd, but to Meet and Do Business as often as the Parliament Sits, whether there be any Need for such its "Meeting or No; This I utterly deny: And I am perswaded it would be a "Burden to the Clergy rather than a Privilege, to oblige them to such an Attendance. And for this Sitting, p. 141. I deny them to have had any Custom, in these Words, which clearly determine what kind of Meeting and Sitting was meant by me. "If by Sitting be meant (as in the present Question I suppose it is) their Meeting to Do Business, and being allow'd to come together for that Purpose, then I reply, that for such their Sitting I know no Law besides the "Absolute and Free Power of the Prince. I should have added, and the Authority of the Metropolitan, Acting in Subordination thereunto. "Custom, we are sure, is as much against This, as it has been for the Other: And any Statute, or Positive Law for it, has not, that I know of, been pretended to. Indeed, whilst the Clergy were wont to Assess themselves; and their Sitting upon that Account was Necessary to the Support of the Government; They were not only Summon'd to Meet, but were wont actually to Assemble and Sit, so long as it was requisite for Them to do for this Purpose. But that being done, they were for the most part forthwith Adjourn'd; and Met no more (that is to Do Business) till the King had some New Occasion for their Assistance.

Now this being the State of the Question on Both Sides, 'tis Evident that to have confuted my Assertion; and to have Establish'd that of the Other Author, Dr. A. should have prov'd, that the Clergy had a Right, and that by Custom as well as by the Laws of our Constitution, to Meet, Sit, Act, and Do Business; Every time that the Parliament is Assembled. And accordingly it is to be Observ'd that his main Principle do's come up to this kind of Meeting; Where

K. HENRY the VIII. determining the Convocation to be a part of the Parliament; a State of the Realm, which is by the Laws of our Constitution to Meet with it, and Attend upon it; and lastly, by declaring that the Lords and Commons have a Right to be thus Attended by the Clergy in Convocation; He do's sufficiently imply, that the Convocation ought not only to be Summon'd, but to Sit and Assemble as long as the Parliament do's; and so, in his own Words, make a Session of Convocation, as well as of Parliament.

This therefore is the thing, which should here have been put upon the Issue: Whether, in Fact, ever since the 25th of King Henry the viiith the Two Convocations have not only been Summon'd by our Princes with every Parliament (for that is, in great Measure, allow'd) but have in pursuance of such their Summons, Constantly Assembled, Sate, and Done Business every time the Parliament has Met? Or, whether our Metropolitans have not from time to time, as they have seen Occasion, eas'd their Clergy of such an Actual Attendance; and prorogu'd them from Session to Session; sometimes without entring upon any Business at all; at other times without debating or resolving upon any thing besides their Subsidies, for which they were Call'd by our Kings; and for which therefore they were necessarily to be, not so much Permitted, as Required, to Meet and Act by their Metropolitans? This, I say, was plainly the Question which ought to have been put upon the Issue between Us. But this Dr. A. knew very well, would not serve his turn. He saw that upon the true State of the Matter it would appear, that there had been nothing of any moment done in our Days, for which Precedents would not be found in those of our Fore-Fathers. He perceived that there was nothing more Evident in our History, than that our Archbishops had always enjoy'd and exercis'd, the Power of Proroguing their Convocations at their own Will. That in doing of this they had been accountable to None but their Princes, by Authority of whose Writs they Assembled them. In short, That they had often times done this, for whole Sessions together; when there was nothing to be done by the Clergy; Or nothing, which they thought it proper for them to do.

Let me for this Appeal to Dr. A's own Confessions in this Case. He distinguishes their Meeting and Sitting, from their Acting: And then tells Us that the first is Occasional, tho' the Others be not. "For they may possibly when Met (says He) have no Business to do; and then as they met a Course, so they Adjourn, or are Adjourn'd, a Course. So He speaks; But He should have said, as they Met in Obedience to the Summons of their Metropolitan, so by his Authority they were Prorogued (if he pleases let him add) a Course to some Other Day. And again not long after; having mention'd the Opening of the Convocation, after the usual manner of this Province, He add's; "There are Instances indeed, wherein They have gone no further than this, nor done any Other Business. But where then is the great Difference between Dr. A. and Me in this particular? Or what have I asserted, that Dr. A. himself do's not allow to be true? I confess'd heretofore (whatever I now do) that the Convocation had a Right to be Summon'd with every Parliament; to Meet and do Business whenever there was any Business to be done in such Assemblies: All I denied was that they had either Right or Custom Actually to Meet and Sit every Parliament, when there was nothing for them to do; or that it was any Innovation, for their Metropolitan, in such Cases, to prorogue them from time to time, during the Session of Parliament. Dr. A. agrees that there are Instances (several in this Province; but Many in the Other) wherein they have Done nothing but Meet according to their Summons; and having pass'd the first Preliminaries, have Gone no further, nor done any other Business; but as they met a Course, so have been Adjourn'd a Course.

Why yes, there is still a Difference betwixt us, and it consists in this: That heretofore the Convocation was wont not only to Meet at the Time appointed, but to be Open'd in Form by the Archbishop; Divine Service has been said; a Sermon preach'd, and a Prolocutor chosen. And this Dr. A. thinks to have been the Great Omission of the present Times: "For tho' it has been usual to Adjourn Convocations a few Days after they have Met and Sate, when there was little or no Business to do; yet it was never till this time known that a Convocation was Adjourn'd before it Sate, that is indeed, before it was a Convocation.

I do

I do confess what Dr. A. alledges is in good Measure true, with respect to the Usage of our Convocation; which since the Time of King Henry the Eighth has been wont not only to be Summon'd and Meet (as it has done within these three last Reigns) but to be Open'd in Form; and to choose a Prolocutor; and I will tell him the Reason how it came to be so. Till these three last Reigns scarce One Convocation was ever Assembled, in some Session or other, of which our Princes either had not a Subsidy granted to Them; Or did not Call them with a Prospect of Obtaining an Aid from them. Now in Order to this End, it was necessary that the Convocation should be put into a Posture of doing Business; and for that reason there is no Instance that I know of, before the time of King Charles the Second, in which this was not done. But no sooner did the Clergy leave off to do this, but they from thenceforth left off these Forms too, as matters of little moment; so that from the End of that Convocation which gave up this Right, we hear no more of any Prolocutor, till the the Reign of King James the second: When the Archbishop thinking, I suppose, it might be necessary to have the Clergy in a Readiness to joyn in any Acts that might be requisite to be done by them in those difficult times; Order'd them to Choose One; but yet after that never gave them the Opportunity of Presenting; if, of Electing, of Him. As for Those of the Other Province, they have all along held to the Old Method, which first obtain'd in Both; and have not troubled themselves with these Preliminaries but very rarely, and upon some very Solemn, and extraordinary Occasions.

But is this All then that Dr. A. insists upon? Will it content Him to have these Preliminaries observ'd; and will he afterwards leave it to the Archbishop to Prorogue his Convocation as he shall think fitting? No; that would not Answer his End, for which alone, if I judge aright, the Omission of these Preliminaries has been so much complain'd of by some of late. For alas! what Advantage would this be to the Lower Clergy? To be bound to Assemble, Many of them from a very great Distance, to their no small Cost, as well as Trouble, at London and York, only to hear a Sermon, and choose a Prolocutor, and then be told there is no farther Occasion for them? This would be a very wearisome and expensive Privilege to a Great Part of each Province; and such as the Clergy would, I believe, give Dr. A. but small thanks for Retrieving could he gain his Point in it. But the Secret is plainly this: That being thus form'd into a Body (as he speaks) and having fill'd the Chair of the Lower House; they from thenceforth become deliver'd, in good Measure, from the Power of their Metropolitan; and may move what they will; and not be prorogu'd but by their Own Consent. Let us hear how he delivers his Own Sense in this Case. "Tis Rights, &c. true (says he, speaking of the Convocation) their Acting is Occasional, tho' their Meeting and Sitting be not: For they may possibly when Met have no Business to do; and then as they met a-Course, so they Adjourn, or are Adjourn'd, a-Course. But the Chance of their Acting or Not Acting, ought not any ways to hinder their Meeting and Sitting; both because it cannot certainly be known till they are Met, whether there be any Business for 'em or no; and should there not be any, yet they preserve a Right to Do Business when there shall be Occasion for it, by thus Assembling when there is None.

But p. 115. He is more Open; where having shewn how much the Clergy may do when Met in Convocation without the Kings License, He thus Applies it to the Purpose of which we are now speaking: "Whether such Applications are Necessary, should, I suppose, be left to the Convocation itself to determine; tho' Others (He means our Archbishops) may afterwards either second or reject these Applications, who may in these Cases have the Power of Judging, but not of Prejudging the Actions of a Lawful Assembly. Much less have They the Power of Pre-condemning the very Being of such an Assembly; because They foresee not what may be done in it. — The Innovation made in these Matters has begun within these Ten Years last past. For tho' it has been usual to Adjourn Convocations a few days after they had Met and Sate, when there was little or no Business to Do; yet it was never till this time known, that a Convocation was Adjourn'd before it sate, that is indeed before it was a Convocation.

This therefore as it is the great thing which Dr. A. at last contends for, so is it that for which He sets such a Value upon the Business of Opening the Convocation in Form, and filling the Chair of the Lower House. "There are Instances indeed, (he says) when they have Gone no farther than this, and Done no other Business; but it was when they had no other Business to do: For they were always put into a Posture of doing it, and into a Capacity of making such Motions, and Requests, as They should judge proper for the Good of the Church, or the Redress of Grievances. In all which if I take his meaning aright, the Points which he insists upon are these; That the Clergy being Call'd to Convocation by the Archbishops Mandate, in pursuance of the Kings Writ, have a Right not only to meet thereupon, but to be put into a Posture of Doing Business; To Sit so long as is requisite in order thereunto; To make whatsoever Motions or Applications they please in Church-matters: In short, To perform any such Lawful Acts, as such an Assembly may perform; and that without any Power in the Archbishop to Prorogue them, till they have done this; or at least have sufficiently shewn, or signified to him, that they have Nothing to Do.

Will Dr. A. put the Issue of this Case, thus New-stated by Him, upon the Authority of Custom, and the Practise of former Archbishops with their Convocations in Relation to these Matters? I have some reason to believe that He will not, because indeed, He has in one Place at least laid in for a Reserve against it; and, which makes it still the more remarkable, even there where He insists upon Custom for their Right to thus much. Let us take it again in his own Words. "If Custom therefore Creates a Right, we are sure that the Clergy have a Right to somewhat more than a bare Summons: They have a Right Actually to Assemble; to be form'd into a Body; to fill the Chair of the Lower House; and if they have any Petitions or Motions to make in Church-Matters, they have a Right to Sit so long as till they have made Them: For thus they have always been accusom'd to Do. Had Dr. A. stop'd there, the State of the Case had been Clear, and Certain: And our only Business would have been to Enquire, Whether, in Fact, Our Archbishops had never been wont to Prorogue their Convocations, till they had made all their Motions and Petitions; or at least had sate so long that they might have made them, if they had pleas'd? But what Dr. A. adds, not only perplexes the Matter, but in my Apprehension utterly overthrows, at least, all the Pretence of Custom before Asserted in this Case; "And when they were Adjourn'd without it, (which therefore He supposes they sometimes were) it was upon a Presumption, that they had nothing of this Kind to Offer; and were Themselves consenting to such Adjournments.

I would willingly take this mystical Author aright if I could. If his meaning be that the Clergy in these Cases were actually Themselves Consenting to their Own Adjournments (as He calls them) and did by some means signify such their Consent to the President, He might then indeed justly presume, or rather did certainly know, that they had nothing to Offer; no Motions or Petitions to make in Church Matters. But if his Intention were, that when the Presidents at any time prorogued their Convocations, without letting them Sit so long as to make these Motions, or to Do the Business which properly belong'd to them to Do, they are to be look'd upon to have presum'd, by such their Procedure, that the Clergy had nothing to offer, but were willing to be Dismiss'd; and so the Consent of the One is to be inferr'd from the Actions of the Other; this is such a Limitation, as I doubt will utterly overthrow all his former Assertions. For according to this account the result of the Case will stand thus: That the Clergy being Summon'd to Convocation, have a Right to Sit, and make Motions, and do Business, unless the Archbishop shall think fit to Prorogue them: In which Case, we are to suppose that the Archbishop did presume they had nothing to Do, and therefore never troubled them to come together at all.

How far Dr. A. will allow of such a confus'd Hypothesis, in which one part can hardly be reconcil'd with the other, I must leave it to himself to consider. It shall suffice me to observe, that here again the Force of Truth press'd upon him; and oblig'd him to a Concession, which his Argument would by no means allow of. He saw that our Archbishops had, in Fact, oftentimes prorogued their Convocations, either upon their Own Judgment, or by the Advice of such of their Suffragans whom they thought fit to consult withal, without asking any leave of their Clergy, or troubling themselves to enquire whether they had any

Bali-

Business to do ; any Motions to make, or any Petitions to offer in Church Mat- K. HENRY ters. He was sensible therefore that Custom would be so far from supporting his the VIIIth.
 Pretensions of a Right in the Lower House, to do all this, whether their Metro- politan would or No, that it would directly establish the Authority of the One, to Prorogue the Other at his Pleasure. What now was to be done? Why a Salvo must be invented to patch up this unlucky Procedure: And whenever any thing of this kind was done (as in one Province it was more often done, a great deal, than any business besides that of Subsidies was treated of) we are to presume that it was done with the Clergy's Consent, because they had nothing to do. Which being so, I shall leave it to any indifferent Person to consider whether this be not plainly to beg the Question ; and to set up a tacit presumption against the plain Evidence of Fact, in a Case where Custom is alledg'd to prove a Right ; and, I think, that matter of fact should be brought to Establish a Custom.

To lay aside therefore Presumptions in a Case which will not admit of any ;
 The plain Question to be resolved in this matter is this : Whether ever since the time of King Henry the 8th, in has been the constant Custom for the Clergy call'd to Convocation, to Sit, Act, and do Business every Parliament, so long as they had any Motions to make, or any Petitions to offer, or any Church-matters to De- bate upon? So that during all that time the Archbishop or President of the Convo- cation, had neither any Right to Prorogue them; nor did in Fact ever do it, till they had either finish'd all such business as they had to Do ; Or had signified to him that they had no Business to do, and were therefore content to be Prorogued by him? Or whether our Archbishops have not all along, not only claim'd a Right to Prorogue their Convocations at their own Discretion, but exercis'd such a Right too; if not without ever consulting their Clergy in that Particular, yet at least without ever Depending upon their Consent, or requiring their Leave and Pleasure so to do? And I do once more affirm, in Opposition to Dr. A's Pretences ; that during all this Period, They have from time to time prorogued these As-semblies ; very often for whole Sessions of Parliament together ; without ever suffering them to enter upon any Business, unless where the King has demanded a Supply of them : In which Case, I do again confess, they were Oblig'd to Him, tho' not to their Clergy, to Command them to Sit and to Enter upon the Consideration of what was required of them, and to come to a Synodical Reso- lution upon it.

Sect. 42.

But there is another Point in which Dr. A. has also advanc'd the Authority of Custom against me ; in Claim of another Right of the Clergy, and that I think as little to the Honour, or Benefit of the Church, as the Doctrine of Attendance ; and as void of proof too. It is this; that the King has no Power to Authorize Our Archbishops either to Summon or Continue their Convocations, but only in Time of Parliament. That the Judges in 1640. who deliver'd their Opinion to the Contrary, purposely Equivocated in the Case, to please the King, and delude the Clergy. That the Continuance of that Convocation was Illegal ; and the Canons which they pass'd justly to be Condemn'd, upon this Account, that they were Agreed to, and Enacted out of Parliament time. And this Opinion “ also (says He) that Parliament was of which Voted the Canons of 1640. Illegal, “ because they were made in an Assembly, which tho' it met by the Parliament “ Writ, yet Sate and Acted, after the Parliament was determin'd. He supposes that the Parliament of 1660 was of the same Opinion: And then add's these remarkable Words ; “ However that may be, sure we are that the Convocations “ of the Clergy have (as has been said already) for above 150 Years been used “ to Meet and Rise within a Day of the Parliament. And if Custom therefore be “ the Law of Convocations (and we have Dr. W's Word for it that it is) then is “ it Law that the Convocation should Meet ONLY, and ALWAYS, in Time of “ Parliament.

Sect. 45.

Rights, &c. p. 67.

Ibid. pag. 68.

I do not at all wonder at Dr. A's Endeavours to Advance such a Notion. It was necessary for One who resolv'd to make the Convocation a Parlia- mentary Assembly, to represent it as an Assembly that had the utmost Dependance upon the Parliament. But what Interest the Clergy should have in such a Notion I am yet to learn; the Freedom of whole Meetings at all proper and reasonable Times, whenever the Exigences of the Church or Religion shall call for them; would I conceive be much more a Privilege and Advantage, than to be oblig'd at some certain times to Assemble, tho' to no manner of Purpose; and to be hindred from Meeting at others, tho' there should be never so much Occasion for it. However I am content that this also be put upon the same Issue of Custom, ever since the only time there has been any Ground for it, I mean the 25th of King Henry the 8th. For that before this there was no Dependance of One of these Assemblies upon the Other, has been already sufficiently shewn, and will not need any further proof.

These then are the two great Points, upon which we are to Enquire how the Custom of the last Age and Half has stood: And I shall enter upon it with all the Freedom of a Person utterly unconcern'd in the event of such an Enquiry. For let the Matter of Fact have been how it will for this last Period, I have before shewn that it will not prejudice either the King or the Archbishops Rights; nor Establish such a Custom as shall suffice, in the Construction of our Law, to overthrow the Just Power and Authority of either.

King HENRY the VIIIth.

8. pag. 290.

When the Parliament began November the 3d, 1529, the State of our Affairs, as far as the present History is concern'd in it, was this. The Business of the Divorce between the King and Queen Catharine, was in the third Year of its Prosecution. Many delays had been made in it by the Pope abroad; and Cardinal Woolsey, who had appear'd so forward at first in the promoting of it, began now no less to Cool in it at Home. By his Conduct in this Affair He had equally disobligh'd, both the King, the Queen, and Anne Bolen, who was by this time grown High in the Kings Affections; and by the Interest of the two Latter, joyn'd with the general Disgust, which had been taken at his Administration by the Nobility and People, his fall was finally resolv'd upon by the Former. In order hereunto an Indictment was preferr'd against him upon the Statute of Premunire in the beginning of Michaelmas Term; and on the 19th of October the Great Seal was taken from him, and He was order'd to retire to a Countrey House, not far from London, belonging to his Bishoprick of Winchester. He was soon after convicted of the Premunire with which he had been charg'd; and his Goods seized into the Kings Hands.

Under these Circumstances the Parliament met. The King was equally displeas'd both with the Pope and with the Cardinal; and one End of his Assembling of this Great Council was to consider what He should do with Relation to Both. No sooner had the Commons chosen their Speaker, and the King accepted of Him, but returning to their own House they presently fell upon the Grievances wherewith the Spirituality had before time oppress'd them, contrary (as They affirm'd) both to the Law of the Realm and to Common Right. The chief of these they reduc'd to Six Heads, and ordered three Bills to be drawn for the redress of Them. The first related to the Probates of Wills; The second to Mortuaries; And the third to Non-Residence, and taking of Farms by Spiritual Men. This, my Lord Herbert says, they did by the Kings Permission; And it is not improbable but that he might be willing enough to make some Reformation in these things at this time, the more to alarm the Pope, and to bring Him to his Will.

Upon the sending up of these Bills to the House of Lords, Fisher, Bishop of Rocheſter, spake some Words so reflectingly upon the Commons, that they thought it necessary to complain to the King of it. The Bishop made a fair Interpretation of his meaning, which the King accepted; but the Commons were not at all satisfied with it. The Conclusion of this Matter was, that two New Bills were brought in upon the two first Heads, more moderate than Those first Drawn; and the third was a little qualified; and so they All pass'd, to the Great Displeasure of the Pope and Clergy.

While these things were in Agitation against the Interest of the Clergy in general; the Cardinal was not forgotten in particular. His ² Accusation was drawn up in forty four Articles, and presented to the King by the Lords first, and then sent down to the Lower House: The Cardinal had, in Testimony of his Confession, subscrib'd his own Hand to them All; ³ And at the same time by another

To keep the Clergy the more under awe, the Act of Pardon which pass'd this Parliament, howsoever General in other respects, excepted all Offences against the Statutes of Provisors and Præmunire; and thereby at once shew'd them what designs the King and his Council had in their thoughts, and gave them a just ground to fear what the Effect of them at their next Meeting might be.

With this Parliament a ¹ Convocation was call'd in the Province of Canterbury, ² by Vertue of the Kings Writ Dat. August the 19th, and appointed by the Arch- ³ bishop to meet at St. Pauls London November the 5th, two days after the Parlia- ⁴ ment began. ⁵ Cardinal Woolsey was cited as Bishop of Winchester to it; and ⁶ so return'd in the Certificate of the Bishop of London to the President at the O- ⁷ pening of it. In this Convocation great Deliberations were had both among the Prelats and Clergy in their respective Houses about the Reformation of Abuses. The Archbishop forbad any Discovery to be made of what was done by them to any out of the Convocation, on pain of Excommunication. Articles were also order'd to be drawn up against Hereticks; and the Loan which the Clergy had formerly made to the King was remitted to Him. Thus the Convocation continued till the 24th of December, a full Week after the Parliament was risen; and then seems to have been prorogu'd: Tho' in the short Minutes which I have of it, this Prorogation is not so clearly mention'd as it ought to have been.

It do's not appear that any Convocation met in the Other Province with this Parliament. In August, when it should have been Summon'd, the Cardinal Archbishop was wholly taken up with the great Affair of the Divorce which then Lay before him in Judgment. In November, when it should have Sate, He was fallen into Disgrace, and had somewhat else to do than to Præside in his Convocation. But that, which is more to me than all the rest, is this; that in the ¹ Writ for the Convocation of that Province the next Year, directed to the Guardians of the Spiritualties upon the Death of Woolsey, there is no Notice taken of its having been Summon'd or Assembled before; no mention of any need of Continuing of it because of the Death of the Archbishop: All which we find to have been particularly express'd in the Case of our Province, when the King sent his Writ to our Guardians of the Spiritualties to continue on the Convocation after the like Death of Archbishop Warham during the Sitting of the Synod now Assembled. See Append.
ad Ann. 1530.

About the Latter End of June the next Year, was that famous ² Letter subscribed by a great part of the Upper House of Parliament, and by some of the Lower, which was sent to the Pope with relation to the Affair of the Divorce still depending. ³ The King himself had the Month before Order'd a Translation to be made of the New Testament upon an Occasion of which some Notice must be taken. Those sacred Books had been some time before put into English by Tyndal, Joy, and Others; and were greedily caught up and read by the People. This the Clergy could not endure, but severely punish'd all such as Read or Studied those Books. But the numbers which were gone abroad were so Great, and the People so fond of them, that a stop could not easily be put to this Innovation. The King therefore came to the Starr Chamber, May the 24th, and conferr'd with the Bishops and other Learned Men of this and some other Books. The great Thing alledg'd by the Bishops against permitting the People to use these Sacred Writings was this; that they were not truly translated, and that there were many things in the Prologues of those who had publish'd them, against which they found just Cause to Except. The King therefore took this Method as the most Wise and Pious; He commanded the Translations already publish'd to be Call'd in and Prohibited, and a New one to be made which He might peruse, and allow the Use of to his People when He should think it convenient so to do. This was another Step towards the Work of the Reformation: The next will carry us still farther. For on the 19th of September a Proclamation was set forth to forbid all Persons to purchase, or attempt to purchase, from the Court of Rome, or elsewhere; or to Use and put in Execution any thing heretofore purchased, or hereafter to be purchas'd, containing matter prejudicial to the high Authority, Jurisdiction, and Prerogative Royal of the Realm, or to the Let,

Hindrance, or Impeachment of the Kings Noble and Vertuous intended Purposes in the Premises. Whether this Proclamation was aim'd particularly against the Cardinal, as some have thought; who affirm (but upon what Good Authority I know not) that He had procur'd a Bull from Rome to Oblige the King to restore him to his former Dignity and Authority, I cannot tell. This is certain that not long after the Cardinal himself was attach'd by the Kings Order, and died on his Way to London; and thereby gave such a Blow to the Interests of the Papal Clergy, as they were never able to recover.

Under these Circumstances the Parliament met by Prorogation, January the 16th; and the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury after the same manner, and about the same time. The great Work of this Convocation was to purchase their Indemnity from the Premunire, which they had generally Incurr'd, at the Price of 100000*l.* besides the Acknowledgment of the King to be the Protector and Supreme Head of the Church and Clergy of England. Upon this they had their Pardon granted by Act of Parliament, as far as this Province was concern'd in it. On the 30th of March the Opinions of the Universities with Relation to the Kings Divorce, were brought down to the House of Commons by Sr. Tho. Moor, then Lord Chancellor, and divers others of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and openly read before them. Which being done, the Parliament was the same Day prorogued by the King; and the Convocation the next day by the Bishop of London, whom the Archbishop had made his Commissary for that purpose.

Thus pass'd these Matters in our Province: ¹ The Prelats and Clergy of York were Summon'd by the Kings Writ, dated December the 7th, and met there January the 12th; Six days after the Parliament was Assembled. On Saturday the 14th they remitted to the King the Loan which he had borrow'd of them, as the Convocation of the Other Province had done the Year before. And this by the way may be another Argument to assure us that no Convocation met in that Province the last Year: It being hardly credible but that if there had, this Loan would then have been remitted by the Clergy there, as it was both by the Parliament, and the Other Convocation. This being done, they were continued by Prorogations to the 4th of May, five Weeks after the Parliament Rose. On that day they agreed to the Grant requir'd of Them to indemnifie them against the Penalties which they also had incurr'd, ² by Offending against the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, and particularly against Those of Provisors, Provisions, and Premunire. They are the very Words of the Instrument drawn up by the Convocation, and necessary to be taken notice of for the Vindication of the Account which I formerly gave of this matter; for which Dr. A. has very ignorantly, or rather has knowingly, and injuriously traduced me. But of this I shall Expostulate with him hereafter, and then leave it to the Reader to judge what Censure he shall think fit to pass upon it.

The beginning of the next Year, the King, with the Advice of his Council, order'd a Bible of the largest and biggest Volume to be had in every Church. He had the Year before given directions for a New Translation to be made of it; and He now permitted and provided for the Use of it.

After Other Prorogations, the Parliament again came together January the 15th. The Clergy had now made their Peace with the King, and those of one Province had obtain'd their Pardon for all Offences against the Penal Statutes already committed. But the Commons were resolved to bring them still lower, and to lay hold on the Opportunity which the present State of Affairs gave them, to secure themselves against their Oppressions for the time to come. ³ Among these the chiefest, complain'd of in this Parliament was the Oath ex Officio, which brought on the other Grievances that were, in pursuance thereof, drawn up against them. It had been the Practise of Ordinaries to Summon any person before them, and lay Accusations to his Charge, without naming the Accuser; and the Person so cited must either Abjure or Burn, for Purgation they allow'd none. ⁴ This was a Practise which the Commons grievously complain'd of, and long Debates there were in the House about it. At last it was resolv'd to draw up a full Abstract of all their Grievs together, and to present them to the King; as accordingly they did by their Speaker, and many of their Members, March the 18th.

The King having receiv'd their Petition, told them that it contain'd divers Articles of Great and Weighty Matters; and that He would not give any Answer swer to them, till he had heard the Party Accus'd concerning them. Nevertheless in this Parliament several Laws were made in matters of Ecclesiastical Politie, and in Order to the Reformation of the Church; as in the Statutes of this Year may more largely be seen.

R. HENRY

The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, after two Prorogations, met in like manner, January the 16th. the Day after the Parliament began. It appears by the Process of this Assembly that they were not a little Alarm'd at what was doing in the House of Commons. For besides that some Constitutions had been going forward during this and the preceding Session of this Convocation, which seem to have promis'd a Reformation in what was thought amiss; on the 20th of February the Bishop of London, (who was that day Commissary for the Archbishop of Canterbury) treated particularly about a Constitution in the Case of Correction ex Officio; the thing that then lay before the Commons in Parliament. On the 4th of March the Constitutions which they had been preparing being brought to some perfection, and receiv'd by the President; the Prolocutor of the Lower House desir'd that they might be publish'd.

But there was somewhat else done this same day in Convocation, which Dr. A. having misrepresented, and perverted to the Gratification of his own private Resentments, I shall take the Liberty to give a more exact account of it. The passage as he reports it was this. "That the Lower House complain'd to the other of the Practise of Some Bishops in those days, who took Bonds of Resignation of all the Clerks they preferr'd in their Diocesses, in order, as they said, to Oblige them to Residence. The End was very good, but the Means was thought Unjustifiable; and the Clergy in Convocation therefore thought it worth the while to Endeavour a Redress, tho' I find not whether they effected it, or what Answer was return'd.

I shall not need to say what Bishop Dr. A. had in his Eye, and design'd to Expose to the Censures of such of the Clergy, who love the Profits, more than the Duty, of their Cures; as by Complaints of former Ages, no less than the Experience of the Present, we may have Reason to fear too many at all times have done. But will He please to tell Us, where he met with this curious Piece of History, which He here thus formally delivers to the World? All that the Minutes, from which He wrote, speak, is but the little that stands in his Margin. ² What is there in that to shew that Some Bishops, or indeed that Any Others, at that time took Bonds of Resignation? Where is there any such Limitation, as that which He adds, of the Clerks they preferr'd in their Diocesses? I appeal to his Own Conscience, whether all this be not meer Romance; invented only to cast an Odium upon a Person whom He do's not love; and who, to say no more, had Deserv'd better at his Hands?

The Truth of the Case was this: Among other things complain'd of by the Commons against the Clergy two Years before, their Neglect of Residence upon their Benefices was One. The Matter went so far, that a severe Bill was pass'd in their House to Compell them to it: And tho' that was laid aside, yet a New One was drawn by the Kings Order, which pass'd the same Session into a ³ Statute; and Obliged the Clergy not to be Absent from their Dignities or Benefices for One whole Month together at any One time, or by the space of two Months at several times, in any One Year, under the Penalty of ten Pounds Forfeiture to be incurr'd by them if they were. Against this if Any one should obtain any License or Dispensation from the Court of Rome, or Elsewhere, He was to fall under a double Forfeiture.

3 21 Henr. 8.
c. 13.

At the very Beginning of this Parliament, the Commons had again resum'd their Complaints against the Clergy; and, as I have already observ'd, drew them up into a solemn Petition, which they presented to the King, and the King deliver'd to the Clergy for an Answer. These Vigorous Proceedings of the House of Commons, put the Archbishop and his Convocation upon the Resolution of Reforming what was complain'd of themselves, rather than to suffer the Parliament to do it. On the 23d of January we find certain Constitutions read, but what they were we cannot tell. The next Session more were added to them. These were again read, with the Corrections and Notes of the Lower House, the Session after: By the Minutes of the 80th, and 85th Sessions it appears that to some of these Constitutions the Clergy did not agree. After some farther Treaties had in their following Meetings, on Munday March the 4th, the Bishop of London, HENRY as President of the Convocation, Agreed to Certain of them, and the Prolocutor petitioned "ut Constitutiones admittæ publicentur; That those which were Concluded upon might be publish'd. And farther requested, that Persons presented to any Ecclesiastical Benefice, might not be constrain'd by their Diocefans to be Oblig'd to Residence, by any Obligation in Writing, or by any temporal Penaltie. This is all that the Minutes tell Us of it, and my Conjecture concerning it is this; That among Other things which were debated of in the Upper House, One was this; that the Ordinaries when they Instituted a Clark to any Benefice, should take some Caution of Him, (either by Writing, or some Other Way,) to oblige Him to Re-side upon the Benefice to which He was to be admitted, according to the Late Statute. This, I suppose, the Clergy dislik'd; and desir'd might not pass into an Order among them.

Upon the 12th of April the Archbishop brought in the Petition which the Commons had presented to the King against the Archbishops, Bishops, and Ordinaries; and deliver'd it to the Prolocutor for Answer to be made by the whole Convocation to it. What this Petition was, Dr. A. tho' he professes to have seen a Copy of it was not willing to let the World know, nor doth He give us any Other means of Understanding so much as relates to the present Subject, any other wise than it may be gathered out of the Answers of the Clergy to it. But Dr. Heylin has helped us in this particular; and from him we are informed that the Substance of that part of it, in which we are chiefly concern'd, was to this Effect. "That the Clergy of this your Realm, being your Highnesses Subjects, in their Convocation by them holden within this your Realm, have made, and daily make, divers Sanctions or Laws concerning Temporal Things; and some of them be repugnant to the Laws and Statutes of your Realm, not having nor requiring your most Róyal Assent to the same Laws so by them made, neither any Assent or Knowledge of your Lay Subjects is had to the same, neither to them published and known in their Mother Tongue, albeit divers and sundry of the said Laws, extend in certain Causes to your Excellent Person, your Liberty, and Prerogative Royal, and to the Interdiction of your Laws and Possessions; and so likewise to the Goods and Possessions of your Lay Subjects; declaring the infringers of the same Laws, so by them made, not only to incur the terrible Censure of Excommunication, but also the detestable Crime and Sin of Heresie; by the which divers of your humble and Obedient Lay Subjects be brought into this ambiguity, whether they may do, and execute your Laws, according to your Jurisdiction Royal of this Realm, for dread of the same Censures and Pains compris'd in the same Laws so by them made in their Convocations; to the great Trouble and Inquietation of your said humble and obedient Lay Subjects, and the Impeachment of your Jurisdiction and Prerogative Royal.

⁵ Append. to his Addit. p. 14. num. vi.

To this Petition and Complaint the Convocation drew up their Answer, and Order'd it to be fairly transcribed ² April the 19th; that so it might with all speed be delivered to the King: As it was accordingly done about a Week after. ³ On the last of April the King sent for the Commons, and gave them the Answer that had been return'd to their Petition; Adding withal his own Opinion concerning it to this Effect; "We think their Answer will smally please you, for it seemeth to us very slender. You be a great sort of Wise Men; I doubt not but you will look Circumspectly on the Matter; and we will be indifferent between you. The Commons were accordingly utterly dissatisfied with it, when it was brought by their Speaker to them. ⁵ Dr. A. having publish'd a Copy of this Answer in his Latter Appendix; I shall choose rather to leave the Reader himself to judge of it, than undertake to descant upon it.

⁶ Heyl. again. ft Fuller. par. ii. p. 65.

On the 24th of April this matter came on again in the Convocation. After three Sessions, and great Debates on this Subject, they concluded May 8th to send certain of their Body to the King, with a Request that He would please to preserve the Liberties of the Church, which both Himself and His Progenitors had hitherto protected. This the persons nominated consented to; and accordingly the Bishops of London and Lincoln, with certain Abbots; the Dean of the Chappel, and Fox the Kings Almoner, waited upon Him with their Petition. To this the King returned his Answer in writing by his Almoner at their next Meeting, May the 10th: In which He peremptorily required, "That no
"COR-

" Constitution, or Ordinance, shall be hereafter by the Clergy Enacted, Promul- K. HENRY ged, or put in Execution, unless the King's Highness do approve the same by his the VIIIth.
 " High Authority, and Royal Assent; and his Advice and Favour be also inter-" pos'd for the Execution of every such Constitution among His Highness's Sub" jects.

The reading of this Schedule put the Convocation into a great disorder: They removed to the Chappel of St. Katharine, within the Monastery, and there read it a second Time. Then they were prorogued back to the Chapter-House, May the 13th. But the Archbishop and Bishops went themselves presently to St. Dunstan's Chappel; and agreed that the Bishops of Lincoln and Bath and Wells, with some others of the Convocation, should go to the Bishop of Rochester's House, there to treat together about the Contents of the same Schedule; and should meet the Archbishop the next Morning at his Lodging, within the Palace at Westminster, and declare their Opinions to him.

But the King did not stop here: The next Day, May the 11th, he sent for the Speaker, and Twelve of the House of Commons, to come to him; Eight of the Lords being with him. He spoke to them to this effect: " We thought that the Clergy of our Realm had been our Subjects wholly, but now we have well perceiv'd that they be but half our Subjects, yea, and scarce our Subjects. For all the Prelates, at their Consecration, make an Oath to the Pope clean contrary to the Oath that they make to us; so that they seem to be his Subjects, and not Ours. The Copy of both the Oaths I deliver here to you, requiring you to invent some Order, that we be not thus deluded of our Spiritual Subjects. The Speaker being return'd to the House, caused both the Oaths to be there read; but the Parliament was just at an end, and had not Time to proceed upon this new Matter: So three Days after, being May the 14th, it was prorogued till the 4th of February following.

The Clergy were now under a great Distraction; the King was resolv'd to carry his Point, and his Parliament dispos'd to comply with him in every thing against them. There was therefore no room for Debate; so the next Session, May the 13th, the Upper House agreed upon their Submission, and Answer. On the 15th of May they met again; the Archbishop had receiv'd the King's Writ, to prorogue the Convocation, and there remain'd but that Day to come to a Resolution. Under these Difficulties they finally consented to the Submission, upon which we shall hereafter see the Statute was framed which makes so great a Figure in this Dispute, and has occasioned this particular Enlargement upon the History of it.

What was done in the Province of York, during this Parliament, I cannot find. In Obedience to the King's Writ, of December the 23^d, Anno Regni 23, the Convocation assembled there February the 7th, three Weeks after both the Parliament and our Clergy were met.³ The Minute I have of it adds, that it granted the King a Tenth; what it did besides I have not been able to discover.

The next Year, the Parliament met, February the 4th. In it an Act was pass'd to restrain ⁴ Appeals to Rome, and to direct the Method of pursuing and ending of them within the King's Dominions. The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury was prorogued, as we have seen, to November the 5th. Before that time came Archbishop Warham died; and the King thereupon issued out his Writ to the Prior and Chapter of Canterbury, dated October the 28th, to prorogue it farther to the 5th of February following. This they did by the Bishop of Salisbury, whom they appointed their Commissioner for that Purpose. On that Day they were farther prorogued to Tuesday the 11th of February following. The Prior and Chapter of Canterbury had the Day before directed their Mandate to the Bishop of London for the Continuance of this Convocation and to remove all Scruples which the Death of the Archbishop might have caus'd; especially with relation to the Proctors of the Chapters and Clergy, whose Powers being limited, enabled them only to appear and act under Him, and it might therefore be doubted whether they did not expire at his Demise. By virtue of this Mandate, (which having some peculiar Passages in it not elsewhere to be found, I have put in my Appendix) the Convocation was order'd to meet full and entire, at St. Paul's, on Monday March the 17th, there to proceed according to the King's Writ.

But notwithstanding this Summons, it appears by the Extracts of this Convocation that the Bishops and Prelates continued their Sessions in the mean time at Westminster. On the 17th of March they all met at St. Paul's, as Appointed; and the Bishop of London made his Certificate of the Execution of the Mandate directed to him. On the 26th of the same Month the Question of the Divorce was proposed to the Convocation; and the Opinions of the Universities were then, and at their next Meeting, lay'd before them. What was done by the Prelates and Clergy in this Matter, concerns not the present Subject to enquire. I will only observe, that on the First of April the Archbishop (who had been Consecrated two Days before, March 30th.) now first presided himself in Convocation; and on the 8th of the same Month, prorogued it, by virtue of the King's Writ, to the 7th of June following.

Thus pass'd this Parliament and Convocation: What was done in the other Province, or whether any Convocation at all was held there, I have not been able to discover. To proceed therefore with our History: The Parliament being risen, all things now tended to an entire Breach with the Court of Rome. On May the 23^d, the Archbishop of Canterbury determin'd the Cause of the King's Divorce, and gave final Sentence against the Validity of the Marriage. On Whitsunday, June the 1st, the New Queen was publickly Crown'd; and in September following Queen Elizabeth was born of her. To prevent the Disturbances which Factious Preachers might hereupon raise among the People, an Order was issued out for a General Inhibition of Preaching for some time. In November, the Cheat of the Holy Maid of Kent, which in the following Parliament ended in the Attainder of the Persons concerned in it, was publickly declared and censured.

Under these Circumstances stood Affairs at Home, when the Parliament met, nor were they at all better Abroad. The Pope had issued out a Bull, by which he Excommunicated both the King and his New Queen, if they did not either appear before him, or separate from one another, before the End of September. To this a Reply was made by the King's Order, and the Nullities of it shewn. The Execution of this Bull was suspended for a Month, till after the Interview between the French King and the Pope at Marseilles should be over, in a Consistory held for that Purpose at Pisa, September 26th. It was generally thought that at this Meeting the whole Affair of the Divorce would have been ended to the King's Satisfaction; but instead of that, the Differences grew higher; so that on the 23^d of March, (whilst the Parliament was sitting) the Pope gave Sentence for the Marriage against the King.

And now, when such was the State of Affairs both at Home and Abroad, we cannot wonder if we meet with some Extraordinary Proceedings in the Parliament which began by Prorogation January the 15th. On the 7th of February the Commons sent up a Bill, pass'd in their House, concerning the Consecration of Bishops within this Realm; which being not approved of by the King, to whom the Lords communicated it, that Bill was rejected, and a new one began in the Upper House to the same Purpose. March the 13th the Commons sent up another Bill, to Abrogate the Payment of Peter-pence, and to put an End to Dispensations, and other Writings, from the Bishop of Rome. The next Day they brought up a Third, for the Abrogation of the Usurp'd Authority of the Bishop of Rome. And on the 27th of the same Month, they brought up the Bill on which our present Dispute turns, of the Submission of the Clergy to the King's Highness. Besides these, some other Bills were introduc'd, and pass'd in this Parliament, with Relation to Matters of Religion. Such was the Bill of Attainder against the Holy Maid of Kent and her Confederates: The Bill for Repealing the Statute of H. 4. against Hereticks: And lastly, The Bill for Establishing the Succession; which, with the Oath prescrib'd to be taken thereupon, had no less Influence upon the Affairs of the Church than any of the foregoing.

But not to insist upon these Acts which with the present Cause is not immediately concern'd. The Bill relating to the Submission of the Clergy, which they had made in their Convocation of May 1532, being brought up to the Lords, March the 27th 1534, and read twice the same Day; was, the next Day, read the third time in the Upper House; and with a certain Proviso added by the Lords, was Agreed to, and sent back to the Commons for their Consent. The Commons return'd it, on Monday the 30th, to the Lords again; and the same Day, after after Dinner, being the last Day of the Parliament, the King pass'd it into a Statute. What this Proviso was, which the Lords added, and how the Whole was drawn, will best appear in the the Copy which I have taken from the Roll it self, as far as concerns the Controversie in hand; and that so nicely, as to have observ'd not only the exact Pointing, but for the most part the very Spelling of it, as I found it in the Record.

To return now to the Business of the Convocation, prorogued first to the 7th of June, and then to the 4th of November: On which Day, the Bishop of London, by Commission, prorogued it yet farther to Friday the 30th of January following. Thus the Extracts, which have been preserv'd of these Convocations, relate it; but there must of necessity have been some Mistake in this Matter: For by the Journal of the Parliament, which met at the same time, it appears, that the Lords Spiritual were to meet in Convocation January the 16th, the Day after the Parliament began; and the Chancellor, upon the account of their Obligation to sit that Day in Convocation, by reason of which they could not attend in Parliament, prorogued the Upper House till the next Day after. On that Day, says the Extractor of the Convocation-Acts, January the 30th, the Bishop of London presiding continued the Convocation till Friday the 7th (or rather the 6th) of February following. This must again be false; For the Lords being Assembled on Saturday the 17th of January, made an Order for the Bishops and Prelates to have the Tuesday and Friday next following, and from thenceforth the Friday of every Week, allow'd them to be absent in Convocation; that so on all other Days the House might sit, and the Affairs of the Realm go on without Impediment. And accordingly, upon Thursday January the 22d, the Lords did, for this Reason, Adjourn till Saturday; because the Lords Spiritual were to be absent the next Day in Convocation.

In this Convocation the Question was debated, Whether the Bishop of Rome had any greater Jurisdiction given to him by God, in the Holy Scripture, in this Realm of England, than any other Foreign Bishop? To this their Answer was return'd in Writing, the last Day of the Convocation, March the 31st; and then the Assembly was continued, by the King's Writ, to the 4th of November following.

At what time the Convocation of York assembled, I am not able to say; but certain it is, that they sate, and did their Business, at a quite different time from either the Parliament or Convocation before mentioned. The former was, on the 30th of March, prorogued to the 3d of November; the latter, the next Day, continued to the 4th of the same Month. Five Weeks after both these were risen, the Convocation of York sate May the 5th; and, after some Days debate, agreed in their Answer as to the Question before propos'd, That the Bishop of Rome has not, in the Holy Scripture, any greater Jurisdiction in the Realm of England, than any other Foreign Bishop. This appears from the Instrument return'd by the Archbishop to the King upon it, Dated June the 2d; about which time I suppose that Convocation rose; which being a Matter of some Curiosity, and which flatly contradicts one of Dr. A's main Principles, of the Concurrence in Point of Time of the Parliament and Convocation, during this and the following Reigns, I have thought it not unfit to communicate it to the Reader in my Appendix.

Having thus given such a History of this Act of Submission, as seem'd requisite to shew by what Steps, and Methods, it was carried on; I shall only make this short Use, at the present, of it: That it appears, from the whole Process of it, to have been entirely design'd for the Restraint of the Clergy in the Exercise of their Synodical Powers; and to give the King a greater Authority over them, than He had before. By Consequence, that it was not the Intention either of the King or his Parliament, by that Statute, in any wise to Abridge the Royal Supremacy, which the Kings of England had all along both claim'd and exercised over the Clergy in that Capacity. As therefore I have demonstratively shewn from the History of our Parliaments and Convocations, for above Two hundred Years past, that our Princes were at Liberty to Call their Parliaments, without Assembling the Convocations at the same time with them; and to Require their Archbishops to Summon their Convocations when no Parliament was either Call'd, or intended to Meet; so we must conclude, that they were left to the same Freedom after the passing of this Statute, that we are sure they enjoy'd before: And there-

K. HENRY therefore that upon the whole, neither the Constitution of our Government, nor any Antient or Authoritative Custom, nor this particular Act, (which expressly Regulated the Assembling of our Convocations, and Restrained the Power of Calling them to the Authority of the King's Writ) do require the necessary Concurrence of these two Meetings, the Parliament and Convocation, with one another; No, nor even the Later Custom, which I have just now shewn to have so eminently fail'd in the first Instance; and which will appear, in the Prosecution of this History, to have often done the like afterwards.

Sect. 56.

But before I proceed to shew this, I must stop a while, and consider what Account Dr. A. has given of these Matters. He has made the History of this Act one of the largest, and most elaborate Parts, both of his First Book and his following Additions: And therefore I ought, in Justice, I had almost said in Civility to him, to take a particular Notice of it. And, indeed, as to the greater part of it, his Diligence has been highly commendable. Many things have been brought to light by him, which had, if not escaped the Searches of our most Eminent Historians, yet I know not how had not been observ'd by them. If in some Particulars he seems to have been still mistaken, 'tis a Service Dr. A. has a Right to from me to take Notice of them: Nor can I better requite his zealous Endeavours to expose my Mistakes, than by taking some little Pains (at least) to Correct his. And, to shew him how willing I am to follow a good Example, I will give him my Resolution in his own Words; "That

* Addit. p. 20. "this way my Gratitude shall be return'd, as Time and Opportunity favour me.

The first Rise of the Act of Submission, Dr. A. dates from the Resolution taken by King Henry the viiith to disgrace Woolsey, and so to lessen the Pope's Authority: "For the better effecting this Design, which could not well be accomplish'd, without striking a Terror into those who were then but too much the Pope's Vassals, the Clergy; especially the Monks and Fryars; He tells us, That the King involved them All in a Premunire, for Submitting to Woolsey's Legantine Character, Unauthorized by the Crown; not for procuring or making Use of Provisional Bulls, as Dr. Wake, in his usual Kindness to the Memory of the Clergy, and according to his deep Skill in English History, has represented it.

* Rights, &c. p. 80.

It has always been accounted a little Ominous to stumble at the Threshold. How Dr. A. will proceed in his following History we shall see hereafter: This I will venture to affirm, that he could not well have been more grossly mistaken than he has here shewn himself in the Beginning of it. That the King did intend to keep the Clergy under the Terror of a Premunire, the Act of Pardon, granted by him in the foregoing Parliament, sufficiently shews: In which, as I before observ'd, the Offences of this kind were particularly excepted. But that they had incurr'd this Premunire meerly by submitting to Cardinal Woolsey's Legantine Authority, Unauthorized by the Crown; Or that Cardinal Woolsey's Character of Legate was, indeed, Unauthorized by the Crown; Or that if this had been the Case, it would at all have contradicted my Assertion, which more generally referr'd it to their Offending against the Statutes of Provision, and Premunire; are such manifest Errors, as one could hardly have expected from a Man of a less deep Skill in our English History, than I dare say Dr. A. would be thought to be.

To come to Particulars: May I ask Dr. A. first of all, How he proves that the Clergy fell under the Premunire, solely for submitting to Woolsey's Legantine Character, exclusive of those other more General Grounds which I alledged for it? Has he any Publick Records, any Authentick Acts, to justify his Opinion? I will venture to say He has not. On the contrary, they all speak in general Terms, and take no notice of the Cardinal, or his Character; Or of any thing else, but their having (indefinitely) offended against the Statutes of Provision and Premunire.

I have already remarked, How that the King having granted a General Pardon to All his Subjects the Year before, excepted these Offences on purpose to keep the Clergy in Awe, and to have a Tye upon them if they should Oppose his Measures. Let us hear, first of all, how that Exception runs; 21 H. 8. c. 1. "Excepted and Foreprised out of this Pardon, all Offences and Contempts, committed and done against the Statute and Statutes of Provisors and Premunire, or any of them; and of Forfeitures and Titles that may grow to the King's “ King’s Highness, by reason of any of the same Statutes. These words are General enough, and do not confine the Offences to any one kind or branch of Offences against those Laws. K. HENRY the VIII.

How the Indictment preferr’d against the Bishops by the Attorney-General in the King’s Bench, upon these Statutes, was drawn up, I am not able to say: But yet we may, in some measure, judge of it by the Act of the Convocation for avoiding it. In what Terms that ran Dr. A. could not be ignorant. He has given us their Instrument in his Additional Appendix, and I am content to abide by the Terms of it. The Pardon then which they desir’d (and sure we cannot better judge of the Offence than by the tenor of what they propos’d for the Remission of it) was this: “ Generalem Gratiam & Pardonationem de Omnibus eorum transgressionibus Penalium Legum & Statutorum hujus Regni, tum Ceterorum, tum etiam Statutorum de Provisoribus & Præmunire. Let Dr. A. look over that famous Instrument, and try whether he can there find one Word of Cardinal Woolsey, or his Legantine Character in it; Or of their Desire of a Pardon for submitting to That unauthorized by the Crown. Addit. Appendix. p. 8, 9.

When the King accordingly granted the Clergy his Pardon by Act of Parliament, he recited their Request in the same Terms, “ The King our Sovereign Lord calling to his Blessed and most Gracious Remembrance, that his Good and Loving Subjects, the most Reverend Father in God the Archbishop of Canterbury, and other Bishops, &c. which have exercised, practised, or executed in Spiritual Courts, and other Spiritual Jurisdictions within the said Province, have fallen and incur’d into divers Dangers of his Laws, by things done, perpetrated, and committed, contrary to the Order of his Laws, and especially contrary to the Form of the Statutes of Provisors, Provisions, and Præmunire, &c. shall be by Authority of this present Pardon, acquitted, pardoned, releas’d, and discharged, against His Highness, his Heirs, Successors, and Executors, and Every of them, All and all manner of Offences, Contempts, and Trespasses committed, or done, against All and Singular Statute, and Statutes, of Provisors, Provisions, and Præmunire, and every of them, &c. Stat. 22. Hen. viii. c. 15.

These are the Words in which the Pardon of the Clergy of this Province was granted: If there be any Difference, I may say that the Pardon of those of the Other is yet more fully penn’d to the same effect: “ They are acquitted, pardoned, releas’d, and discharged, against the King’s Highness, his Heirs, Successors, and Executors, and every of them, of All, and All manner of Offences, Contempts, and Trespasses, committed or done, against All and Singular Statute and Statutes, of Provisors, Provisions, and Præmunire, and every of them; and of All Forfeitures and Titles that may grow to the King’s Highness, by reason of any of the same Statutes. Stat. 23. Hen. viii. c. 19.

And now let the Reader judge, who gave the truest Account of the Clergy’s Præmunire? Whether Dr. A. in restraining it precisely to their Submitting to the Cardinal’s Legantine Character, and that not only as distinct from but in Opposition to, their having generally offended against the Statutes of Provision and Præmunire? Or Dr. W. who having first noted the main Statutes of this kind, added his Opinion in these Words; “ But notwithstanding these Laws, the Pope still proceeded in his own way, and the Clergy were always ready to assist him in it: And by these Means there were but very few of any Note among Them, who had not upon some Account or other incur’d the Penalty before mentioned. Upon this Ground therefore the King resolv’d to attack them.— If the Clergy understood their own Danger, and knew what they desir’d of the King: If the King and his Council knew upon what Grounds they attacked them, and how to express those Grounds in their Release, both of their Offence, and its Punishment; then we must from both conclude, that the Clergy desir’d a General Pardon of All Forfeitures and Penalties, against All and Singular Statutes of Provision and Præmunire; and restrain’d not either their Danger, or their Pardon, to the sole Case of having submitted to the Cardinal’s Legantine Character unauthorized by the Crown. Let Dr. A. now shew, in his turn, upon what Authority he not only restrains their Case to that One Instance; but reflects with so much Bitterness, as well as Scorn, upon me, for strictly following these Public Records; and putting it, from them, upon a more General Bottom. pag. 161.

But Dr. A. proceeds in his New Discoveries; the next of which is, that the Danger of the Clergy lay in this, that they had submitted to the Cardinals Legantine Character Unauthorized by the Crown. Is Dr. A. sure of this? So one would think He should be; for he repeats it again in the very next page: "The Subject neither durst, nor thought it necessary to enquire whether he had a License from (He would have said under) the great Seal, who had himself the keeping of it. However their Obedience to this Unlicensed Authority was Criminal, even to the Loss of Liberty and Estate." And yet the Cardinal constantly avow'd that He not only had the Kings License for his Assuming of this Character, but had it in the very Form that Dr. A. prescribes; I mean under the Great Seal of England: And that he could have produced the Kings Patent for it, had not those who seized his Papers secur'd that among the rest.

The Truth is, so notorious was the Fact that the King had Consented to the Cardinals Legantine Character, that those who drew up the (44) Articles against him were not able to deny it. They charge him indeed with breaking the Condition upon which the King had Consented to it: But that He had obtain'd the Kings Consent for it, was too notorious to be denied, or even dissembled by them. Let us hear, how they attaque him in their XXVIIIth Article to this effect. "Also where the said Lord Cardinal did first sue unto your Grace to have your Assent to be Legat de Latere, He promised and solemnly protested before your Majesty, and before the Lords both Spiritual and Temporal (so that this was no such Secret, into which the Clergy neither durst, nor thought it necessary to Enquire; but a matter of Public Notice) that He would nothing Do, nor Attempt, by the Vertue of his Legacy that should be contrary to your Gracious Prerogative or Regality, or to the Damage or Prejudice of the Jurisdiction of any Ordinary; and that by his Legacy no Man should be hurt nor offended; and upon that Condition, and no other, He was Admitted by your Grace to be Legate within this Your Realm: This Condition He hath broken, as is well known to all your Subjects.

This was their Allegation against that great Minister, with respect to his Legantine Character: And from it I will now take the Liberty to draw these two Inferences contrary to Dr. A's Account of this Matter; 1st. That the Cardinal had, and that it was notorious that He had, the Kings Allowance to be Legate. 2dly: That his Legantine Character thus Allow'd of, was not, of its self, thought to be at all contrary to the Kings Prerogative or Regality; nor by consequence would the Clergies Submission to it, after such an Allowance, have alone been sufficient to have brought them under a Præmunire, as Dr. A. affirms that it did.

The Truth is, Dr. A. is wholly mistaken both in his Law and History in this particular. The King Consented to Woolsey's being Legate: Had Woolsey kept his Word, and Attempted nothing thereby contrary to the King's Prerogative, or to the Laws of the Realm, in vertue of it; He might as safely have Enjoy'd that Character without any Damage to himself, or Detriment to the Clergy, as Cardinal Pool afterwards did, or might have done. But he abus'd it grossly in the Exercise of it; and the Clergy Consented, or at least Submitted, to those Abuses: And so They both offended against the Laws of Provision and Præmunire, and thereby Both fell under the Penalty of them. Which therefore brings me to the last thing I had to remark on this Passage of Dr. A. That the Account I gave of the Præmunire, is not, as He represents it, contrary to the more Common Account, which refers it to their Submission to the Legantine Power (not Character) of Cardinal Woolsey; but includes that as the chief Cause of their Fall, tho' not the Only One, and so as to exclude All Others besides.

Sect. 59.
Authority,
&c. p. 248.

The Difference between Dr. A. and me in the present Case is this. I say (in general) that the Clergy had so acted against the Statutes of Provisions and Præmunire, that there were but very few of any Note among Them, who had not, upon Some Account or Other, incurr'd the Penalty of those Statutes. And for this I have both the Clergies Own Request to the King for Pardon, and the Statutes of Pardon granted to them, on my side. They speak in the same terms; as largely and generally as I did.

Dr. A. dislikes this Account: He not only charges me as grossly Ignorant of our History, but traduces me as an Enemy of the Clergy, for giving of it. He affirms that they incurr'd the Præmunire "for Submitting to the Cardinals Legantine Character Unauthorized by the Crown: Not for procuring or making use of provisional visioal Bulls, &c. contrary to those Statutes. That the Cardinal did not take up his Legantine Character Unauthorized by the Crown we have before seen. And that he might have so used it, as not to have at all impeach'd the Kings Prerogative; or Regality thereby, we must also allow, or we must say, that the Solemn Protestation which He made to the King, before the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, that He would so Use it, as not to Do, or Attempt any thing by virtue of it contrary thereunto, was a Contradiction in Law; a Promise not to do that by virtue of His Legantine Character, which the very Character it self alone, tho' taken with the Kings Allowance, would cause him to Do.

What therefore was the Cardinals and Clergies Crime? Let the Kings Attorney General speak it. His fault was, that knowing the Laws of Præmunire; and particularly that of the 16 R. 2, He had nevertheless obtain'd certain Bulls, from Clement the viith, by which He Exercised Jurisdiction and Authority Legantine to the "Deprivation of the Kings Power in his Courts of Justice;—to the Prejudice of the Right of both Secular and Ecclesiastical Persons: One instance of which, instead of many, the Attorney particularly insists upon. But the Articles against him are more full, and bring home the Charge upon him, upon the same Statute. "Also the said Lord Cardinal, by his Authority Legantine, hath given by prevention the Benefices of divers Persons, as well Spiritual as Temporal, contrary to your Crown and Dignity, and your Laws and Statutes therefore provided: By reason whereof He is in Danger to your Grace of Forfeiture of his Lands and Goods, and his Body at your pleasure. Art. 7.

Here then we see wherein the Cardinal offended; not in taking upon him the Character of Legate, for that the King and Lords had agreed to, and judged he might take without any detriment to the Prerogative of the Crown; but in Exercising the Jurisdiction and Authority of it beyond what he had promis'd, and the Laws permitted him to Do. Now in this Exercise of it, the Clergy complied with Him, and submitted to Him: And by so doing They involved themselves in the same Guilt. But still both He and They were criminal for offending against the Laws of Provisions and Præmunire: The One by granting Faculties, and Instruments, and giving Benefices by Prevention, and doing Other things contrary to the Statutes of the Realm: The Others, by purchasing and receiving such Instruments, and accepting of such Benefices from Him; and so complying with Him in those his Illegal and Criminal Procedures.

But tho' it be therefore certain, that in thus submitting to the Exercise of the Cardinals Legantine Jurisdiction and Authority, the Clergy were many of them guilty of a Præmunire, How will Dr. A. assure Us that they were Guilty in no other Respect? That they had broken these Statutes only in that one Instance; and so needed a Pardon for nothing else, but meerly for having complied with the Legantine Character of Cardinal Woolsey Unauthorized by the Crown? Was the Intercourse with Rome so intirely broken, for twenty Years before the Quarrel began about the Divorce, that all Bulls and Faculties were stop'd; no Appeals made thither; no Causes heard, or determin'd there, for which by our Laws any of the Clergy might be in Danger? This Dr. A. will hardly affirm; I am sure will never prove. Yet this he must say; or He must allow the Account which I gave of their Danger to have been the right; and that they had incurr'd a Præmunire not only in that one particular Instance which He advances, but on many other Accounts: And therefore that the true, as well as full Representation of it, required me to put it, as I said, on their having, generally, Offended against the Statutes of Præmunire; without restraining it, as He has done, to One, and that One, a mistaken, and misrepresented Cause of it.

So little Skill, as well as Good Nature, has Dr. A. shewn in his first Entrance upon this History. But his next step is intolerable; and declares him when he set about this part of his Work to have understood nothing at all of what he wrote. "Thus, saith he, both the Clergy and Laity were unawares at the Kings Mercy, and the Clergy not admitted to pardon Gratis (as the Laity afterwards were) but forced to ransom themselves by a good round Sum for those times; and by an Acknowledgment in Convocation, that the King was Supreme Head; together with the SUBMISSION and PETITION Recited in the PREAMBLE of the ACT we are now discoursing of. In which Words 'tis plain, that He makes not only the good round Sum of which he speaks, and the Acknowledgment of the Kings Supremacy, to have been the Condition upon which

which they obtain'd their Indemnity from the Premunire which they had fallen under ; but the Submission and Petition too, upon which the Statute of the 25th of H. VIII. c. 19 was drawn. And accordingly, p. 92. He falls foul upon an Ingenious Writer, with that peculiar Freedom which runs through his whole Work, for affirming, that the Premunire was off, when the Clergy made their Submission : And blames my Lord of Sarum for forgetting in one part of his History, what he tells us his Lordship seem'd to have known by another, that the Submission was made by the Convocation in the Year 1531.

p. 92, 93

I shall not need to tell Dr. A. that this was a great Mistake, who himself has own'd the Submission to have pass'd May the 15th. 1532. But this I must say, It was a much more unpardonable Mistake in One who pretended to so much Light, as he did, in that whole Transaction ; than in my Lord of Salisbury, who complain'd of the want of it. Let us hear how he speaks of it in his First Edition : " Whether his Lordship were aware of this, or no, it is certain the Submission was so much older than the Act ; that is, was made Anno 1531, as appears by the Journal of the Convocation that framed it, still remaining, tho' his Lordship (p. 147) complains that it is lost, and excuses himself on this account, &c. I have seen the Journal of that Synod, &c. There is no Reason therefore to complain for want of Light in this Case ; for perhaps there is scarce any one thing done in any of Henry the VIIIth's Convocations, of which we have a clearer and fuller Account, &c. But how then came Dr. A. to be himself so grossly mistaken in that very thing for which he Censures that Great Prelate ? I cannot but think it will astonish the Reader, (I am sure it ought to do every Considering Person) to find this Vain Man at last Professing his Error, in this very Point, to have proceeded from his Reliance upon my Lord of Sarum's Authority in it. I must set down his own Words again, or I shall hardly be believed in the most favourable Report that I can make of them.

² Addit. p. 18.

" Indeed I have need my self of this Plea, upon the present Article, who have, in more than One place of the former Edition of this Book, spoken of the Clergies Submission, and Subsidy, as if they had born one another Company. Why Dr. A. confines this Mistake to the former Edition of his Book, I cannot imagine : Sure I am, that if his Second Edition corrects nothing, but what his Additions and Emendations refer to, the same will be found to stand unaltered

³ Ibid. p. 4.

there, in the ³ Passage I before alledged ; the most Remarkable of any, in which it before occur'd. But this by the way : The great Question is, How under so clear a Light, One who so severely corrected my Lord of Sarum, for placing of this Submission in a wrong Year, and had restor'd it, as he thought, to its right Period ; and told us, " It was certain, whether his Lordship were aware of it, or no, that the Submission was so much older than the Act, as he there says ; came, after all, to be himself in the Wrong ? He tells us in these Remarkable Words ;

⁴ Rights, &c.

⁵ Addit. p. 18.

" But in this (says He) I follow'd his Lordship's Accounts too respectfully ; thinking that what his Lordship had so often lay'd down, in a Point so obvious to be known, could not well be mistaken. But if the Reader will forgive my Implicit Reliance this once, I promise to do so no more ; Nor to take any thing for the future, even upon his Lordship's Authority, great as it is, without examining into the Truth of it.

⁶ Rights, &c.
p. 92.

Dr. A. must excuse me if I take the Liberty to expostulate a little with Him, upon so strange an Assertion. He owns himself mistaken, in having affirm'd that the Submission of the Clergy was made, when the Subsidy of 100000 l. was given : And he imputes his Error to his Implicit Reliance upon my Lord of Salisbury's Authority. How can this possibly be reconciled with the Passages of his former Book ? To say nothing more of what I before observ'd, that he undertook from Journals, and Acts, to Correct my Lord of Sarum's Mistake, among Others, in this very Point : I appeal to the Correction it self, as it stands in his own Words, " My Lord of Sarum's Expressions (says he) in the Year 1534, are ; As the Parliament was going on with these good Laws, there came a Submission from the Clergy then sitting in Convocation, to be pass'd in Parliament, (p. 147.) But this is one of those NODS that Great Men in long Works are subject to. For his Lordship, p. 133. of that Work seems to have known that the Submission was made by the Convocation in 1531 and 2, however he came to forget it here, and to place the Rise of it two Years lower. But whether his Lordship were aware of this, or not, It is certain the Submission was so much Older than

“than the Act. These are Dr. A's Words; and I Appeal to the World to say, whether these were the Words of a Man who implicitly Rely'd on the Authority of that very Person whom he Corrected, I had almost said Ridicul'd, for his Mistake in this very Matter? K. HENRY the VIIIth.

He observes indeed, that his Lordship, who so grossly Err'd in the Date of the Submission here, SEEMED to have known in other Parts of his History, that it was made in the Year 1531. “But, says he, whether his Lordship were aware of this or not, (for Dr. A. was not then satisfied whether he did ever truly know the Date of this Submission) it is certain that it was made in that Year. And then he adds his Authority for it, “As appears by the Journal of the Convocation that framed it still remaining. It was from the Journal of the Convocation therefore, not from the Bishop of Sarum's History, that Dr. A. pretended to deliver his Certain Oracle about the Date of this Submission. As for my Lord of Sarum, he had given such different Accounts of this Submission, in Dr. A's own Words, “Had expressed himself in the several Parts of his Work in such an observable Variety on this Head, that he could not well tell whether his Lordship knew the true Date of it, or no. Which being so, I shall leave it to Dr. A's own Conscience to reflect with what Truth, or Ingenuity, he could nevertheless, after all tell the World, as he does in his fleering way, that he was led into this Error, “by following his Lordship's Accounts too respectfully; “as thinking what his Lordship had so often laid down, in a Point so obvious to “be known, could not well be mistaken. Rights, &c. p. 92.

I may now venture to say, that when Dr. A. first undertook the Interpretation of this Statute, he knew very little of the true Grounds of it: And particularly that he was utterly Ignorant of the two Great Circumstances upon which the whole History of it depends; the Time when it was made, and the State of the Clergy at their making of it. As for what he has so much labour'd since, I mean the several Steps and Progressions by which it went on in the Convocation, they All amount but to thus much; That the Bishops and Clergy were drawn very unwillingly to make the Concessions which were requir'd of them; That they stood out as long as ever they durst against them; and, at last, compounded with the King upon the best Terms they could concerning them. Sect. 61.

To examine this Account with any Exactness, I ought to have, as some other Papers, so especially those Extracts of the Upper House of Convocation, of which Dr. A. speaks, ³Appendix p. 41, and tells us are in his Hands. Had he given us a faithful Copy of them, as he has of those which he has printed, we should have been much more able to have judged of the Truth of this Relation, than we now are, by comparing it only with those more antient Extracts which alone he has published. However, to shew that there may be some Reason to doubt, if not of his Fidelity, yet at least of his Exactness, in several Circumstances of his History; I will briefly run thro' the main Circumstances of it; in several of which, according to the small Light which I yet have, I take him to have been much mistaken. Addit. Appendix p. 41.

⁴Dr. A. having told us, that the King was displeas'd with the first Answer of the Convocation, concluded upon April the 19th, adds, that he remitted it back again to them, to be better consider'd of by them. “For (says he) on Monday April the 29th, I find the Matter again in debate there; and those Debates continuing till the Monday afterwards, without effect. Addit. p. 9.

In this I thus far agree with him, that the King was dissatisfied with their Answer, and did signify his Dissatisfaction to them. The Speech which he made to the Commons, when he put it into their Hands, shews the One; and the Preface to their next Paper, which Dr. A. himself has publish'd from the Cotton MS. assures us of the Other. But where does Dr. A. find, “that the King remitted their Answer back again to the Convocation to be better consider'd of by them? Of this, his Printed Minutes are utterly silent: And I have before shewn, that instead of remitting it back to the Convocation, he sent it by the Speaker to the House of Commons, where it was read, and dissatisfied them as much as it had done the King before. Now this the King did not till April the 30th, and therefore it must needs be a Mistake in Dr. A. to affirm, as he does, (upon what Authority I desire to know) that it was remitted to the Convocation on, or before, the 29th of the same Month.

But

But why do's Dr. A. put off the Resumption of this Matter in the Convocation to Monday April the 29th? His own Minutes shew that it was resum'd the Wednesday before, April the 24th; and his Transcript of that Session, which has no other Business in it, assures us, that he was (at least when he printed his Appendix) himself sensible of it. But he proceeds:

The Prelates ² "having felt the King's Frowns, on the account of their first Answer, were willing that the Lower House should have the Honour of drawing up the next: And therefore recommended it to the Prolocutor, and Clergy, to Agree upon such a Reply as They should think expedient. How far Dr. A's Invisible Extracts affirm this, I must not pretend to conjecture. The printed Ones are, I am sure, too short and obscure to let us into so formal a Piece of Convocation-History. In the three Sessions of April the 24th, 29th, and May the 3d, we find the Prelates and Prolocutor, &c. treating of this Matter. Session CIV. May the 6th, the Bishop of London being at the Head of the Convocation, rehears'd the Will of the Archbishop, touching the Supplication aforesaid; and Order'd (Dr. A. says Recommended it to) the Prolocutor, &c. to draw up their Answer in writing. This is all our Extracts speak; and from this nothing more can, I think, be inferr'd, than this; that the Archbishop requir'd the Answer of the Lower House to be brought, the next Session, in writing, to such Points as the Bishop of London, in his Name, propos'd to them, touching this Supplication; which both Houses appear to have been treating of in the Sessions foregoing.

But Dr. A. goes on: "A Committee of the Lower House was thereupon appointed, who drew up a New Answer to the former part of the Supplication, (which stuck most with the King) and accompanied it with an Assertion of the Clergies Power to make Canons, as founded in Scripture; the Passages of which, they ranged under Four several Heads. And this, and their New Answer, they laid before the Upper House, on Wednesday May the 8th. I am here again under the same Difficulty I was before: The Invisible Extracts will not suffer me to say this is wholly false; nor yet the Visible Ones encourage me to believe that it is exactly true.

³ On the 8th of May, the Bishop of London "being Commissioner for the Archbishop, receiv'd from the Prolocutor Quatuor Libellos, concerning the Authority of Ecclesiastical Persons to make Laws for the Suppression of Heresie; conceiv'd (as he affirm'd) by Learned Men; and protested that he did not Exhibit them as Approv'd by the Unanimous Consent of the Whole House, but that the Commissary, and other Bishops, might read them, and choose out what made most for the Truth; and then desir'd, that if the Bishops should draw up any thing, the Lower House might be made acquainted with it, Prinsquam auferentur. This is all that our Minutes report: What these Quatuor Libelli were; or that any New Answer was drawn up by the Lower House to the Supplication of the Commons; or, at this time, tender'd to the Upper; we must be beholden to the Hidden Extracts to inform us. He adds:

⁴ "The Upper House agreeing to this Answer, the Bishops of London and Lincoln, the Abbots of Westminster and Burton, together with Sampson Dean of the Chappel, and Fox the Almoner, were desir'd to attend the King with it; and at the same time to be instant with him, that he would preserve and protect their Liberties and Immunities, in like manner as his Noble Ancestors had done. That the Lower Clergy did this Session desire that some might be sent to the King, to beseech him that he would vouchsafe to maintain the Liberties of the Church which himself and his Progenitors had preserv'd; and that the Persons here mentioned did at their Request undertake to do this, our printed Extracts tell us. But of this Answer drawn up by the Lower House, and agreed to by the Upper; and sent by these Persons to the King in the Name of the Convocation (tho' so eminent an Act that one would think it could hardly have escaped the Observation even of a Careless Abridger) not one Word appears in them. It is well therefore that Dr. A's Later Extracts have been more full: And we ought to entreat him, both for his own Vindication, and for our Instruction, to give us an Authentic Copy of them.

"This done, the Convocation Adjourn'd till Friday: (so his Private MS. I suppose tells him. Our Extracts speak more justly to the Authority of the President; that he Prorogued it till Friday; & tunc Contin. Dominus Locum tenens usque in diem Veneris) Veneris) "When the Almoner reported to 'em, how little Satisfaction their ^{HENRY} ^{the VIIIth.} Second Answer had given; and withal produced a Form, which the King requir'd them peremptorily to sign, and under which He would not be contented. Of this Schedule, or Form, sent to the Convocation by the Almoner, our Extracts take a very particular Notice: But of the Second Answer of the Convocation to the Commons Petition, which makes so great a Figure in this part of Dr. A's Narrative, they are still, I know not how, most obstinately silent. Might I be allow'd to offer my own Conjecture against the Authority of this MS. Collection, I should think, that tho' several Forms might be, and I doubt not, were drawn for the Kings Satisfaction; nay, and privately communicated to Him also for his Approbation: Yet that the Convocation having not pleased Him in their first Answer, and the King proceeding with such Resolution against Them, They did not think fit to present any Other Answer, as the Act of the Convocation, to Him; till they finally concluded upon that, which the King appears to have Agreed to, and promised to Accept of. So that, tho' I can easily allow Dr. A. that all those Forms, which he has publish'd, were drawn upon this Occasion; and that some of them, for ought I know, were shewn to the King; yet in this I must beg leave to differ from him, till he shall favour Us, with a more easy Access to his MS. Authorities; that as our antient Extracts take not the least Notice of their sending to his Majesty any Answers besides their first and their last, so were those the only Ones that the Convocation did present, as their Act, to Him. But this is Conjecture only; and shall readily be retracted as soon as the MS. Extracts shall shew I was mistaken.

To return now to the Schedule, which we are sure the King sent to the Convocation, and of which Dr. A. has given us, I suppose, a true Copy. "Upon" ^{Addit. p. 122} receiving this Paper, the Clergy (He says) Adjourn'd first to St. Catharines, and then to St. Dunstons Chappel in the Monastery. This again must be MS. History; for the printed Extracts speak much Otherwise. Their Words are these: "The Archbishop, after that the Schedule was read, and Deliver'd by Mr. Fox the Almoner, prorogued the Convocation to the Chappel of St. Catharine within the Monastery, to which the Archbishop and the rest of the Prelats immediately went, and there the Schedule was again read. Then the Archbishop prorogued the said Convocation to the Chapter House aforesaid, to Munday May the 13th. Here we read nothing of the Clergies Adjourning, but of the Archbishops Proroguing of the Convocation: Nothing of their Adjourning first to St. Catharines, and then to St. Dunstons; but of their reading again the Schedule in St. Catharines Chappel, and so being prorogued back again to the Chapter House, by the Archbishop, on Munday following. But to proceed with his Narrative:

"The Result of their Debates (the Clergies on their removal to St. Dunstons Chappel) was to send four of the Upper, and six of the Lower House, to the Bishop of Rochester then absent, for his Advice in the Case, by which they seem'd inclin'd to govern Themselves; and in Expectation of it, Adjourn'd till Munday. Dr. A. still writes out of his MSS. in contradiction to his printed Extracts; whose account of this Transaction is this: "That the Archbishop having in St. Catharines Chappel prorogued the Convocation till Munday, did Himself, together with the Bishops, go directly from thence to the Chappel of St. Dunstan; and there it was agreed, that the Bishops of Lincoln, and Bath and Wells, and the Abbot of St. Bennet; as also Mr. Edward Fox, Mr. Powel, Wilson, and Duck, Doctors of Divinity, and Mr. Raynes, and Cliff, Doctors of Law, should Go to the Bishop of Rochester to his Lodging, to treat maturely about the Contents of the Schedule aforesaid. They were chosen by the Archbishop and Bishops, after the Convocation was prorogued, to go to the Bishop of Rochester's Lodging, not for his private Advice, but as a Committee, to debate together with Him, on this Affair; "As the Words of the Minute are, "to treat maturely about the Contents of the Schedule aforesaid: In Expectation whereof Dr. A. says they Adjourn'd till Munday. But Our Extracts tell us, that the Convocation had been prorogued before any thing of this was resolved. As for the Bishops, who appointed the Meeting of this Committee, They were so far from Adjourning till Munday in expectation of Bishop Fisher's Advice, that They expressly Order'd this Select Committee, to report Their Opinions, Eorum Opiniones, to Themselves the next day, being Saturday, at the Archbishop's Chamber, where He was wont to dine in Parliament time. So wide is the Difference between these two Extracts;

tracts; and so impossible is it to reconcile Dr. A's History, with the proofs of it in his own Appendix.

From this short Specimen it may appear, that either the antient Extracts of this Convocation, which Dr. A. himself has published, are not only very imperfect, but in some considerable Circumstances utterly false too; Or there may be just Reason to suspect the Exactness of his Relation, in several matters of no small Importance. He will no doubt easily clear our Suspicions, by shewing that his MSS. Notes do not barely illustrate the Obscurity, and supply the Defects of the Other; but in all these Passages correct their Errors too. I shall only add, that either my Copier has been very negligent, or those Forms of Submission, which he has printed from the Cotton Library, may need his Review. How far the rest have Escaped the like Errors, I cannot tell, because Dr. A. has not been pleased to let us know where we are to look for Them. But in the main Record of all, I cannot but complain of a very Arbitrary, and Unwarrantable procedure. The piece, I speak of is the Act of Submission; which still remains very fair among the other Statutes of that Parliament; is duly and regularly pointed; and lay open in a Public Office to his Inspection. (a) Yet in the very Sentence, upon which the whole Meaning of it turns, in one part (at least) of our Dispute; Dr. A. has not only divided the Verbs, which lead the Sence, from One another, by his Own perverse Interpretation; but to give the fairer Colour thereunto, has printed it with a distinguishing Point, both in the Recital, and in the Enacting Part; and laid the Whole Stress of his Argument upon it: Whereas in truth not only no such Considerable Point, but None at All, is found there in the Record; as by the Copy, which I have from thence taken of it, may appear.

I could mention some other Escapes, of a lesser moment in the same Transcript, but one more there is, which is too Notorious to be pass'd by; that in the " Clause which declares the Clergies Opinion, that the Convocation of the same " same Clergy is, always has been, and ought to be assembled ONLY by the " Kings Writ; the Word ONLY is drop'd by Him; tho' it be expressly inserted, both in the Form of Submission, which Himself has publish'd from my Lord Longuevill's Library; and in the last and most common Editions of our Statutes themselves, which have restored it from the Record, and thereby render'd his Disingenuity, or Negligence, the more Culpable in the Omission of it.

self been either so full, or so correct, as not to leave a sufficient ground for those who come after him both to supply his Defects, and to animadvert upon his Errors.

To return now to our Enquiry into the Sessions of our Parliaments and Convocations, which the History of the Submission of the Clergy has too long interrupted. On the 3d of November the Parliament which had continued so many Years successively, met again by Prorogation, and sate till the 18th of December following. The Convocation of our Province began the next Day, and held till Saturday, December the 19th, the Day after the Parliament rose. It was then prorogued to the 4th of November the next Year, 1535: But the Convocation of the other Province kept not its Measures so exactly with the Parliament. When it Resumed its Session, I cannot tell; but by the King's Writ for Proroguing of it, dated January the 26th, it appears to have sate at least till the 3d of February, above Six Weeks after both the Parliament and the other Convocation were risen. In this Writ there is one thing that will deserve to be particularly taken notice of; that the King prescribed no Day for the next Meeting of that Assembly, but left it to the Archbishop to prorogue it to any Day, which he should reasonably limit and appoint for the Meeting of it. Had there been any such necessary Dependence of the Convocations upon the Parliament as is now contended for, I cannot understand how the King could have indulged this Favour to the Archbishop; but much less could the Archbishop have proceeded as he did upon it. For instead of appointing it to meet again with our Convocation, November the 4th, he assign'd a longer time to it, February the 4th: So that either our Convocation must have Anticipated the Session of the Parliament, by Re-assembling by its self in November without it; or this Convocation must have been design'd to have come after the End of it in February; to be sure both could not have been Appointed to Meet at the same time with it.

Ann. 1534

However it were, upon the 4th of February the Parliament assembled the last time; it sate till the 14th of April, and was then Dissolv'd. Whether any Convocation sate with it in either Province, I much doubt. Neither Archbishop Cranmer's, nor Archbishop Lee's Registers, make mention of any. In September before, the King began his Royal Visitation, and suspended the Jurisdiction of the Archbishops and Bishops during the Time of it. This, join'd with the Silence of our Registers, and of the Ancient Extracts of our Convocation, (which barely note the Proroguing of our Convocation to the Fifth of February, and so proceed immediately to the next Assembly of 1536) incline me to think, that the Parliament sate this Year without any Convocation in either Province: Sure I am I have not met with the least Intimation of any, in those Registers and Records in which I have, with some Care, searched after them.

1535

It was in June this Year that the King, as I conceive, publish'd the Proclamation to which Dr. A. refers, p. 275, and in which he thinks he has met with something to prove the Convocation Clergy to be a part of the Parliament of England. The King recites, "how that by the deliberate Advice, Consultation, Consent, and Agreement as well of the Bishops and Clergy, as by the Nobles and Commons Temporal of his Realm, assembled in his High Court of Parliament, the Abuses and Authority of the Bishop of Rome, had not only been utterly Extirpated, Abolish'd, and Secluded; but also the same his Nobles and Commons both of the Clergy and Temporality, by another several Act, and upon the like Foundation, had united, knit, and annex'd to him, and the Crown Imperial of this his Realm, the Title, Dignity, and Stile, of Supreme Head in Earth, immediately under God, of the Church of England: Which things also (continues the King) the said Bishops and Clergy, particularly in their Convocations, have wholly and entirely consented, recognized, &c.

Rights, &c.
P. 274, 279

From this Instrument, Dr. A's Argument must lie thus; That the Bishops and Clergy of whom the Proclamation twice speaks, as being Assembled and Acting in Parliament, were the Bishops and Clergy in Convocation; and therefore the Clergy Assembled and Acting in Convocation, are spoken of in our Public Instruments as being Assembled and Acting in Parliament; and by Consequence are to be accounted a Part of it.

But what then shall we say to the last Clause of this Proclamation? "Which things also the said Bishops and Clergy, particularly in their Convocations, have wholly and intirely Consented, Recognized, Ratified, Confirmed and

Approved. For if the Bishops and Clergy, who before were said to have done this in Part with the Nobles and Commons Temporal, did then Act in their Convocational State and Capacitie, when they so join'd with the Nobles and Commons in Parliament; How are they afterwards said to have also done the same thing particularly, that is Apart by Themselves, in their Convocations? Do's not the very wording of this Instrument plainly shew that the Bishops and Clergy did Twice, and in a double Place and Capacity, what is there mention'd: Once jointly with the Nobles and Commons Temporal in Parliament; and once particularly, by Themselves, in their own Convocations?

But we will examine these Matters more fully, and then see whether the History of these Transactions do's not agree, to the plain Sense and Meaning of the Expressions. In the Convocation of Cant. Anno 1530, the King was recognized by the Clergy of this Province to be Supreme Head of the Church of England. The same was done by the Clergy of York, in their Convocation in May following, Anno 1531.

In the Convocation of Cant. Ann. 1533, the Bishop of Rome was determined to have no more or greater Authority in this Realm, than any other Foreign Bishop. The same was done in the Convocation of York the June after, 1534.

c. 19, 20, 21.

In the Parliament which met January the 15th, 1533, Three solemn Acts were pass'd against the Pope's Authority; to one, or all of which, I take the Proclamation now before us to referr. These were pass'd into Statutes by the King, March the 30th. But the Resolution of the Bishops and Clergy in our Convocation, concerning the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, was not finally concluded upon till March the 31st, the Day after the Parliament was risen; and in the Other Province, not till above two Months after.

The Case is the same, or rather is (if possible) yet more clear, in the other Act which the Proclamation refers to. The Statute by which the King was declar'd to be Supreme Head of the Church of England, was made the 26th of H. 8. 1534. But the Clergy in Convocation had recognized this three Years before; and therefore the Clergy, who made this Act in Parliament in 1534, must needs be different from the Clergy who made that Recognition in Convocation, in February and May, 1530, 1531.

Accordingly we find the very Statutes themselves distinguishing between the Acts of the Convocations, and the Acts of Parliament, in this very Matter. They speak of the Former as a thing already done, and from thence, infer the Reasonableness of what the latter were, in those Statutes, about to do. So 25 H. 8. c. 21. "Forasmuch as your Majesty is Supreme Head of the Church of England, "as the Prelates and Clergy of your Realm representing the said Church in their "Synods and Convocations have recognized; it may please your Majesty to ordain "and enact, by the Assent of your Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons "in this present Parliament assembled. Which Lords and Commons (to observe that by the way) are before in the same Act said to represent the whole State of the Realm in Parliament. And in the other Statute, 26 H. 8. c. 1. the Preamble runs in these Terms, to the same effect: "Albeit the King's Majesty, justly and "rightfully is, and ought to be, the Supreme Head of the Church of England; "and so is recognized by the Clergy of the Realm in their Convocations, &c. Yet "nevertheless, Be it enacted, &c.

The Clergy then, as well as the Bishops, are to be consider'd under a double Capacity: As Members of the Provincial Convocations of Cant. and York, and as Members of the Parliament of England, summon'd by the King's Writs to that Great Council, and making up, together with the Bishops and Prelates, one of the Chiefest States of it. In this latter Capacity they confirm'd by Law in Parliament, what themselves had before Recognized, as their Opinion, in their several Convocations. The Bishops and Prelates were actually present in Both. The Deans, Priors, and Archdeacons, who came to the One, were summon'd to, and so in Law reputed, to be present in the Other. So might many of the Proctors of the Chapters and Diocesses have been likewise: And therefore tho' the Bishops and Parliamentary Prelates alone at that time sat and voted at the Passing of these Statutes, yet what they did was in the Name, and look'd upon as the Act, of the whole Estate of the Clergy of the Realm, assembled in Parliament. The whole Estate was legally called by the King's Writs thither; and therefore, whether they All came or no, yet All were to be accounted as present there. The Case is the

the same in his other Proclamations; 35 H. 8, and therefore the same Answer may suffice to have been given to it. The Clergy of which they both spake were the Parliament, not the Convocation Clergy; Assembled, and (in part) acting together with the Lay Nobles and Commons in Parliament; not particularly by themselves, in their own Synods, or Convocations.

The next Year a New Parliament was call'd to meet at Westminster, June the 8th, 28 H. 8. To this the Chapter of York deputed their Proxies in form; and therein sufficiently shew how different an Assembly the Civil Convention of the State of the Clergy in Parliament is from that of their own Provincial Convocation. They appoint their Proctors first to appear in the Parliament of the most Serene Prince Henry the 8th, King of England. Then they name the Time and Place where they were to meet, viz. at Westminster, June the 8th: And finally, the Persons with whom they were to Treat; to Treat, and Consent to such things as shall there be Ordain'd by the Common-Council, of the same Realm of England. All which are so widely different from their Convocation Proxies and Powers, that he must resolve to be mistaken who do's not plainly perceive the Difference between them.

In this Parliament a Bill was framed upon the Determinations of the Clergy in Convocation, against the Usurped Authority of the Bishop of Rome: The Statute of Residence was enforced, and some other Acts passed with Relation to Church Affairs. In these Debates it continued till the 18th of July, and then was dissolv'd.

With this Parliament the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury Assembled June the 9th, and sate till the 20th of July, two Days after the Parliament was Dissolv'd. In the Mandates for the two last Convocations of this Province, an extraordinary Clause was inserted, which I have never observed in any such Summons, before the Year 1523. By the Bishop of London's Execution of the Archbishop's Mandate, it seems to have been continued now the third time, in this first Assembly under Archbishop Cranmer. They follow'd the Forms which lay before them, and had not yet reduced them to the old and usual Terms. But the Archbishop seems to have been somewhat aware of this: For in the very next Convocation we find that Clause again omitted; and never inserted any more, that I know of, to this Day.

Whether there was any Convocation held this Year in the other Province, I do again doubt: The Registers of it have no Footsteps of any. Now this I take to be the more considerable, because that of the Parliament of this Year, the Register of the Dean and Chapter of York makes express mention: Of the next Convocation the same Register fully speaks. The Archbishop's Register goes on with other Matters of lesser moment; and it is very much that had any Convocation been held there this Year, none of these, or any Other of their Records, should have taken the least notice of it. But indeed there is another Reason, which still confirms me in the same Opinion. In the Subscriptions to the Articles of Religion which passed this Year in Our Convocation, the Archbishop of York and Bishop of Durham subscribe with our Bishops. The King in his Confirmation of them says, that for the making of them he had caus'd his Bishops, and other the most discreet, and best Learned Men of the Clergy of the whole Realm, to be Assembled in Convocation. In the first Article of Faith it is thus Agreed, as hereafter followeth by the whole Clergy of this our Realm. In the Articles and Injunctions set forth not long after to enforce these Articles, the King speaks to the same Purpose of them; "Which (says he) were by you all the Bishops and whole Clergy of this our Realm in Convocation, agreed on. In none of these Places is there the least mention of any Convocation, of the Other Province, as we may reasonably suppose there would have been, had this Book of Articles distinctly pass'd in that, as it did in the Synod of Our Province. But indeed their Bishops, and possibly some select Persons of their Clergy too, assisted at the framing of them: The Archbishop of York and Bishop of Durham Subscrib'd with the Bishops of our Province to them: And it do's not appear by the minutes of this Convocation, that our Synod did do any more than barely Hear them Read, and so give their Consent to Them.

From this time, some Years pass'd before a New Parliament was Assembled. The next which met was Summon'd by Writs dated March the 1st, to begin on the 28th of April Anno 1539. To this the Clergy of the Realm were not only Summon'd, as usual, but seem to have return'd their Proctors too. The Bishops

vorce. Vol I.
pag. 161.

But Dr. A. proceeds in his New Discoveries; the next of which is, that the Danger of the Clergy lay in this, that they had submitted to the Cardinals Legantine Character Unauthorized by the Crown. Is Dr. A. sure of this? So one would think He should be; for he repeats it again in the very next page: "The Subject neither durst, nor thought it necessary to enquire whether he had a License from (He would have said under) the great Seal, who had himself the keeping of it. However their Obedience to this Unlicensed Authority was Criminal, even to the Loss of Liberty and Estate." And yet the Cardinal constantly avow'd that He not only had the Kings License for his Assuming of this Character, but had it in the very Form that Dr. A. prescribes; I mean under the Great Seal of England: And that he could have produced the Kings Patent for it, had not those who seized his Papers secur'd that among the rest.

The Truth is, so notorious was the Fact that the King had Consented to the Cardinals Legantine Character, that those who drew up the (44) Articles against him were not able to deny it. They charge him indeed with breaking the Condition upon which the King had Consented to it: But that He had obtain'd the Kings Consent for it, was too notorious to be denied, or even dissembled by them. Let us hear, how they attaque him in their XXVIIIth Article to this effect. "Also where the said Lord Cardinal did first sue unto your Grace to have your Assent to be Legat de Latere, He promised and solemnly protested before your Majesty, and before the Lords both Spiritual and Temporal (so that this was no such Secret, into which the Clergy neither durst, nor thought it necessary to Enquire; but a matter of Public Notice) that He would nothing Do, nor Attempt, by the Vertue of his Legacy that should be contrary to your Gracious Prerogative or Regality, or to the Damage or Prejudice of the Jurisdiction of any Ordinary; and that by his Legacy no Man should be hurt nor offended; and upon that Condition, and no other, He was Admitted by your Grace to be Legate within this Your Realm: This Condition He hath broken, as is well known to all your Subjects.

This was their Allegation against that great Minister, with respect to his Legantine Character: And from it I will now take the Liberty to draw these two Inferences contrary to Dr. A's Account of this Matter; 1st. That the Cardinal had, and that it was notorious that He had, the Kings Allowance to be Legate. 2dly: That his Legantine Character thus Allow'd of, was not, of its self, thought to be at all contrary to the Kings Prerogative or Regality; nor by consequence would the Clergies Submission to it, after such an Allowance, have alone been sufficient to have brought them under a Premunire, as Dr. A. affirms that it did.

The Truth is, Dr. A. is wholly mistaken both in his Law and History in this particular. The King Consented to Woolsey's being Legate: Had Woolsey kept his Word, and Attempted nothing thereby contrary to the King's Prerogative, or to the Laws of the Realm, in vertue of it; He might as safely have Enjoy'd that Character without any Damage to himself, or Detriment to the Clergy, as Cardinal Pool afterwards did, or might have done. But he abus'd it grossly in the Exercise of it; and the Clergy Consented, or at least Submitted, to those Abuses: And so They both offended against the Laws of Provision and Premunire, and thereby Both fell under the Penalty of them. Which therefore brings me to the last thing I had to remark on this Passage of Dr. A. That the Account I gave of the Premunire, is not, as He represents it, contrary to the more Common Account, which refers it to their Submission to the Legantine Power (not Character) of Cardinal Woolsey; but includes that as the chief Cause of their Fall, tho' not the Only One, and so as to exclude All Others besides.

Sect. 59.
Authority,
&c. p. 248.

The Difference between Dr. A. and me in the present Case is this. I say (in general) that the Clergy had so acted against the Statutes of Provisions and Premunire, that there were but very few of any Note among Them, who had not, upon Some Account or Other, incurr'd the Penalty of those Statutes. And for this I have both the Clergies Own Request to the King for Pardon, and the Statutes of Pardon granted to them, on my side. They speak in the same terms; as largely and generally as I did.

Dr. A. dislikes this Account: He not only charges me as grossly Ignorant of our History, but traduces me as an Enemy of the Clergy, for giving of it. He affirms that they incurr'd the Premunire "for Submitting to the Cardinals Legantine Character Unauthorized by the Crown: Not for procuring or making use of provisional visional Bulls, &c. contrary to those Statutes. That the Cardinal did not take up his Legantine Character Unauthorized by the Crown we have before seen. And that he might have so used it, as not to have at all impeach'd the Kings Prerogative; or Regality thereby, we must also allow, or we must say, that the Solemn Protestation which He made to the King, before the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, that He would so Use it, as not to Do, or Attempt any thing by virtue of it contrary thereunto, was a Contradiction in Law; a Promise not to do that by virtue of His Legantine Character, which the very Character it self alone, tho' taken with the Kings Allowance, would cause him to Do.

What therefore was the Cardinals and Clergies Crime? Let the Kings Attorney General speak it. His fault was, that knowing the Laws of Præmunire; and particularly that of the 16 R. 2, He had nevertheless obtain'd certain Bulls, from Clement the viith, by which He Exercised Jurisdiction and Authority Legantine to the "Deprivation of the Kings Power in his Courts of Justice;—to the Prejudice of the Right of both Secular and Ecclesiastical Persons: One instance of which, instead of many, the Attorney particularly insists upon. But the Articles against him are more full, and bring home the Charge upon him, upon the same Statute. "Also the said Lord Cardinal, by his Authority Legantine, hath given by prevention the Benefices of divers Persons, as well Spiritual as Temporal, contrary to your Crown and Dignity, and your Laws and Statutes therefore provided: By reason whereof He is in Danger to your Grace of Forfeiture of his Lands and Goods, and his Body at your pleasure. Art. 7.

Here then we see wherein the Cardinal offended; not in taking upon him the Character of Legate, for that the King and Lords had agreed to, and judged he might take without any detriment to the Prerogative of the Crown; but in Exercising the Jurisdiction and Authority of it beyond what he had promis'd, and the Laws permitted him to Do. Now in this Exercise of it, the Clergy complied with Him, and submitted to Him: And by so doing They involved themselves in the same Guilt. But still both He and They were criminal for offending against the Laws of Provisions and Præmunire: The One by granting Faculties, and Instruments, and giving Benefices by Prevention, and doing Other things contrary to the Statutes of the Realm: The Others, by purchasing and receiving such Instruments, and accepting of such Benefices from Him; and so complying with Him in those his Illegal and Criminal Procedures.

But tho' it be therefore certain, that in thus submitting to the Exercise of the Cardinals Legantine Jurisdiction and Authority, the Clergy were many of them guilty of a Præmunire, How will Dr. A. assure Us that they were Guilty in no other Respect? That they had broken these Statutes only in that one Instance; and so needed a Pardon for nothing else, but meerly for having complied with the Legantine Character of Cardinal Woolsey Unauthorized by the Crown? Was the Intercourse with Rome so intirely broken, for twenty Years before the Quarrel began about the Divorce, that all Bulls and Faculties were stop'd; no Appeals made thither; no Causes heard, or determin'd there, for which by our Laws any of the Clergy might be in Danger? This Dr. A. will hardly affirm; I am sure will never prove. Yet this he must say; or He must allow the Account which I gave of their Danger to have been the right; and that they had incurr'd a Præmunire not only in that one particular Instance which He advances, but on many other Accounts: And therefore that the true, as well as full Representation of it, required me to put it, as I said, on their having, generally, Offended against the Statutes of Præmunire; without restraining it, as He has done, to One, and that One, a mistaken, and misrepresented Cause of it.

So little Skill, as well as Good Nature, has Dr. A. shewn in his first Entrance upon this History. But his next step is intolerable; and declares him when he set about this part of his Work to have understood nothing at all of what he wrote. "Thus, saith he, both the Clergy and Laity were unawares at the Kings Mercy, and the Clergy not admitted to pardon Gratis (as the Laity afterwards were) but forced to ransom themselves by a good round Sum for those times; and by an Acknowledgment in Convocation, that the King was Supreme Head; together with the SUBMISSION and PETITION Recited in the PREAMBLE of the ACT we are now discoursing of. In which Words 'tis plain, that He makes not only the good round Sum of which he speaks, and the Acknowledgment of the Kings Supremacy, to have been the Condition upon which

which they obtain'd their Indemnity from the Premunire which they had fallen under ; but the Submission and Petition too, upon which the Statute of the 25th of H. VIII. c. 19 was drawn. And accordingly, p. 92. He falls foul upon an Ingenious Writer, with that peculiar Freedom which runs through his whole Work, for affirming, that the Premunire was off, when the Clergy made their Submission : And blames my Lord of Sarum for forgetting in one part of his History, what he tells us his Lordship seem'd to have known by another, that the Submission was made by the Convocation in the Year 1531.

I shall not need to tell Dr. A. that this was a great Mistake, who himself has own'd the Submission to have pass'd May the 15th. 1532. But this I must say, It was a much more unpardonable Mistake in One who pretended to so much Light, as he did, in that whole Transaction ; than in my Lord of Salisbury, who complain'd of the want of it. Let us hear how he speaks of it in his First Edition : ¹ " Whether his Lordship were aware of this, or no, it is certain the Submission was so much older than the Act ; that is, was made Anno 1531, as ² " appears by the Journal of the Convocation that framed it, still remaining, tho' ³ " his Lordship (p. 147) complains that it is lost, and excuses himself on this account, &c. ⁴ " I have seen the Journal of that Synod, &c. There is no Reason ⁵ " therefore to complain for want of Light in this Case ; for perhaps there is ⁶ " scarce any one thing done in any of Henry the VIIIth's Convocations, of which ⁷ " we have a clearer and fuller Account, &c. But how then came Dr. A. to be himself so grossly mistaken in that very thing for which he Censures that Great Prelate ? I cannot but think it will astonish the Reader, (I am sure it ought to do every Considering Person) to find this Vain Man at last Professing his Error, in this very Point, to have proceeded from his Reliance upon my Lord of Sarum's Authority in it. I must set down his own Words again, or I shall hardly be believed in the most favourable Report that I can make of them.

² " Indeed I have need my self of this Plea, upon the present Article, who have, ³ " in more than One place of the former Edition of this Book, spoken of the Clergies Submission, and Subsidy, as if they had born one another Company. Why Dr. A. confines this Mistake to the former Edition of his Book, I cannot imagine : Sure I am, that if his Second Edition corrects nothing, but what his Additions and Emendations refer to, the same will be found to stand unaltered

there, in the ² Passage I before alledged ; the most Remarkable of any, in which it before occur'd. But this by the way : The great Question is, How under so clear a Light, One who so severely corrected my Lord of Sarum, for placing of this Submission in a wrong Year, and had restor'd it, as he thought,

⁴ Rights, &c.
p. 92.

to its right Period ; and told us, ⁴ " It was certain, whether his Lordship were ⁵ " aware of it, or no, that the Submission was so much older than the Act, as he there says ; came, after all, to be himself in the Wrong ? He tells us in these Remarkable Words ; ⁵ " But in this (says He) I follow'd his Lordship's Accounts

⁶ " too respectfully ; thinking that what his Lordship had so often lay'd down, in a ⁷ " Point so obvious to be known, could not well be mistaken. But if the Reader ⁸ " will forgive my Implicit Reliance this once, I promise to do so no more ; Nor ⁹ " to take any thing for the future, even upon his Lordship's Authority, great ¹⁰ " as it is, without examining into the Truth of it.

Dr. A. must excuse me if I take the Liberty to expostulate a little with Him, upon so strange an Assertion. He owns himself mistaken, in having affirm'd that the Submission of the Clergy was made, when the Subsidy of 100000 l. was given : And he imputes his Error to his Implicit Reliance upon my Lord of Salisbury's Authority. How can this possibly be reconciled with the Passages of his former Book ? To say nothing more of what I before observ'd, that he undertook from Journals, and Acts, to Correct my Lord of Sarum's Mistake, among Others, in this very Point : I appeal to the Correction it self, as it stands in his own Words, ⁶ " My Lord of Sarum's Expressions (says he) in the Year 1534, ⁷ " are ; As the Parliament was going on with these good Laws, there came a Submission ⁸ " from the Clergy then sitting in Convocation, to be pass'd in Parliament, (p. 147.) ⁹ " But this is one of those NODS that Great Men in long Works are subject ¹⁰ " to. For his Lordship, p. 133. of that Work seems to have known that the ¹¹ " Submission was made by the Convocation in 1531 and 2, however he came to ¹² " forget it here, and to place the Rise of it two Years lower. But whether his ¹³ " Lordship were aware of this, or not, It is certain the Submission was so much Older

p. 92.

"than the Act. These are Dr. A's Words; and I Appeal to the World to say, whether these were the Words of a Man who implicitly Rely'd on the Authority of that very Person whom he Corrected, I had almost said Ridicul'd, for his Mistake in this very Matter? K. HENRY the VIIIth.

He observes indeed, that his Lordship, who so grossly Err'd in the Date of the Submission here, SEEMED to have known in other Parts of his History, that it was made in the Year 1531. "But, says he, whether his Lordship were aware of this or not, (for Dr. A. was not then satisfied whether he did ever truly know the Date of this Submission) it is certain that it was made in that Year. And then he adds his Authority for it, "As appears by the Journal of the Convocation that framed it still remaining. It was from the Journal of the Convocation therefore, not from the Bishop of Sarum's History, that Dr. A. pretended to deliver his Certain Oracle about the Date of this Submission. As for my Lord of Sarum, he had given such different Accounts of this Submission, in Dr. A's own Words, "Had expressed himself in the several Parts of his Work in such an observable Variety on this Head, that he could not well tell whether his Lordship knew the true Date of it, or no. Which being so, I shall leave it to Dr. A's own Conscience to reflect with what Truth, or Ingenuity, he could nevertheless, after all tell the World, as he does in his fleeing way, that he was led into this Error, "by following his Lordship's Accounts too respectfully; "as thinking what his Lordship had so often laid down, in a Point so obvious to "be known, could not well be mistaken. Rights, &c. p. 92.

I may now venture to say, that when Dr. A. first undertook the Interpretation of this Statute, he knew very little of the true Grounds of it: And particularly that he was utterly Ignorant of the two Great Circumstances upon which the whole History of it depends; the Time when it was made, and the State of the Clergy at their making of it. As for what he has so much labour'd since, I mean the several Steps and Progressions by which it went on in the Convocation, they All amount but to thus much; That the Bishops and Clergy were drawn very unwillingly to make the Concessions which were requir'd of them; That they stood out as long as ever they durst against them; and, at last, compounded with the King upon the best Terms they could concerning them. Sect. 61.

To examine this Account with any Exactness, I ought to have, as some other Papers, so especially those Extracts of the Upper House of Convocation, of which Dr. A. speaks, ³Appendix p. 41, and tells us are in his Hands. Had he given us a faithful Copy of them, as he has of those which he has printed, we should have been much more able to have judged of the Truth of this Relation, than we now are, by comparing it only with those more antient Extracts which alone he has published. However, to shew that there may be some Reason to doubt, if not of his Fidelity, yet at least of his Exactness, in several Circumstances of his History; I will briefly run thro' the main Circumstances of it; in several of which, according to the small Light which I yet have, I take him to have been much mistaken. Addit. Appendix p. 41.

⁴Dr. A. having told us, that the King was displeas'd with the first Answer of the Convocation, concluded upon April the 19th, adds, that he remitted it back again to them, to be better consider'd of by them. "For (says he) on Monday April the 29th, I find the Matter again in debate there; and those Debates continuing till the Monday afterwards, without effect. Addit. p. 9.

In this I thus far agree with him, that the King was dissatisfied with their Answer, and did signify his Dissatisfaction to them. The Speech which he made to the Commons, when he put it into their Hands, shews the One; and the Preface to their next Paper, which Dr. A. himself has publish'd from the Cotton MS. assures us of the Other. But where does Dr. A. find, "that the King remitted their Answer back again to the Convocation to be better consider'd of by them? Of this, his Printed Minutes are utterly silent: And I have before shewn, that instead of remitting it back to the Convocation, he sent it by the Speaker to the House of Commons, where it was read, and dissatisfied them as much as it had done the King before. Now this the King did not till April the 30th, and therefore it must needs be a Mistake in Dr. A. to affirm, as he does, (upon what Authority I desire to know) that it was remitted to the Convocation on, or before, the 29th of the same Month.

²Ibid. p. 10.

But why do's Dr. A. put off the Resumption of this Matter in the Convocation to Monday April the 29th? His own Minutes shew that it was resum'd the Wednesday before, April the 24th; and his Transcript of that Session, which has no other Business in it, assures us, that he was (at least when he printed his Appendix) himself sensible of it. But he proceeds:

The Prelates ²“having felt the King's Frowns, on the account of their “first Answer, were willing that the Lower House should have the Honour of “drawing up the next: And therefore recommended it to the Prolocutor, and “Clergy, to Agree upon such a Reply as They should think expedient. How far Dr. A's Invisible Extracts affirm this, I must not pretend to conjecture. The printed Ones are, I am sure, too short and obscure to let us into so formal a Piece of Convocation-History. In the three Sessions of April the 24th, 29th, and May the 3d, we find the Prelates and Prolocutor, &c. treating of this Matter. Session CIV. May the 6th, the Bishop of London being at the Head of the Convocation, rehears'd the Will of the Archbishop, touching the Supplication aforesaid; and Order'd (Dr. A. says Recommended it to) the Prolocutor, &c. to draw up their Answer in writing. This is all our Extracts speak; and from this nothing more can, I think, be inferr'd, than this; that the Archbishop requir'd the Answer of the Lower House to be brought, the next Session, in writing, to such Points as the Bishop of London, in his Name, propos'd to them, touching this Supplication; which both Houses appear to have been treating of in the Sessions foregoing.

But Dr. A. goes on: “A Committee of the Lower House was thereupon appointed, who drew up a New Answer to the former part of the Supplication, “(which stuck most with the King) and accompanied it with an Affertion of the “Clergies Power to make Canons, as founded in Scripture; the Passages of which, “they ranged under Four several Heads. And this, and their New Answer, they “laid before the Upper House, on Wednesday May the 8th. I am here again under the same Difficulty I was before: The Invisible Extracts will not suffer me to say this is wholly false; nor yet the Visible Ones encourage me to believe that it is exactly true.

³On the 8th of May, the Bishop of London “being Commissioner for the “Archbishop, receiv'd from the Prolocutor Quatuor Libellos, concerning the “Authority of Ecclesiastical Persons to make Laws for the Suppression of Heresie; “conceiv'd (as he affirm'd) by Learned Men; and protested that he did not “Exhibit them as Approv'd by the Unanimous Consent of the Whole House, but “that the Commissary, and other Bishops, might read them, and choose out what “made most for the Truth; and then desir'd, that if the Bishops should draw up “any thing, the Lower House might be made acquainted with it, Prinſquam au- “ferentur. This is all that our Minutes report: What these Quatuor Libelli were; or that any New Answer was drawn up by the Lower House to the Supplication of the Commons; or, at this time, tender'd to the Upper; we must be beholden to the Hidden Extracts to inform us. He adds:

⁴Addit. p. 11.

⁴“The Upper House agreeing to this Answer, the Bishops of London and Lin- “coln, the Abbots of Westminster and Burton, together with Sampson Dean of “the Chappel, and Fox the Almoner, were desir'd to attend the King with it; “and at the same time to be instant with him, that he would preserve and pro- “tect their Liberties and Immunities, in like manner as his Noble Ancestors “had done. That the Lower Clergy did this Session desire that some might be sent to the King, to beseech him that he would vouchsafe to maintain the Liberties of the Church which himself and his Progenitors had preserv'd; and that the Persons here mentioned did at their Request undertake to do this, our printed Extracts tell us. But of this Answer drawn up by the Lower House, and agreed to by the Upper; and sent by these Persons to the King in the Name of the Convocation (tho' so eminent an Act that one would think it could hardly have escaped the Observation even of a Careless Abridger) not one Word appears in them. It is well therefore that Dr. A's Later Extracts have been more full: And we ought to entreat him, both for his own Vindication, and for our Instruction, to give us an Authentic Copy of them.

“This done, the Convocation Adjourn'd till Friday: (so his Private MS. I suppose tells him. Our Extracts speak more justly to the Authority of the President; that he Prorogued it till Friday; & tunc Contin. Dominus Locum tenens usque in diem Veneris)

Veneris) "When the Almoner reported to 'em, how little Satisfaction their ^{HENRY} Second Answer had given; and withal produced a Form, which the King ^{the VIIIth.} requir'd them peremptorily to sign, and under which He would not be contented. Of this Schedule, or Form, sent to the Convocation by the Almoner, our Extracts take a very particular Notice: But of the Second Answer of the Convocation to the Commons Petition, which makes so great a Figure in this part of Dr. A's Narrative, they are still, I know not how, most obstinately silent. Might I be allow'd to offer my own Conjecture against the Authority of this MS. Collection, I should think, that tho' several Forms might be, and I doubt not, were drawn for the Kings Satisfaction; nay, and privately communicated to Him also for his Approbation: Yet that the Convocation having not pleased Him in their first Answer, and the King proceeding with such Resolution against Them, They did not think fit to present any Other Answer, as the Act of the Convocation, to Him; till they finally concluded upon that, which the King appears to have Agreed to, and promised to Accept of. So that, tho' I can easily allow Dr. A. that all those Forms, which he has publish'd, were drawn upon this Occasion; and that some of them, for ought I know, were shewn to the King; yet in this I must beg leave to differ from him, till he shall favour Us, with a more easy Access to his MS. Authorities; that as our antient Extracts take not the least Notice of their sending to his Majesty any Answers besides their first and their last, so were those the only Ones that the Convocation did present, as their Act, to Him. But this is Conjecture only; and shall readily be retracted as soon as the MS. Extracts shall shew I was mistaken.

To return now to the Schedule, which we are sure the King sent to the Convocation, and of which Dr. A. has given us, I suppose, a true Copy. "Upon ^{Addit. p. 122} receiving this Paper, the Clergy (He says) Adjourn'd first to St. Catharines, and then to St. Dunstons Chappel in the Monastery. This again must be MS. History; for the printed Extracts speak much Otherwise. Their Words are these: "The Archbishop, after that the Schedule was read, and Deliver'd by Mr. Fox the Almoner, prorogued the Convocation to the Chappel of St. Catharine within the Monastery, to which the Archbishop and the rest of the Prelats immediately went, and there the Schedule was again read. Then the Archbishop prorogued the said Convocation to the Chapter House aforesaid, to Munday May the 13th. Here we read nothing of the Clergies Adjourning, but of the Archbishops Proroguing of the Convocation: Nothing of their Adjourning first to St. Catharines, and then to St. Dunstons; but of their reading again the Schedule in St. Catharines Chappel, and so being prorogued back again to the Chapter House, by the Archbishop, on Munday following. But to proceed with his Narrative:

"The Result of their Debates (the Clergies on their removal to St. Dunstons Chappel) was to send four of the Upper, and six of the Lower House, to the Bishop of Rochester then absent, for his Advice in the Case, by which they seem'd inclin'd to govern Themselves; and in Expectation of it, Adjourn'd till Munday. Dr. A. still writes out of his MSS. in contradiction to his printed Extracts; whose account of this Transaction is this: "That the Archbishop having in St. Catharines Chappel prorogued the Convocation till Munday, did Himself, together with the Bishops, go directly from thence to the Chappel of St. Dunstan; and there it was agreed, that the Bishops of Lincoln, and Bath and Wells, and the Abbot of St. Bennet; as also Mr. Edward Fox, Mr. Powel, Wilson, and Duck, Doctors of Divinity, and Mr. Raynes, and Cliff, Doctors of Law, should Go to the Bishop of Rochester to his Lodging, to treat maturely about the Contents of the Schedule aforesaid. They were chosen by the Archbishop and Bishops, after the Convocation was prorogued, to go to the Bishop of Rochester's Lodging, not for his private Advice, but as a Committee, to debate together with Him, on this Affair; "As the Words of the Minute are, "to treat maturely about the Contents of the Schedule aforesaid: In Expectation whereof Dr. A. says they Adjourn'd till Munday. But Our Extracts tell us, that the Convocation had been prorogued before any thing of this was resolved. As for the Bishops, who appointed the Meeting of this Committee, They were so far from Adjourning till Munday in expectation of Bishop Fisher's Advice, that They expressly Order'd this Select Committee, to report Their Opinions, Eorum Opiniones, to Themselves the next day, being Saturday, at the Archbishop's Chamber, where He was wont to dine in Parliament time. So wide is the Difference between these two Extracts;

tracts; and so impossible is it to reconcile Dr. A's History, with the proofs of it in his own Appendix.

From this short Specimen it may appear, that either the antient Extracts of this Convocation, which Dr. A. himself has published, are not only very imperfect, but in some considerable Circumstances utterly false too; Or there may be just Reason to suspect the Exactness of his Relation, in several matters of no small Importance. He will no doubt easily clear our Suspicions, by shewing that his MSS. Notes do not barely illustrate the Obscurity, and supply the Defects of the Other; but in all these Passages correct their Errors too. I shall only add, that either my Copier has been very negligent, or those Forms of Submission, which he has printed from the Cotton Library, may need his Review. How far the rest have Escaped the like Errors, I cannot tell, because Dr. A. has not been pleased to let us know where we are to look for Them. But in the main Record of all, I cannot but complain of a very Arbitrary, and Unwarrantable procedure. The piece, I speak of is the Act of Submission; which still remains very fair among the other Statutes of that Parliament; is duly and regularly pointed; and lay open in a Public Office to his Inspection. (a) Yet in the very Sentence, upon which the whole Meaning of it turns, in one part (at least) of our Dispute; Dr. A. has not only divided the Verbs, which lead the Sence, from One another, by his Own perverse Interpretation; but to give the fairer Colour thereunto, has printed it with a distinguishing Point, both in the Recital, and in the Enacting Part; and laid the Whole Stress of his Argument upon it: Whereas in truth not only no such Considerable Point, but None at All, is found there in the Record; as by the Copy, which I have from thence taken of it, may appear.

I could mention some other Escapes, of a lesser moment in the same Transcript, but one more there is, which is too Notorious to be pass'd by; that in the " Clause which declares the Clergies Opinion, that the Convocation of the same " same Clergy is, always has been, and ought to be assembled ONLY by the " Kings Writ; the Word ONLY is drop'd by Him; tho' it be expressly inserted, both in the Form of Submission, which Himself has publish'd from my Lord Longuevill's Library; and in the last and most common Editions of our Statutes themselves, which have restored it from the Record, and thereby render'd his Disingenuity, or Negligence, the more Culpable in the Omission of it.

But of this Statute, and the several Circumstances, which may seem requisite to be farther taken notice of in Order to a Right Understanding of it, I shall have Occasion to speak more fully hereafter: Nor should I have stay'd so long, as I have now done, upon it, but only to shew, that after all ² Dr. A's Insults upon Others, for not clearing this Part of our Church History, He has not him-

To return now to our Enquiry into the Sessions of our Parliaments and Convocations, which the History of the Submission of the Clergy has too long interrupted. On the 3d of November the Parliament which had continued so many Years successively, met again by Prorogation, and sate till the 18th of December following. The Convocation of our Province began the next Day, and held till Saturday, December the 19th, the Day after the Parliament rose. It was then prorogued to the 4th of November the next Year, 1535: But the Convocation of the other Province kept not its Measures so exactly with the Parliament. When it Resumed its Session, I cannot tell; but by the King's Writ for Proroguing of it, dated January the 26th, it appears to have sate at least till the 3d of February, above Six Weeks after both the Parliament and the other Convocation were risen. In this Writ there is one thing that will deserve to be particularly taken notice of; that the King prescribed no Day for the next Meeting of that Assembly, but left it to the Archbishop to prorogue it to any Day, which he should reasonably limit and appoint for the Meeting of it. Had there been any such necessary Dependence of the Convocations upon the Parliament as is now contended for, I cannot understand how the King could have indulged this Favour to the Archbishop; but much less could the Archbishop have proceeded as he did upon it. For instead of appointing it to meet again with our Convocation, November the 4th, he assign'd a longer time to it, February the 4th: So that either our Convocation must have Anticipated the Session of the Parliament, by Re-assembling by its self in November without it; or this Convocation must have been design'd to have come after the End of it in February; to be sure both could not have been Appointed to Meet at the same time with it.

Ann. 1534

However it were, upon the 4th of February the Parliament assembled the last time; it sate till the 14th of April, and was then Dissolv'd. Whether any Convocation sate with it in either Province, I much doubt. Neither Archbishop Cranmer's, nor Archbishop Lee's Registers, make mention of any. In September before, the King began his Royal Visitation, and suspended the Jurisdiction of the Archbishops and Bishops during the Time of it. This, join'd with the Silence of our Registers, and of the Ancient Extracts of our Convocation, (which barely note the Proroguing of our Convocation to the Fifth of February, and so proceed immediately to the next Assembly of 1536) incline me to think, that the Parliament sate this Year without any Convocation in either Province: Sure I am I have not met with the least Intimation of any, in those Registers and Records in which I have, with some Care, searched after them.

1535

It was in June this Year that the King, as I conceive, publish'd the Proclamation to which Dr. A. refers, p. 275, and in which he thinks he has met with something to prove the Convocation Clergy to be a part of the Parliament of England. The King recites, "how that by the deliberate Advice, Consultation, Consent, and Agreement as well of the Bishops and Clergy, as by the Nobles and Commons Temporal of his Realm, assembled in his High Court of Parliament, the Abuses and Authority of the Bishop of Rome, had not only been utterly Extirpated, Abolish'd, and Secluded; but also the same his Nobles and Commons both of the Clergy and Temporality, by another several Act, and upon the like Foundation, had united, knit, and annex'd to him, and the Crown Imperial of this his Realm, the Title, Dignity, and Stile, of Supreme Head in Earth, immediately under God, of the Church of England: Which things also (continues the King) the said Bishops and Clergy, particularly in their Convocations, have wholly and entirely consented, recognized, &c.

Rights, &c.
p. 274, 279

From this Instrument, Dr. A's Argument must lie thus; That the Bishops and Clergy of whom the Proclamation twice speaks, as being Assembled and Acting in Parliament, were the Bishops and Clergy in Convocation; and therefore the Clergy Assembled and Acting in Convocation, are spoken of in our Public Instruments as being Assembled and Acting in Parliament; and by Consequence are to be accounted a Part of it.

But what then shall we say to the last Clause of this Proclamation? "Which things also the said Bishops and Clergy, particularly in their Convocations, have wholly and intirely Consented, Recognized, Ratified, Confirmed and

Approved. For if the Bishops and Clergy, who before were said to have done this in Part with the Nobles and Commons Temporal, did then Act in their Convocational State and Capacitie, when they so join'd with the Nobles and Commons in Parliament; How are they afterwards said to have also done the same thing particularly, that is Apart by Themselves, in their Convocations? Do's not the very wording of this Instrument plainly shew that the Bishops and Clergy did Twice, and in a double Place and Capacity, what is there mention'd: Once jointly with the Nobles and Commons Temporal in Parliament; and once particularly, by Themselves, in their own Convocations?

But we will examine these Matters more fully, and then see whether the History of these Transactions do's not agree, to the plain Sense and Meaning of the Expressions. In the Convocation of Cant. Anno 1530, the King was recognized by the Clergy of this Province to be Supreme Head of the Church of England. The same was done by the Clergy of York, in their Convocation in May following, Anno 1531.

In the Convocation of Cant. Ann. 1533, the Bishop of Rome was determined to have no more or greater Authority in this Realm, than any other Foreign Bishop. The same was done in the Convocation of York the June after, 1534.

c. 19, 20, 21.

In the Parliament which met January the 15th, 1533, Three solemn Acts were pass'd against the Pope's Authority; to one, or all of which, I take the Proclamation now before us to referr. These were pass'd into Statutes by the King, March the 30th. But the Resolution of the Bishops and Clergy in our Convocation, concerning the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, was not finally concluded upon till March the 31st, the Day after the Parliament was risen; and in the Other Province, not till above two Months after.

The Case is the same, or rather is (if possible) yet more clear, in the other Act which the Proclamation referrs to. The Statute by which the King was declar'd to be Supreme Head of the Church of England, was made the 26th of H. 8. 1534. But the Clergy in Convocation had recognized this three Years before; and therefore the Clergy, who made this Act in Parliament in 1534, must needs be different from the Clergy who made that Recognition in Convocation, in February and May, 1530, 1531.

Accordingly we find the very Statutes themselves distinguishing between the Acts of the Convocations, and the Acts of Parliament, in this very Matter. They speak of the Former as a thing already done, and from thence, inferr the Reasonableness of what the latter were, in those Statutes, about to do. So 25 H. 8. c. 21. "Forasmuch as your Majesty is Supreme Head of the Church of England, "as the Prelates and Clergy of your Realm representing the said Church in their "Synods and Convocations have recognized; it may please your Majesty to ordain "and enact, by the Assent of your Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons "in this present Parliament assembled. Which Lords and Commons (to observe that by the way) are before in the same Act said to represent the whole State of the Realm in Parliament. And in the other Statute, 26 H. 8. c. 1. the Preamble runs in these Terms, to the same effect: "Albeit the King's Majesty, justly and "rightfully is, and ought to be, the Supreme Head of the Church of England; "and so is recognized by the Clergy of the Realm in their Convocations, &c. Yet "nevertheless, Be it enacted, &c.

The Clergy then, as well as the Bishops, are to be consider'd under a double Capacity: As Members of the Provincial Convocations of Cant. and York, and as Members of the Parliament of England, summon'd by the King's Writs to that Great Council, and making up, together with the Bishops and Prelates, one of the Chiefest States of it. In this latter Capacity they confirm'd by Law in Parliament, what themselves had before Recognized, as their Opinion, in their several Convocations. The Bishops and Prelates were actually present in Both. The Deans, Priors, and Archdeacons, who came to the One, were summon'd to, and so in Law reputed, to be present in the Other. So might many of the Proctors of the Chapters and Diocesses have been likewise: And therefore tho' the Bishops and Parliamentary Prelates alone at that time sate and voted at the Passing of these Statutes, yet what they did was in the Name, and look'd upon as the Act, of the whole Estate of the Clergy of the Realm, assembled in Parliament. The whole Estate was legally called by the King's Writs thither; and therefore, whether they All came or no, yet All were to be accounted as present there. The Case is the

the same in his other Proclamations, 35 H. 8, and therefore the same Answer κ. HENRY the VIIIth's Rights, &c. p. 59. may suffice to have been given to it. The Clergy of which they both spake were the Parliament, not the Convocation Clergy; Assembled, and (in part) acting together with the Lay Nobles and Commons in Parliament; not particularly by themselves, in their own Synods, or Convocations.

The next Year a New Parliament was call'd to meet at Westminster, June the 8th, 28 H. 8. To this the Chapter of York deputed their Proxies in form; and therein sufficiently shew how different an Assembly the Civil Convention of the State of the Clergy in Parliament is from that of their own Provincial Convocation. They appoint their Proctors first to appear in the Parliament of the most Serene Prince Henry the 8th, King of England. Then they name the Time and Place where they were to meet, viz. at Westminster, June the 8th: And finally, the Persons with whom they were to Treat; to Treat, and Consent to such things as shall there be Ordain'd by the Common-Council, of the same Realm of England. All which are so widely different from their Convocation Proxies and Powers, that he must resolve to be mistaken who do's not plainly perceive the Difference between them.

In this Parliament a Bill was framed upon the Determinations of the Clergy in Convocation, against the Usurped Authority of the Bishop of Rome: The Statute of Residence was enforced, and some other Acts passed with Relation to Church Affairs. In these Debates it continued till the 18th of July, and then was dissolv'd.

With this Parliament the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury Assembled June the 9th, and sate till the 20th of July, two Days after the Parliament was Dissolv'd. In the Mandates for the two last Convocations of this Province, an extraordinary Clause was inserted, which I have never observed in any such Summons, before the Year 1523. By the Bishop of London's Execution of the Archbishop's Mandate, it seems to have been continued now the third time, in this first Assembly under Archbishop Cranmer. They follow'd the Forms which lay before them, and had not yet reduced them to the old and usual Terms. But the Archbishop seems to have been somewhat aware of this: For in the very next Convocation we find that Clause again omitted; and never inserted any more, that I know of, to this Day.

Whether there was any Convocation held this Year in the other Province, I do again doubt: The Registers of it have no Footsteps of any. Now this I take to be the more considerable, because that of the Parliament of this Year, the Register of the Dean and Chapter of York makes express mention: Of the next Convocation the same Register fully speaks. The Archbishop's Register goes on with other Matters of lesser moment; and it is very much that had any Convocation been held there this Year, none of these, or any Other of their Records, should have taken the least notice of it. But indeed there is another Reason, which still confirms me in the same Opinion. In the Subscriptions to the Articles of Religion which passed this Year in Our Convocation, the Archbishop of York and Bishop of Durham subscribe with our Bishops. The King in his Confirmation of them says, that for the making of them he had caus'd his Bishops, and other the most discreet, and best Learned Men of the Clergy of the whole Realm, to be Assembled in Convocation. In the first Article of Faith it is thus Agreed, as hereafter followeth by the whole Clergy of this our Realm. In the Articles and Injunctions set forth not long after to enforce these Articles, the King speaks to the same Purpose of them; "Which (says he) were by you all the Bishops and whole Clergy of this our Realm in Convocation, agreed on. In none of these Places is there the least mention of any Convocation, of the Other Province, as we may reasonably suppose there would have been, had this Book of Articles distinctly pass'd in that, as it did in the Synod of Our Province. But indeed their Bishops, and possibly some select Persons of their Clergy too, assisted at the framing of them: The Archbishop of York and Bishop of Durham Subscrib'd with the Bishops of our Province to them: And it do's not appear by the minutes of this Convocation, that our Synod did do any more than barely Hear them Read, and so give their Consent to Them.

From this time, some Years pass'd before a New Parliament was Assembled. The next which met was Summon'd by Writs dated March the 1st, to begin on the 28th of April Anno 1539. To this the Clergy of the Realm were not only Summon'd, as usual, but seem to have return'd their Proctors too. The Bishops affrighted at the late vigorous Proceedings of the King against them, Executed the Premunientes, and their Clergy Obedied them both in their Choice of Proctors, and the Attendance of those Proctors at Parliament. Of this I shall take notice of two Instances, that may deserve to be consider'd: The One of the Bishop of Rochester, in this Province; whose ¹ Certificatory to the King upon his Execution of the Parliament Writ, being a Piece of some Curiosity, I have put it into the Appendix. The Other of the Church of York, whose Procuratory Letters, for the Parliament and Convocation of this Year so evidently prove the Difference of the two Assemblies to which they relate, that I have for that reason only once more adventur'd to trouble the Reader with a Transcript of them.

The Parliament which thus met April the 28th was by Sessions, and Prorogation, continued to June the 28th. The ³ Convocation of Canterbury met at St. Pauls London four days after, May the 2d. It sate till the last of June, two days after the Parliament was Risen; and so was prorogued to the 4th of November following. On the same day, May the 2d, began the Convocation of the Other Province. Of this, I can give no further certain account, and shall therefore insist no longer upon it.

On the 12th of April 1540, the same Parliament sate again by Prorogation: It continued, with one short Recess, to the 24th of July, and so was Dissolved. The next day after this Parliament, the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury began. It sate till the 28th of July, and by the King's Writ dated that day, was in like manner Dissolv'd. While this Parliament was Assembled, the King by his Commission held a National Council of the Bishops and Clergy of the Whole Realm, to debate of and determine the Affair of his Marriage with Anne of Cleve: But of this ⁵ Dr. A. has given so full an Account, that I shall not need to insist upon it.

By Writs dated November the 23d the next year, a New Parliament met, January the 16th: To this the Church of ⁶ Lincoln sent its Proctors; ad Comparend. Nomine suo coram Potentissimo, &c. Principe Henrico, &c. in Parlamento suo apud Westm. 16 die instantis Januar. tenend; say their Chapter-Acts. It sate till the first of April, and was prorogued till the 3d of November following. Above a fortnight after the Writs for Parliament were issued out, the King by Others, dated December the 10th, Ordered the Archbishops to Summon their respective Convocations at London and York, January the 20th; four days after the Parliament was to begin. The ⁷ Archbishop of Canterbury ordered his Province to Assemble at the time appointed. They sate till the 3d of April, two days after the Parliament had been prorogued; and were continued by the King's Writ to the 4th of November. The ⁸ Convocation of York met the same day there, January the 20th: How long it sate, I have not been able to discover.

On the 22d of January the Parliament met again: It sate till the 12th of May, and was then prorogued to the 3d of November following. The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury met indeed by prorogation the day after the Parliament: But it met only to be continued for three Weeks longer, to the 16th of February; when being again Assembled, it granted a Subsidy to the King, and did some other Business: On which having sate till May the 14th, it was by the Authority of the Kings Writ prorogued to the 5th of November following.

The Parliament which had been prorogued to the 3d of November was farther continued till the 14th of January 1543. From thence it sate on to the 29th of March, and so was Dissolv'd. Our Convocation again kept time with it: It met by a further Continuation January the 15th, and on the last of March, two days after the Parliament, that also was dissolv'd.

We are now come to the last Parliament of K. Henry the 8th. By Writs dated December the 1st, 1544, the King Summon'd it to meet at Westminster January the 30th: The ⁹ Bishop of London Executed the Premunitory Clause upon the Dean and Chapter of his Cathedral Church. But this Parliament sate not at the time appointed; but by other Writs dated the 20th of the same December, was ¹ prorogued to the 15th of October the next Year. It met not then, but was again continued to the 23d of November, ² first at Windsor, and then at Westminster, where accordingly it met and sate to the 24th of December following.

With this Parliament the Convocation of our Province was Summon'd by two ⁴ Writs, Both dated the same day, December 9th. The Form of the One was more General, both as to Time, Place and Persons: "That the Archbishop "should “ should Summon All and singular the Bishops of his Province, with the Arch“ deacons, Deans, and All other Ecclesiastical Persons of every Diocese of the “ same Province, to appear before Him in the Church of St. Paul London, or “ elsewhere, as should be most expedient, with all convenient speed. But the Other was express; That he should Cite “ All and singular the Bishops of his “ Province; the Deans of Cathedral Churches, ac alios Electivos, Exemptos & non “ Exemptos; as also the Archdeacons, Chapters, and Colledges, and All the Clergy “ of every Diocese of the same Province, to appear before him in the Church of “ St. Paul London, the 31st day of January next ensuing. Thus was the Convocation summon’d; but by ¹ Other Writs, as the Parliament had been, so was this Meeting also prorogued to the 16th of October first, and then to the 24th of November following. On that Day it was called first to Eaton Colledge, and afterwards to London. There it sate at the time appointed, and granted a Subsidy to the King. And as it appears by the Writ for its farther Continuance, was prorogued to the 5th of November the next Year; the day after the Parliament was appointed to meet again.

The Convocation of the Other Province was by a Writ ² directed to the Guardians of the Spiritualties, dated the same day with Ours, Summon’d in the first of the Forms I before mentioned, to meet with all convenient Speed. By other ³ Writs dated December the 26th, directed to the same Guardians, it was prorogued to the 16th of October the next Year. And by a third Writ sent to the new Archbishop, September the 2^d, was a third time prorogued to the 24th of November, as the Convocation of Our Province before had been. With this Convocation, the Books of York, containing the Acts of their Synods, Begin. From thence it appears that this Convocation being met at the time appointed, was prorogued by the Commissioners, named by the Archbishop, to the 26th of January: And had it not been for the Subsidy which was demanded of them, ’tis most probable it would not have met any more till that day. This was done in the same manner that the Convocation of our Province is prorogued. And to convince those who have made some Exceptions against this method of Proroguing both Houses by One Schedule of the Archbishops, that this is no modern Practice, but at least as old as the Reformation, I shall from these Books transcribe some of these Schedules, as I find them inserted at length in the Acts of their Convocations.⁴

Ann. 1545.

The Prelates and Clergy of our Province, having Granted a Subsidy to the King;
 He requir’d the like Aid of those of the Other. For this their Convocations prorogued to January the 26th, was Re-summon’d by order of the Archbishop to meet December the 14th. The Archbishop declar’d to them what the Clergy of Canterbury had done: Upon which they withdrew ad domum suam solitam infra Ecclesiam Metropolitancam Eborum (The Archbishop’s Vestry) And being return’d, their Prolocutor presented a Schedule of a Grant of the same that the Clergy of Canterbury before had given. Having done this, the Archbishop prorogued them first to the 22^d of December, then to the 24th: From thence, by his Commissioners, to the last of that Month. Thus was the Convocation continued from Session to Session, till February the 25th, Eight Weeks after the Parliament was risen; and then finally prorogued to the 24th of November 1546, Three Weeks after the time that the Parliament was appointed to meet.

To conclude the Affairs of this Reign: From the 4th of November 1546, to which Day the Parliament of the last Year had been Prorogued, it was farther continued to January the 14th. It then sate till the last of the Month; when the Chancellor declar’d to Them the Death of the King, which had happen’d the Friday before, and how by reason thereof the Parliament was Dissolved, and so it was free to them to Depart when ever they would: Only he admonished the Lords to attend at the Coronation of King Edward the VIth.

Our Convocation being Assembled on the 5th of November, the next Day after the Parliament, was by a ⁵ Royal Writ dated the same Day, prorogued to January the 15th, and so Continued under the Government of the Archbishop, till the King’s Death put an end to it. The Convocation of York, notwithstanding the more early Assembling both of the Parliament and our Synod, kept to its Own Day; and met by Prorogation November the 24th. It was then by vertue of the King’s Writ continued to the 15th of January following; after which the Books give us no farther Account of it.

Thus passed the busie and troublesome Reign of King Henry the VIIIth. The Changes which happen'd in it, and the Influence which they have had on our Synodical Assemblies ever since, have Obliged me to insist more largely than I thought to have done upon the Affairs of it. And thus much we have already gain'd by it, that from what has been observ'd it appears, that tho' our Convocations since the Act of Submission, have sate about the same time with the Parliament, yet they were not Confined to the Sessions of it: But have sometimes not begun till several Weeks after the Other was Open'd; and oftner sate on as many after it was Prorogued, or Dissolv'd. A Demonstration, in this Case, that there was yet no such necessary Connexion known between these Assemblies, as is now pretended; nor any Obligation thought to lie upon our Kings, to Call our Convocations ALWAYS and ONLY in time of Parliament; as Dr. A. would make us believe that there was, and is. Let us see how the Case stood under his Son and Successor,

King EDWARD the VIth.

Sect. 70.
1547.

His first Parliament was summon'd to meet at Westminster, November the 4th, 1547: It continued to sit till the 24th of December; and so was prorogued, first to the 20th of April, then to the 15th of October, and lastly, to the 24th of November, 1548.

¹ Registr.
Cranmer,
fol. 12.

On the 15th of November the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, Summon'd by the Authority of the King's Writ, began at St. Pauls London. It appears by the Minutes which remain of both Houses, that little was done by it. However it continued to sit till the 26th of December, and was then prorogued by several Writs to April the 21st; And from thence to such other time as the Archbishop should appoint. At the Opening of this Convocation, the President in his Speech told them, that it had been the Custom of the Realm of England, the first Year of every King's Reign, to Summon the Parliament, and also to call a Synod of the Bishops and Clergy; and that so it was at present done, by the Command of the King and his Lords. This² Dr. A. alledges to prove the necessary Connexion between the Parliament and Convocation. He observes indeed, that the Archbishop speaks only of a Custom in the first Year of every King; and therefore seems to think it not sufficient to prove the same of all the other Years of their Reigns. He might rather have observed, that such Expressions as these, in such kind of Speeches, are not to be too rigorously interpreted; nor produced as Matters of Record on these Occasions. It is true, that generally speaking, our Kings have at the beginning of their Reigns call'd their Parliaments; and our Archbishops their Synods about the same time, or not very long after. It was a Matter of just Prudence in Both so to do; for the Service of the Prince, and for the Peace of the Church and Realm. But yet Exceptions there have been, and that in the Reigns immediately foregoing. In that of King Henry the viiith, we hear of no Convocation in the Other Province, tho' a Parliament met, and a Synod was held the first. In that of his Father King Henry the viith, we find no Convocation in either; but the Parliament was held the first, the Convocations the 2d Year, after his Accession to the Throne; as in the History of those Years I have more fully declar'd. But how this can be interpreted to prove the necessary Attendance of the two Convocations upon the Parliament, either at the Beginning of every Reign, or at any other time, I must confess I am yet to learn.

² Rights, &c.
p. 70.

In the Province of York the Convocation began upon the same day, November the 5th. The King's Writ was read, and the Persons Summon'd were Call'd over: But that was all that was done, and so the Synod was Prorogued to the 23d of the same Month. On that day it was again prorogued to the 20th of January, that is, till near a month after the Parliament was risen: So that however this Convocation met twice during the time of the Parliament, yet according to Dr. A's account, here was no Session of Convocation at all. On the 20th of January it met and was prorogued to the 20th of April first, and then to the 6th of October; after which we hear no more of it till it's Dissolution, of which I shall take notice in its proper place.

Sect. 71.

Upon the 24th of November 1548, the same Parliament met again, and with a short Prorogation from the 21st of December to the 2d of January, sate till the 14th of March, when it was farther prorogued to the 4th of November the next next Year. What our Convocations did all this time more than the Granting of a Subsidy, I cannot tell. Most probable it is, that they only met, and were Continued from time to time, by the Archbishops while the Parliament sate, as I find that of our Province was by Order of the King's Writ, at the End of it; and that to the very same day on which the Parliament was ordered by him to meet again: A Practice, not so strange, or novel, as Dr. A. wou'd have us think, who represents it as One of the many Innovations of the Late Reign.

The Parliament sate according to its Prorogation, November the 4th, and Continued till the 1st of February after. I dare not affirm that the Convocation of our Province was, by Writ, Prorogued during this whole Session; tho' I think some such thing is imply'd in the Writ by which it was Prorogued at the End of it. ¹ That Writ bears date February the 2d, 4. Edward VI. It recites a Prorogation which had been made of the Convocation to the day following, and so Prorogues it on to the 22d of April; the next day after the Parliament was appointed to meet. From this time both these great Assemblies were Continued to the 23d of January 1551. Then the Parliament Assembled a fourth time; sate till Fryday, April the 15th, and was Dissolv'd. ² The next day our Convocation was by Writ Dissolved too; which is all that I know of it. But the Convocation of York was not so soon broken up. ³ It continued till the 4th of May, almost three Weeks after the Dissolution of the Parliament; and had not yet learnt that necessary Dependence on the Parliament which is now advanced by Dr. A. at least it did not yet by its Practice shew, that it knew of any such Obligation it had either to Sit, or Separate, with it.

About the latter End of the next Year, another Parliament was call'd to meet at Westminster the 1st of March, 1552. It sate to the End of that Month, and was Dissolved the very last day of it. ⁴ On the 2d of March the Convocation of our Province began. What it did, Or how it proceeded, I am not able to say. This is certain, that it was Dissolved by Writ the day after the Parliament; and so began, and ended within a day of it. But the Convocation of York is here again as cross to Dr. A's Purpose, as any thing can well be imagined. It met the 2d of March, and was continued to the 28th of the same Month, that is to say, till within Three Days of the End of the Parliament. On the 15th of April it met again, a Fortnight after the Parliament had been Dissolved. ⁵ Then the Cause of the Convocation being proposed to them by the Archbishop's Commissioners, to this Effect, namely, pro Concessione Subsidii, &c. to Grant the King a Subsidy; and treating thereupon, they Agreed to a Subsidy of six Shillings; and that, for ought appears, was all that they did at this Meeting.

And here we must Close up the short Reign of that Excellent Prince King Edward the VIth. For tho' another Parliament and Convocation were Appointed by Him to have met in September this same Year; yet the King dying before that time came, those Summons fell with Him: And so are no stop to our Proceeding to the next Reign, of his Sister, and Successor, Queen MARY the 1st.

This Princess being come to the Throne, July the 6th, the very next Month issued out ⁶ Writs for a Parliament to be held at Westminster, the 5th of October following. To this the Church of Lincoln deputed their Proctors, ⁷ ad Comparend. pro Eisdem coram Excellentissima, &c. Domina Maria Regina, &c. in Parlamento suo apud Westmonaster, 5 Octob. prox, &c. ad Consentiendum iis qua tunc ibidem de Communi Concilio hujus Regni Anglia divina favente Clementia contingerent Ordinari; as their Chapter Acts speak. The Parliament thus Assembled, sate till the 21st of the same Month; and after a short Intermission of a few days, resumed its Session, and continued it to the 6th of December, and so was Dissolv'd.

With this Parliament the Convocation of our Province, was also Summon'd by the ⁸ Queen's Writ, to Archbishop Cranmer, Dated August the 4th, to meet at St. Paul's London, October the 6th, the Day after the Parliament: But before it sate the Archbishop was imprison'd, and so Bonner Bishop of London remain'd President of the Assembly. It sate till Wednesday, December the 13th, a Week after the Parliament had been Risen, and then was Dissolv'd, as that before had been.

MARY been. The Convocation of the Other Province met at the same time, and probably after its usual manner sate much longer than Ours did. But the Acts of this, and the following Convocation, being never fair Transcribed into the Convocation Book (the Leaves of which are here left Blank for them) the Minutes of what they did, and when they were Dissolv'd, are, I doubt, entirely lost.

It was not above two Months after the Dissolution of the first Parliament, before the Queen issued out her *Writ*s for another to Assemble at Oxford, April the 2d. The Bishop of Norwich being then out of England, the Parliament Writ was directed to the Guardian of the Spiritualities of that Diocese, quod interfit Parlamento apud Civitatem Oxon. 2^o April. prox. tenend. This was afterward adjourn'd from Oxford to London; where it sate to the 5th of May, and so was Dissolv'd.

The Archbishop of Canterbury was now under an Attainder, so the Queen directed her Writ for the Convocation to meet in the Church of St. Marie Oxon, April the 3d, immediately to the Bishop of London (sede Archiepiscopali Vacante per Condemnationem Thome Cranmeri, as the Writ runs.) By a Second Writ directed to the same Bishop, Presidenti Convocationis sede Cant. vacante, He was ordered to Prorogue the said Convocation from Oxford to London; there to meet on the same day that had before been assigned for it. It met accordingly, and continued till Fryday the 11th of May, six days after the Parliament was Dissolv'd. It was then Prorogued only to Fryday the 5th of October, and that by Commission, without any Royal Writ; and with a reserve for meeting on any day before, facta prius intimatione & premonitione Prelatis & Clero Convocationis hujusmodi, & Eorum procuratoribus legitimis; say the Acts of that Synod. In pursuance of this Exception, they again met on Fryday, May the 18th; on Munday, May the 21st; and on Fryday, May the 25th: And then the President renew'd this Prorogation in the same terms, and to the same time to which he had before made it.

This I hope may be a sufficient Evidence to convince even Dr. A. himself, that, as yet, the Dependance even of the Convocation of this Province upon the Parliament, was by no means so strict as he supposes it to have been. That the One may lawfully Sit after the Other is Dissolved: Nay, and only Prorogue its self to a farther time, with a Power of meeting sooner, upon due and legal Notice given to its Members; tho' its Contemporary Parliament were put out of all Capacity of doing the same. At least this is plain, that thus this Convocation, in fact, did Do: It sate three Weeks after the Parliament was Risen; and then was only Prorogued by its Own President, tho' the other had been Dissolv'd by the Queens Authority.

On the 12th of November, a New Parliament met at Westminster. It sate till the middle of January, and was then, as the others before had been, Dissolv'd. By a Writ directed to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, the Convocation of that Province was Summon'd to meet at St. Paul's London, November the 13th; the next day after the Parliament. ⁵ In this Convocation the Bishop of London is said to be Deputat. Commissarius sive Presidens; and the Commission of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury is expressly noted to have been read to that purpose at the Opening of that Assembly. And here again, the Convocation out-sate the Parliament no less than Ten days: The one being Dissolv'd January the 16th; the Other continued till January the 26th. What became of it then, whether it were Dissolv'd, or Prorogued only, the Minutes which I have seen of it, speak not; so that I cannot with any certainty determine any thing in that Particular.

Reg. Eccl. Can.
M. fol. 30. b.

To proceed therefore to the next Year, in which a New Parliament was call'd, to meet at Westminster, October the 21st, and continued till the 9th of December following. The Convocation of this Province was by Order of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury appointed to be held at St. Paul's London, the next day, October the 22d. It was not long after, ⁸ that Cardinal Pool Appointed his Legantine Synod of both Provinces to meet at Westminster, in the Royal Chappel; But of this I shall have Occasion to speak more fully by and by, when I come to consider Dr. A's Account of it.

The Clergy met according to their Summons, October the 22d: And upon the 30th agreed to a large Subsidy for the Queen: What they did more, at this Meeting, the Minutes which remain of this Convocation deliver but obscurely to Us.

Us. I shall therefore proceed to consider that more perfect Account which Dr. A. imagines He has first communicated to the World of these Assemblies. Q. MARY the 1st.

In Vindication of the Supremacy of our Princes in these Matters, I had observed, that Queen Mary, not only call'd her first Convocation by Authority of her own Writ (I might have added, and all the following Convocations of her Reign, not one of which met but in Obedience thereunto) but gave her Licence to Cardinal Poole, to Assemble that which was held two Years after, and to make such Canons as he should think needful in it. For this I refer'd to a very accurate Author, upon whose Care and Fidelity I did not doubt but that I might safely Rely. Appeal. p. 30.

But this Dr. A. says, is according to my Usual Exactness in these Matters: For that Cardinal Poole's Licence was to hold his Legantine Synod, not Our Provincial Convocation. I must indeed confess that I did not distinguish, as I ought to have done, between these two Assemblies: I follow'd my Author, and made no Question but that I might have securely depended upon his Exactness. But the Crime is not great, either in Him or me, if what Dr. A. adds be true, that All our Writers have (equally) confounded these same Meetings. The Fault will be much more Inexcusable if Dr. A. who refers to the MSS Acts, or rather Extracts, of this Year, should after all be no less mistaken in the Report of these Synods, than Any of Us the humble Transcribers of One another's Blunders, hav been. Let us hear what He says of Them: Rights, &c. p. 373, 374.

"The true Account of this Matter is, that the Parliament meeting this Year Ibid. p. 373.
 "October the 21st, the Convocation also in Course met the day after it, at Pauls, "being Convened by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, as was usual in the "Vacancies. The Cardinal, tho' in England, did not appear at it; but Bonner
 "by Commission from the (He should have added Dean and) Chapter presided.
 "There they Sate and did Business till October the 30th; when I find them com"ing to a Conclusion, and Offering their Subsidies and Complaints to the "Queen. What Business this Convocation did from the time that the Bishop of Eli declared to them the Causes of their Meeting, till October the 30th, it is pretty hard to imagine. The Synod met October the 22^d; Presented their Pro-locutor, and had the Causes of their Meeting Open'd to them, October the 25th.
 Now the very next Session, was that of October the 30th. On which Dr. A. tells us, he finds them coming to a Conclusion (he means about their Subsidy, and so far he is in the Right: but when he adds) and Offering their Subsidies and Complaints to the Queen, He will give me leave to say that he mistook his Acts; which I am pretty sure were the same that are now before me. On that day, the Extracts inform Us, that the Lower House Agreed to the Subsidy which had been proposed to them, and brought up the Instrument of their Agreement to the Lords, with the Three Petitions, which are there expressly set down. This was all that was yet done, or indeed, that the Shortness of the time would allow them to have done. And eight days after we find the President agreeing, that the Cardinal should be consulted about the Manner, Form, and Quality of their Subsidy; and that his Assistance should be desired in it.

In order to this, the President Continued the Clergy to the King's Chappel, at Westminster, the Fryday following, November the 15th: After which we have only a Memorandum of the two Provinces meeting in the Legantine Synod, and so the Acts of the Present Assembly break off. But Dr. A. proceeds: "The Se"cond of the next Month the Cardinal had his Licence under the Broad Seal to hold Anth. Harmer p. 141.
 "his Synod Legantine of Both Provinces, and upon it issued out his Mandate to "Bonner, November the 8th, for the Province of Canterbury to meet those of "York on the 2^d of December following. Accordingly both Provinces met in "the King's Chappel at Whitehall; and from thence adjourn'd back again to "Pauls, and afterwards to Lambeth; and continued sitting there till February
 "the 11th, which was two Months after the Parliament was dissolved: Nor "was the Synod even then Dissolved, but Prorogued only to the 10th of "October.

This is Dr. A's Account of this Legantine Synod, in which after all his Triumphs over our Other Historians for their Unaccuracy in this particular, he must give me leave to tell him, he is himself not a little mistaken. For indeed, the Truth of this Matter is this. Cardinal Poole being Authorized by the Queens Licence, under the Great Seal of England, to exercise his Legantine Power in this

Q. MARY

Realm, had by vertue thereof summon'd a National Synod to meet in the King's Chappel at Westminster, not long after the Time that the Parliament was to Assemble. Whether the Bishops and Clergy who came up to Parliament and Convocation, desired the Cardinal for their greater Security to obtain an Express Licence from the Queen to meet in his Synod, or he was otherwise advised to it; but so it was, that the Cardinal did think fit to procure a particular Permission, both for himself to Hold the Synod which he had before Summon'd, or any other that he should afterwards think fit to call; and for the Clergy to assemble in Obedience to his Summons. The Words of the Patent, as Dr. A. himself has (or rather should have) Printed it, had he been pleased to attend to them, are these. "Know ye that for so much the said most Reverend Father earnestly desiring that his Labour and Travail may take Fruit to the Honour of God, and Wealth of our Subjects, hath Now called a Synod of the Clergy of this our Realm, to appear before him at our Palace at Westminster: We to avoid all Danger, Doubt, and Ambiguity which might arise in that Case, by Reason of any Laws, Statutes, Customs, or Prerogatives, of Us, or of this our Realm of England, and for the more Ample Declaration of our said Letters Patents, have Granted, Declared, and Signified, and by these Presents do Grant, Declare and Signify, that our Will, Pleasure, and Consent is, that as well the said most Reverend Father Cardinal Poole, Legat de latere of the Pope's Holyness, and the See Apostolick, may freely without Lett of Us, or Danger of any our said Laws, Statutes, Customs, or Prerogatives, Call and Celebrate the said Synod, or any Other Synod hereafter at his Will and Pleasure, and in the same Statute, Ordain and Decree any wholesome Canons for the Good Life and Order of the Clergy of this our Realm of England, or of any Other of our Realms and Dominions, and do any Other thing for the better executing of their Office and Duty; As also the said Clergy may appear and be Present at the said Synod or Synods, and Consent to fulfill, and obey all such Canons as shall be ordained in the same, or in Any of them, without Lett or Impediment of Us, and without incurring any Danger, or Penalty, or Forfeiture, of any of our Laws or Statutes; any Act, Ordinance, or other Matter contrary to the same, notwithstanding.

Ann. 1555.

It appears by this Patent that Cardinal Poole had Called his Legantine Synod, before the 2d of November; and that the Mandate therefore which he issued out the 8th of that Month, was not as Dr. A. Reports it, to Assemble his Council December the 2d, but to appoint a Time (left by Him to the Bishop of London to determine) within which all such of this Province as were not yet come to it should, under the Penalty therein express'd, appear at it. Accordingly the Mandate its self runs to the same Effect: That they should present themselves infra competentem Terminum arbitrio tuo statuendum, (in) Præsentis Synodo quam cum Circumspectione Tua, & aliis tam Cantuar. quam Ebor. Provinciae Episcopis, & Reliquis Ecclesiasticis quæ jam hic adsunt Personis, inchoavimus. In the Execution of this Mandate the Bishop Cites the absent Bishops and Clergy to appear, Coram Legato prædicto Synodum prædictam prosequuturo: And that (to observe this too by the Way) not on the 2d of December, but by that day at the farthest; Si Citius saltem venire, non poteritis, as his Words are.

Dr. A. therefore is every way mistaken, when he tells us, that the Cardinal having received the Queen's Licence to hold his Synod Legantine, November the 2d, did thereupon issue out his Mandate for its Meeting December the 2d. Whereas, in truth, he had Called it long before: He Assigned no such day for the Holding of it; but having obtain'd the Licence of which we were speaking, Order'd the Bishop of London to Summon those who were not yet come to it, to appear before him at a certain day; which Bishop Bonner determined should be either On, or Before, the 2d of December.

When this Synod first met, I will not positively affirm: This we may be sure of, from the Archbishop's Mandate before mentioned, that it was Assembled when that Pass'd; that is to say the 8th of November. But the Minutes of the Convocation of this Year will carry us yet farther, and enable us I believe to assign the very Day of its Meeting. For on Wednesday October the 30th, the President signified to the Bishops and Clergy there assembled, that They should Appear before the Cardinal in the King's Chappel at Westminster the Munday following, between Eight and Nine in the Morning, there to treat of certain serious Affairs.

Affairs. In the Queen Patents dated the Saturday after the Session, November the 2^d, this Synod is spoken of only as Called, but not Assembled; so that it seems at that time not to have yet met. I conceive therefore, that Monday, November the 4th, was the Day on which it was Opened; and that the Clergy did then, according to the Monition of their President, attend upon the Cardinal at it.

But Dr. A. proceeds: They met at the King's Chappel; from thence they Ad-journ'd back to Pauls, and afterwards to Lambeth; and continued sitting there till February the 11th. This I again take to be altogether Fictitious. On Monday, November the 4th, (if I mistake not) the Cardinal began his Synod in the King's Chappel at Westminster. On Friday the 15th of the same Month it met again in the same Place, and then (as I conjecture) went upon the Business of the Subsidy, which Dr. A. makes our Clergy to have presented to the Queen a Fortnight before. Where they met next, our Minutes tell us not. On Tuesday, January the 21st, the Session was at Lambeth in the Afternoon. It was there again, February the 11th, the last of their present Meeting.

How long the Convocation of our Province continued to sit, I cannot certainly tell: But by the Minutes (which seem all along to refer as well to the Legantine Synod, as to that, and to mention several Matters relating to Both) I do apprehend that it was sitting February the 10th, and that the Clergy were there admonish'd by their Pro-locutor, to attend the Legate at Lambeth the next Day.

Dr. A. himself refers the Business of Schools, which was treated on January the 8th to the Provincial Convocation: And of its Session yet later, January the 22^d, there is I think a clear and evident Account. As for the Legantine Synod, it was prorogued by the Cardinal first to November, (not as Dr. A. from his Minutes reports it, to October) the 10th, 1556; thence to the 10th of May, 1557: And lastly from the 10th of May, to the 10th of November following.

The Meeting of this Legantine Council, and its long Continuance, hindred the Convocation of York from Assembling so near the Parliament, as 'tis probable it would otherwise have done. 'It began not till the 4th of March 1555: that is to say, almost three Months after the Parliament had been Dissolved. This at least must be allow'd to be a plain Testimony of the Independance of the One of these Meetings upon the Other; and prove in Opposition to both Dr. A.'s Pretences, that the Parliament may Sit without any Attending Convocation; and the Convocation be Assembled, tho' there be at the same time no Parliament in being to be Attended by it.

The last Parliament of this Reign began at Westminster, on Munday January the 20th, 1557. The Church of Lincoln deputed their Proctors at once both to this Great Council, and to the Convocation which was to sit about the same time with it. It continued till the 7th of March; and was prorogued to the 5th of November following. On that day it Resum'd its Session, but was soon Ended by the Queen's Death, which happened within a few days after. The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury met by the Royal Writ, and Archiepiscopal Mandate, the next day, January the 21st: It continued till the day after the Parliament, March the 8th, and was then prorogued to the 11th of November, six days after the Parliament was to meet. Being then again Assembled, it was prorogued to the 17th of the Month: On which day the Queen's Death put an end to that, as well as to the Parliament.

Sect 75.
1557.

And here Dr. A. thinks he has another plain evidence of the necessary Conjunction of the Parliament and Convocation; and of the Dependance of the One upon the Other. He urges the Speech made by the Cardinal Archbishop at the Opening of it, and takes it to speak so formally in his Cause, as not to need either Explanation or Comment. Let us see therefore what it will amount to, upon a fair Examination of it. His words are to this effect: "That As of Antient Custom the King of England, for certain difficult Causes, commands the Prelates of this Realm to be present at his Council or Parliament, for the Security of the King, and the State of this Realm, and such other matters as Concerns the Public Good; So the Archbishop of Canterbury is wont to call his Suffragan Bishops, Prelates, &c. to a Sacred Council, to treat of the same Causes, and in like manner to give their " Aid.

So Card. Poole recites it, in his Mandate to the Bishop of Dover for Collecting it: Subsidium Dominis Regi & Reginae per Praelatos & Clerum Cantuar. & Ebor. Provinciarum in Sacra Synodo per Nos sub Anno Dom 1555, ultimo praeterit. inchoata & Celebrata, concessum & elargitum. To this agrees the Time, when it was presented to the House of Lords for Confirmation; viz. Novemb 30. And by the Instrument presented, it appears, that both Provinces granted together. Rastall. Stat. 2 & 3. Ph. & M. chap. xxii.

MARY the 1st. Aid. He spake most truly ; and has given us a right account of these Convocations. Our Kings are wont to Call their Prelates to Parliament to treat of the difficult Affairs which relate to the Public Good, and the Security of the King and Kingdom. The Archbishops of Canterbury have been wont to Summon their Clergy to Convocation, for the like (Civil) Ends ; to treat of the like Affairs, and to grant their Subsidies towards the Support of the Public Needs, there, as the Others did in Parliament. But do's the Cardinal say that Of ancient Custom, Whenever the King Call'd a Parliament, the Archbishop was Obliged to Summon a Convocation at the same time, to Attend upon it ; which was to sit as long as the Parliament Sate, and never to sit but while the Parliament was sitting ? He must have some better Skill at discovering such Secrets, than I dare pretend to, who can extort such a sence out of those Words. The only Pretence Dr. A. can have for this, must be drawn from the first Word CUM, which I render AS ; and when it is Oppos'd to ITA or SO ; I cannot tell how to make sence of it, by any other Translation. In the mean time that the Cardinal intended in that Passage to refer not to the Seasons of their Meeting, but to the Business which they were to do when met, is evident from hence ; first, That this was the Introduction to that Speech in which He declar'd to them the Causes of their Meeting ; Causas hujus Synodi verbo tenus Exposuit, say the Acts : And then follow the words before recited. And, secondly, that presently after them he passes on to the Causes for which he say'd the Archbishop was wont to Call them to such Councils ; the very first of which was the Reduction of Calais by force.

That Cardinal Poole could not be ignorant at what different Times the Parliaments and Convocations, not only of our former Kings, but of King Henry the viiith, in whose Court he was bred, were wont to be Call'd, must be allow'd ; or we must suppose him to have been a Person of much less Observation, than his Character and Learning bespeak him to have been. The Convocation of the Other Province still continued to Sit and Do Business, several Weeks after the Parliaments were Prorogued, or even Dissolv'd. So did that of our Province too, in the beginning of this very Reign. And that the Cardinal apprehended it might be requisite for this very Convocation which he here spake to, to Do likewise, appears by the Message which he sent to it, at the 10th Session, February the 16th ; in which he desir'd " the Synod might Assemble as often as it conveniently could during the Session of the Parliament ; and that after the Parliament should be ended, those who were desirous to return to their Diocesses should leave their Proxies with the Bishop of London, &c. who should tarry here, and go on with the Reformation of the Church. This I take to be a much clearer Evidence of the Cardinals Opinion, of the Independence (in point of Time and Session) of the Convocation upon the Parliament, than can ever be extracted out of his Words before recited for it : Which however express'd by the Actuary of that Synod, yet plainly mean no more than that the Prelates and Clergy were call'd to Convocation, there to treat, in an Ecclesiastical way, of the same Matters that the Prelates and Lay did in Parliament, in a Civil one.

At what time the Convocation of York sate, this Year, the Negligence of the Register to note the Day on which they agreed to the Provision for Arms, which had before passed our Synod, leaves it in doubt. That it was after our Clergies Prorogation, we have this Presumption, or rather Assurance ; that upon the last Day of their Meeting, the Cardinal desir'd the Bishops that before they went away to their Diocesses, they would assist at the drawing up the Order for the Provision of Arms against the Scots, according to the Articles agreed upon at the 13th Session before. This Decree was drawn up accordingly, and a Mandate issued out by the Archbishop for the Publishing of it. After which, a Certificatory was made of it for the Archbishop of York ; who, I suppose, transmitted it to the Clergy of his Province, that so they might come (as accordingly they did) to the same Agreement. If in this my Conjecture be right, as I believe it is ; then must their Session have been some time after both the Parliament and our Convocation were prorogued. This however is plain, and it effectually confutes Dr. A's Pretences, that they prorogued their Convocation but to the 21st of October ; whereas the Parliament was prorogued to the 5th, and our Convocation to the 11th of November after.

Hitherto I may therefore venture to say, there is no manner of Colour to justify any such strict, or necessary Dependence, by the Laws of our Constitution, in point point of Meeting, between the Parliament and Convocations, as Dr. A. speaks of. Q. MARY the 1st.

The latter of these were now indeed accustomed to be Assembled with every Parliament; that so they might be ready at hand to deliberate upon such Matters as the Prince should think fit to propose to them; but especially that their Aids which they should grant in Convocation, might (according to the Method now set on foot) be Ratified and Confirm'd by Authority of Parliament. But then this was All; for being thus call'd, they often did their Business many Days, or Weeks, after the Parliament was risen: They only prorogued their Convocations, when the Prince dissolv'd his Parliament; and by so doing plainly shew'd that they knew no such necessary Connexion between these two Assemblies, but that the One might be Summon'd, or Sit, and Act, when the Other did not; nay when there was no such thing as the Other Council at all in Being. Let Dr. A. consider this, and reconcile it to his New Hypothesis if he knows how.

Queen ELIZABETH.

Queen Mary being dead, November the 17th, Queen Elizabeth her Sister succeeded; and held her first Parliament at Westminster the 23d of January following. It sate from thence, after a short Prorogation of two Days, till the 8th of May, and then was Dissolv'd.¹ The Convocation of our Province kept an exact Conformity with it: It met the Day after it should have begun, and was Dissolv'd the next Day after it ended. But the² Convocation of York was altogether irregular: It began not till the 10th of February, (almost three Weeks after the Parliament first Assembled) and then, to use Dr. A's own Expression, it met only in order to be told when it should meet again. The Queen's Writ was read, and the Names call'd over, and the Absent Members pronounced Contumacious; but no Business was done, not so much as a Prolocutor chosen. From thence it was Prorogued a Month forward, to March the 16th: And then again nothing at all was done; only it was a second time prorogued to the last of the same Month, and then to the 15th of April, in the same manner. What became of it afterwards the Convocation Book tells us not: So little it seems there was done, that it was hardly thought worth the while to take notice of it. Thus much however we may learn from it to our present Purpose, that the Practice of Calling Convocations in Time of Parliament, and then proroguing them without suffering them to enter upon Business, or even to chuse a Prolocutor, is not of so late a Date as Dr. A. would make us believe; but has been a Matter of early (as it will hereafter appear to have been of frequent) Practice; since the time that our Princes have thought fit to Assemble these Synods, not Occasionally, when they had somewhat for them to do, but Regularly; and, as it is now phras'd, Acourse, with every Parliament; whether there was any Business for them to transact, or no.

The next⁴ Parliament of this Reign was summon'd to begin at Westminster, on Monday, January the 11th, 1562; and accordingly did sit the next Day, January the 12th. It continued till the 10th of April, 1563; and was then prorogued unto the 2d of October following. With this Parliament the⁵ Convocation of the Province of Canterbury was appointed to meet January the 12th; and begun the Day after it, January the 13th. It out-sate it four Days, till April the 14th, and was then continued till the 3d of October after. In this Convocation much Business was done, which we shall hereafter consider; so that here all went right according to Dr. A's Desire. But the Convocation of the other Province did but very little. It met according to its first Summons, January the 12th: The Queen's Writ was read, so was the Archbishop's Commission to certain Persons appointed to preside in his stead. The same was repeated the next Day, January the 13th: But that being done, the Synod was prorogued to the 5th of February, and no manner of Business enter'd upon. On the 5th of February they sate twice, and had some Debates concerning certain Articles, and about the Proctors Wages, concerning which they agreed to consult their Archbishop; which being done, the Assembly was continued to the 12th of March, above a Month after. On the 12th and 13th of March they met, and agreed to a Subsidy for the Queen, and settled the Wages of the Proctors for Chester and Carlisle; which having done, they were again prorogued to the last of March, above a Fortnight more.

more. On the last of March they did nothing, but were continued farther till the 28th of April; when they met again, (almost three Weeks after the Parliament was risen) read the Queen's Writ of Prorogation, and were Continued to the 3^d of October following.

This is the Summ of what passed in that Convocation: They did but very little, and for that little they troubled not themselves with the Choice of a Prolocutor; but presently agreed to the Subsidy propos'd, which was the chief, and almost the only thing they had to agree to. From this time we meet with nothing but Prorogations both of Parliament and Convocations till the End of September, 1566; when the Parliament again Assembled at Westminster, on the last Day of that Month; and sate till the 2^d of January following, and then was dissolv'd.

What the Convocation of our Province did during this Session, more than grant a Subsidy, I am not able to say: Sure I am, this was all that the Synod of the Other Province at all attempted to do. And because we have the ² Acts of this Convocation very full and particular, I shall briefly represent the Procedure of it.

On Tuesday the 1st of October the Convocation met, under the Presidency of the Archbishop's Commissioners; and was only prorogued to the 30th of the same Month. On the 30th they met again, and were again continued to the 12th of November, without entring upon any Debates. The 12th of November they met a third time; but they met again only to be prorogued till the 27th of the same Month. On the 27th of November they resum'd their Session, and were further continued to the 11th of December. From the 11th of December they were again prorogued to the 20th of the same Month. When, having now met for almost three Months without doing any thing, (only to be told when they should meet again, as Dr. A. wittily descants upon this point;) they agreed to a Subsidy for the Queen; drew up their Consent, and subscrib'd it, all at One Meeting; without ever Dividing, or so much as Chusing a Prolocutor for the Lower House, and so were prorogued to the 8th of January following.

The Parliament was Dissolv'd January the 2^d, and the Writ for Dissolving our Convocation, pass'd the next day, January the 3^d; but without taking the least Notice of the Parliament, or its Dissolution; as in all reason it should have done, had the Queen been Obliged, by the Laws of our Constitution, to Conclude the One at the same time that She did the Other. But all this notwithstanding, the Convocation of York not only met again according to their Prorogation, January the 8th, but were again prorogued to the 15th of the same Month; tho' the Parliament had been Dissolv'd the Week before. On the 15th of January they met the last time: The Presidents pronounced the Absent Members Contumacious; (a strange Procedure upon Dr. A's Principles, that Men should be condemned as Contumacious for not meeting in Convocation a Fortnight after the Parliament was Dissolv'd, and the Convocation therefore ought legally to have been Dissolv'd with it!) and then by Authority of the Queen's Writ, this Synod was also Concluded.

And here now let Dr. A. say; Excepting only in the One Act of Granting a Subsidy, in which he not only allows the Case to be now altered, but is well content that it should have been so; What has our late King, or our Archbishops done, that was not done in this Convocation? Were the Clergy summon'd by the Queen with this Parliament? So they have been by his Majesty, with all Ours? Did they meet from time to time under the Commissioners appointed to preside over them? They have done the same, or I am sure ought to have done it, under the Commissioners of our Archbishops, or such Others as had Authority in this Case? But our Synods met only to be prorogued? So did this: The Archbishop had nothing to propose to them: They made no Request to him that they might enter upon any Business; and so (the Queen's Subsidy excepted) nothing at all was done by them.

The next ¹ Parliament of this Reign was held at Westminster, April the 2^d, 1571; and continued to Tuesday, May the 29th, and so was Dissolved. With this Parliament our Convocation was Assembled, April the 3^d: It sate and did Business; and, I suppose, was Dissolv'd soon after the Parliament ended. ² The Synod of York began the same Day, but it did no Business before the 2^d of May; at which time a Schedule was offer'd to the Presidents by one of the Clerks of the Convoca- tion for a Reformation to be made in the Churches of that Province; which being publicly read, they Resolved to Deliberate upon it till Wednesday the 9th of May. On Fryday the 11th, the Subsidy was Granted to the Queen, and an Order made for the Proctors Wages. But this was all that was done in that whole Meeting; For tho' the Schedule before mention'd, was once or twice taken Notice of; and at the last Meeting it was agreed that it should be debated upon the next Session; yet I conceive, nothing was then done, but the Convocation was Dissolv'd, as the Parliament had been before. This Session however was appointed to be upon June the 20th, and I find a Proxie that day Entred for that Convocation, tho' the Parliament had been Dissolv'd above three Weeks before: Which therefore may be a New Evidence to Assure us, that the late Notion of the Necessary Dependence of the One of these Assemblies upon the Other, was altogether unknown in those days.

On Thursday the 8th of May, the next Year, Another Parliament began; and sate till the last of June following; when it was Adjourn'd to the 1st of November. The Convocation of Canterbury was, by the Queen's Writ, Summon'd to meet the day after, May the 9th; and was Open'd by the Archbishop at that time according to the Summons: But whether it Met, or entred upon any Business, I cannot tell, having not seen any Acts, or Extracts, of it. This I am sure, that the Convocation of York was this Year absolutely such as our late Convocations, so much branded by Dr. A. with Innovation, and Oppression, have been. It met by the Queens Writ, May the 9th, and was continued by a few Prorogations till the 18th of July; almost three Weeks after the Parliament was Prorogued. In all this time no Business was moved, nor any Prolocutor chosen: A thing frequently Omitted, without any Complaint, in that Province; how much soever it has been thought a Grievance, and Innovation of the Rights and Powers of the Clergy, to neglect it, upon the like Principle of having nothing for him to do, in This.

After many Prorogations, this same Parliament began its 2^d Second Session on Wednesday the 8th of February 1575; and sate till the 15th of March ensuing. Our Convocation met with it, and entred upon some Business, of which I shall have Occasion hereafter to take Notice. But in that of York, nothing at all was done till March the 23d; eight days after the Parliament was Risen. Then a Subsidy was Agreed to for the Queen, but not finished. On Thursday the 5th of April they met again; and a third time on Thursday, April the 19th, five Weeks after the Session of Parliament was Ended. At this last Meeting they finished their Grant; and so were Prorogued to the 6th of November, as our Convocation before had been.

The last 3^d Session of this Parliament began not till the 16th of January 1580. It sate till the 18th of March; and was Prorogued, to the 24th of April after. From thenceforth several Prorogations were made of it; till at last it was Dissolv'd, April the 19th 1583. With this Parliament Our Convocation met: A Motion was made to draw up some Articles against the dangerous Opinions of the Family of Love, but nothing was done in it. In short, All that they did ended in a Subsidy to the Queen, as 4 Mr. Fuller, from our Records (now lost) informs us. 5 Dr. A. indeed has acquainted us with some Other of their Transactions. He mentions a Petition from the London-Ministers to the Bishops, and the rest of the Convocation, which is said to have been read and committed, February the 10th. Of this I can give no farther Account, and must therefore leave it as I find it. But for his other 6 Instance, and much more considerable, of the Convocations Petitioning the Queen on behalf of the Archbishop; Dr. Heylin affirms it to be a Great Mistake, and from him I have already corrected the Error of it.

But whatever the Convocation of Canterbury did, certain it is that the Convocation of the other Province did nothing but grant their Subsidy, and order the Salaries of the Proctors who appear'd for the Clergy at it. They were Prorogued from time to time till the 8th of March, without any other Business than that of being told when they should meet again. On that day they Agreed to their Subsidy, and so were again Prorogued, as before, till the 7th of April; about three Weeks after the Parliament was Risen. It is I think Remarkable, that tho' the Parliament had been Prorogued to the 24th of April (from whence it was afterwards continued by short Intervals, to the 29th of May; 12th and 28th of June; 6th of July: 1st of August; and 5th of October; yet the Presidents passing over all these, made but one large Prorogation of the Convocation, to October the 6th; which, had the Connexion been so Sacred between these Bodies, as Dr. A. would have us think it to be, they could in no wise have Justified the Doing of. But the truth is, the Proceedings of this Province are so utterly irreconcilable with Dr. A's Principles, that he must in his Next Edition and Corrections, either restrain the Title of his Book to the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, and the Rights, Powers, and Privileges of That only; or He must resolve to give up his Plea; for 'tis certain the Province of York has all along acted in a direct Opposition to his Pretences.

The next Parliament of this Reign was Summon'd to begin at Westminster November the 23d, 1584; and sate till the 29th of March ensuing. With this Parliament Our Convocation Assembled, November the 24th, and sate on with it to March the 31st. In this Assembly a Subsidy was granted, the Articuli pro Clero were pass'd, and some Persons Conven'd before the Archbishop and Bishops. The Convocation of York began the same day with that of Canterbury; but it did nothing more than Grant its Subsidy on Thursday March the 4th. The rest of its Sessions were meer Prorogations, without any thing done but what Custom and Form required. Yet even thus it sate to the 7th of April; Nine days after the Parliament was Risen: And then it was Prorogued to the Tuesday before Whitsunday, May the 25th, five days beyond what that Great Council had been continued to.

1586.
p. 375, &c.

This Parliament thus Prorogued in 1585, continued by several Prorogations till the 14th of September 1586 before it was Dissolv'd; but it met not any more for Publick Affairs. A New One was presently Call'd to begin at Westminster, the 15th of October the same Year; and after two short Prorogations, met there October the 29th: It sate till the 2d of December; when it was Adjourn'd by the Queen's Commissioners to the 15th of February: From thence it sate on to March the 23d, and so was Dissolv'd.

Ibid. p. 382.

The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury was Summon'd by Writ to meet at St. Paul's London, October the 16th; but being twice Prorogued, as the Parliament was, it sate not till the 2d of November, three days after the Parliament began. It Continued to the 2d of December, and was then Prorogued to the 17th of February following. From thenceforth it sate on, till the day after the Parliament, March the 24th; when it was, in like manner, Dissolv'd.

In this Convocation little was done besides what related to the Subsidies, and Benevolence therein Granted to the Queen. But in that of York there was yet less; for that was the only Business, besides Matters of Course, which they Enter'd upon. Their Synod Assembled, according to its first Summons, October the 16th, and was then Open'd in form, tho' the Parliament was Prorogued to the 27th of the same Month. From thenceforth we meet with nothing but meer Continuations, and those without any Regard to the Sessions of the Parliament, till the 9th of March; when the Business of the Subsidy and Benevolence came on. These were Confirm'd at their next Meeting, March the 23d; the last day of the Parliament. After which we meet with another Session March the 31st, and then another Continuation to April the 23d; notwithstanding the Parliament had so long before been Dissolv'd. But indeed it has been as much the Custom of this Province to sit some considerable time after the Parliament has been Risen, as for the other to break up within a few days of it: And Dr. A. therefore will please to consider, whether this being so, they have not a Good Right to hold their Convocation after the Parliament is Dissolv'd, in that Province, tho' we have not any such Right in This.

The Parliament was Adjourn'd December 2. The Convocation met Decem 15.

D'Ewes Jour.
p. 419.

The next Parliament should have sate at Westminster on Tuesday the 12th of November 1588: but was Prorogued till the 4th of February following. From thence it sate till Saturday, March the 29th, and so was Dissolv'd. By a Writ dated September the 20th, the Convocation of Canterbury was order'd to be held at St. Paul's London, November the 13th. But as the Parliament had been, so this Assembly was by another Writ, dated October the 19th, Prorogued to the 5th of February, before it sate. It continued from thenceforth, till the 2d of April; four Days after the Parliament had been Dissolv'd, and was then, in like manner, Dissolved. The Great Business of this Convocation was to Grant a double Subsidy to the Queen; should I add, it was All that the Convocation did, I do not see but that the Acts of it would Justify my Assertion. For tho' at the beginning the Lower Lower Clergy were admonished to make any Complaints they had to Offer against such as broke the Orders and Canons before Made, and afterwards the Archbishop Communicated to both Houses certain Articles established by the Queen's Authority concerning Residence, and some Other Points; Yet excepting a Petition of the Lower House, to the House of Lords, to Exempt the Clergy from Provision of Arms, there was nothing properly done by them, besides the Granting of the Subsidy, I before mention'd, to the Queen.

But whatever was done in the Convocation of this Province, certain it is, that nothing at all else was either done, or mov'd, in the Other. The Prelates and Clergy met there, as they did with Us, February the 5th. From thence there were only Prorogations, till Saturday March the 8th. Then the Subsidy was agreed to, and the Salaries of the Proctors Order'd. After which, they were again continued by several Prorogations till the 18th of April, almost three Weeks after the Parliament Ended, and so were Dissolv'd.

On the 19th of February 1592, the next ¹ Parliament was Assembled. It sate there till the 10th of April; at which time it was Dissolv'd, as the Others had commonly been before. With this Parliament the Convocation of either Province met, February the 20th. If Dr. A. from his private Extraets can tell Us what Business they did besides That of Granting a Subsidy, He will do more than without the help of them, I am able to Do. But to say the truth, I believe little else was done: So that laying that aside, which Convocations are now no longer either Call'd for, or permitted to Do; this may pass for a Meeting of as little Consequence, as any that have almost been Assembled in our own Days. It continued till the 11th of April, and then as it met a day after the Parliament began, so was it Dissolv'd, in like manner, a day after the Parliament Ended.

But in the Convocation of the Other Province, there is no room for doubt in this Particular. The Acts of it are Express; and shew us what was, or rather, that nothing at all was done by it. From February the 20th, till April the 2^d, it was barely Prorogued, without any manner of Business, more than Matters of Form, entred upon. On that day (according to Custom) the Subsidy being to be demanded, the Cause of the Convocation was declar'd to them. What that was we may, therefore, easily Guess, tho' it be not particularly mention'd. The Subsidy was the same Session Concluded upon and finish'd. And that being done, the Presidents Prorogued the Convocation from time to time, till the 20th of April: On which Day they Prorogued it farther till that day Month; unless in the mean time the Queens Writ of Dissolution shou'd be sent to the Archbishop. This was done Ten Days after the Parliament had been Dissolv'd: So that at that time therefore this Convocation was not only still Sitting; but under an utter Uncertainty how long it might be before it should Rise.

It was not before Monday, October the 24th 1597, that the next ² Parliament of this Reign began. Having sate till the 20th of December, it was by the Queen's Order Adjourn'd till the 11th of January following. From thence it sate on till the 9th of February, when it was finally Dissolv'd. With this Parliament the Convocations were Summon'd, according to the Custom of these Latter Reigns. In the Province of Canterbury, the Archbishop not long after his Mandate was issued out for Calling of our Synod, Order'd the following Direction to be sent after it, for Regulating the Procedure of the Clergy in their Elections for it.

3 " His Grace did since the Mandate sent unto me, signify his Opinion, that He found some Inconveniences in former Convocations, that sometimes either the Dean, or some of the Archdeacons, in some Diocesses, are Chosen Proctors for the Clergy of their Diocesses; whereby the Appearance that is requir'd at that solemn Assembly is not so furnished as it ought to be. And therefore his Grace willed me to require your Lordship to premonish your Clergy, that no Dean or Archdeacon be chosen Proctor for the Clergy of your Diocess.

William Blackwell.

That this Convocation did some Business, the Constitutions therein passed will not suffer us to doubt. But for the Particulars of its Procedure, I can give no Account of them; nor how long it sate, or when it was Dissolv'd. It is most probable, that it continued till a day or two after the Parliament, and so Ended as the like Assemblies before had done.

The Convocation of the Other Province met the same day with Ours, October the 25th. Being Continued by Prorogations from time to time, it Attempted no manner of Business till Fryday the 9th of December, when the Subsidy was Granted. After that it was again Prorogued as before (and that without any Regard to the Adjournment of the Parliament <sup>1</sup> December the 20th,) till February the 17th, before which day, I suppose, it was Dissolved by the Authority of the Queen's Writ.

We are now come to the last <sup>2</sup> Parliament of this Reign, which began upon Tuesday October the 27th, and sate till the 19th of December following. The Convocations were Assembled the next day after the Parliament, at London, and York, October the 28th. And here as far as my short Collections reach, I find nothing at all done, in the Convocation of our Province, besides matter of form. For as for the Exhortation which the Archbishop made to his Suffragan Bishops, at the Conclusion of this Assembly, to be diligent in their Charges, and carefully to observe the Canons made in the last Convocations; that was not properly a Synodical Affair, nor any thing more than what He might as well have done, had no Synod at all been held at that time. If the Writ for Dissolving this Convocation, were dated the same day that the Other was for that of York; viz. December the 21st, We may then conclude, that it Outlasted the Parliament but two days. But the Dissolution of the Other Convocation was not so soon made: For on the 23d of that Month, the Clergy not only met there, but were farther Prorogued to the 7th of January after: On which day being finally Assembled, they were also Dissolv'd; almost Three Weeks after the Parliament.

Were it not for the Subsidies which this Convocation, as well as Ours, Granted to the Queen, I should not need to take any farther notice of it. For tho' the Acts of these Assemblies in that Province are very Exact, and Particular; yet it does not appear that any Manner of Business besides, was either done or proposed in this Synod. But they were Prorogued by their Presidents from time to time: A Practice which how hard soever Dr. A. may think it, or how much soever he may descant, for his own Ends, upon it; Yet appears to have been of a very antient date in the (almost) Constant Practice of the Province of York; as well as Occasionally, in that of Canterbury.

King JAMES the 1st.

Sect. 86.
1603.

* Journ. of the
H. of Lords.

Queen Elizabeth dying about the later end of the Year 1601, King James the First Succeeded, and held his first Parliament on Monday March the 19th, 1603. What Business was transacted in this Assembly relating to our present Subject, will more properly fall under Consideration when I come to the next Chapter; in which the Proceedings of our Convocations must more particularly be taken notice of. I shall only Observe this one One thing here, from the Journals of the House of Lords; to Shew the Opinion which the Commons then had of the Difference between the Parliament and Convocation; that upon Wednesday, April the 18th, this Message was sent up to the Lords, by them: <sup>3</sup> "That whereas " they had received Information of his Majesty's Pleasure (deliver'd unto them
" by their Speaker) for Conference by Them to be had with certain Lords the " Bishops, concerning the Reformation of certain Matters and Rites of the Church
" (whereof some Complaints had been made) and for the better Correspondence " to be holden betwixt the Commonalty and Clergy; They were willing " to have such a Conference with some select Number of the Bishops, so as they " might Confer with them, As Lords of the Higher House of Parliament, " and not in such Condition and Quality, As They are of the Convocation " House. To this we find the Lords Agreed; for the next day they appointed a Committee of Thirty Lords, without determining what they were; so that possibly several of the Bishops might be Omitted, but sure we are, that several of the Lay-Nobility must have been joyn'd with them. The Occasion of this Conference proceeded from the Desire of the Convocation then sitting: And the Bishop of London, President of that Assembly, the same day told them, that the Speaker and Lower House had Refus'd the Consultation propos'd, and made their Complaint to the Lords.

* Ibid.

The Parliament thus Assembled, continued till <sup>4</sup> Saturday, July the 7th; and was then Prorogued to the 7th of February following. On the 20th of March, the the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury Assembled. Much Business was done by it, as the large Book of Canons there pass'd, not to mention any Other Instances, shews. On these Affairs it continued to Sit till July the 9th, and was then Prorogued till the 8th of February after.

With this Busy Parliament and Convocation, the Synod of the other Province met: But it met to no manner of Purpose, more than meer Meeting; nor was there any thing done by it, or propos'd in it. In short, this Assembly was an exact Pattern of those so much now complain'd of: It met, and was Prorogued from Session to Session; without chusing a Prolocutor, or entring upon any one Synodical Act, except in Matters of Form: And even those consisted chiefly in Calling over the Names of the Members, and pronouncing the Absent Persons, and Proctors, Contumacious.

After two other Prorogations, the same Parliament met again on the famous 5th of November 1605; and should have Sate, had not the Accident of the Popish Conspiracy interrupted it. On the 9th it Assembled, and then the King deliver'd his Speech to the Lords and Commons upon that Occasion: After which they were Prorogued to the 21st of January following. From thenceforth they sate till May the 27th, when they were again Prorogued to the 18th of November, A°. 1606.

Sect. 87.

On the 6th of November the Convocation of our Province met again. Dr. Ravis, the Prolocutor of the Lower House being promoted to the See of Gloucester; the Archbishop recommended Dr. Overall, Dean of St. Pauls, to that Place; and then Prorogued them to November the 13th. The Parliament had before this been Prorogued to the 21st of January; However on the 13th of November the Convocation met, and was in like manner Prorogued to the 22d of the same January. They had sate but once, before the Archbishop brought in a Book ready drawn up, concerning the State of the Church, &c. and desir'd both Houses to take Copies of it, and to Consult about it. This was the Great, and almost only Business of this Convocation; which continued till the 28th of May, the day after the Parliament Rose; and was then Prorogued to the 19th of November next ensuing.

The Convocation of York met at its appointed time, November the 6th, and was Prorogued to the 3d of December, by the Archbishop's Commissioners: Who himself dying soon after, left that Assembly in Disorder, till the King, by a new Writ, dated January the 22d, directed to the Guardians of the Spiritualities, Commanded them to proceed again with it. This Writ was not presented to the Dean and Chapter of York, till Tuesday the 4th of February. They Resolv'd to proceed with the Convocation according to the King's Command: In order whereunto They Chose the Bishop of Bristol, their Dean, to Preside in it, and Address'd themselves to the King for his Confirmation of their Election; and for a Royal Commission to Treat, Conclude, and Do such Other things in the said Convocation, as should be for the general Good of that Province. Then they appointed the 10th of February for the Assembling of their Convocation; which by this Account met not till about three Weeks after the Parliament began.

The Reason of this Unusual Request from that Province was this: The Convocation of our Province had, at their last Meeting, agreed to a Book of Canons, by which they did in Good Measure settle the whole Government; and Discipline, of the Church. This Book thus made and agreed to by our Bishops and Clergy, the King had Confirmed by his Letters Patents; and Order'd to be observ'd, not only within the Province of Canterbury, (by whose Convocation it had been pass'd,) but in that of York too, who had not yet Synodically Agreed to it. This seem'd a little hard to them. Queen Elizabeth had indeed done the like before: But her Confirmations extended no farther than her own Life; and so were the less Considered by them. The Present Ratification was to continue to Posterity; and to have Submitted to it without doing any thing to secure their Provincial Rights, would have been indeed to Own a Subjection, somewhat like that which Dr. A. would impose upon them; of being Obliged to Approve of whatsoever our Province should think fit to determine. Here therefore they thought it needful to make a stand: And by passing these same Canons in form, by a Licence from the King under the Great Seal of England, to accommodate all; and at once both openly Vindicate their own Liberty, and yet Submit to the King's Command. For this End it was that they desir'd his Letters of Licence; How they proceeded to Act upon them is the next Thing to be consider'd.

the 1st.

Ann. 1605.

From the 10th of February to the 5th of March, they only met, and were prorogued: Being then Assembled, they chose, and presented their Prolocutor; who was presently Confirm'd by the President. This being done, they deliberated about the Matters which were to be Treated upon in that Convocation by vertue of the King's Letters Patents: And finally having Read, and Approv'd, the several Canons made by the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, Anno 1603, They did by their Unanimous Consent, and Assent, Ratifie the Ecclesiastical Constitutions aforesaid; and command Them to be firmly Observ'd in and through the whole Province of York, as by their Decree, or Certificatory, more fully appears, to which they subscribed their Names. On Wednesday the 9th of April they granted Four Subsidies to the King, and order'd the Proctors Wages: After which they were continued from time to time till the 3<sup>d</sup> of June, about a Week after the Parliament was risen; and then were prorogued to the 19th of November following.

Thus pass'd this Convocation; the only One in which we find any Business to have been done, besides that of granting Subsidies, for many Years together. I might make several other Observations upon the Proceedings of it, but I shall content my self with this One; that as in the preceding Acts we do not meet with any mention either of any Synodical Affairs that were transacted, or of any Prolocutor, Chosen, Presented, or Confirm'd, in some Reigns before; so the true Reason of it was, that they did little more than agree to the same Subsidies which had been granted by the Prelates and Clergy of our Province; who generally concerted those Matters with their Archbishop and Bishops: And as for that they needed not any long Debates, so neither did they Choose any Prolocutor to moderate in them; but after the old manner (much better observ'd and continued in that, than in our Province) Agreed together to what was propos'd by their Presidents to Them, and seldom ever divided, or so much as withdrew, to Deliberate about it.

p. 275, 276.

But I must not conclude this Year without taking notice of an Argument offer'd by Dr. A. to prove the Convocation Clergy to be Members of Parliament, so very extravagant, that were he not more than ordinarily fierce in his Allegation of it, I should have almost question'd whether he had designed in earnest to prove any thing by it. The Summ of it is this; "That in the Office set out for the 5th of November, at the Restauration of King Charles the 1st, mention is made of the Nobility, Clergy, and Commons, then Assembled in Parliament. For to say that by the Clergy of the Realm, my Lords the Bishops only are intended, were so absurd a Gloss, that even Dr. Wake's Pen would, I believe, be ashamed of it.

The Words to which Dr. A. refers are taken out of the first Collect for that Day; in which our Church thus expresses her Sense of the Deliverance which it pleased God to vouchsafe to us thereupon: "We yield Thee our unfeigned Thanks and Praise for the wonderful and mighty Deliverance of our late Gracious Sovereign King James, the Queen, the Prince, and all the Royal Branches, with the Nobility, Clergy, and Commons, then Assembled in Parliament, by Popish Treachery appointed as Sheep to the Slaughter. These are the Words of that Prayer: Will Dr. A. please to tell us, who were the Clergy then Assembled in Parliament? The Convocations were not to meet, till the next Day: The Convocation-Clergy therefore could not be the Clergy whom the Papists design'd to have blown up. And one part of them at least, those of York, would have been far enough off from the Danger, had they met the Day before.

But who then were the Clergy here spoken of? Let the Act of Parliament inform him. An Act upon the Expressions of which this Prayer was compos'd, and whose Sense therefore we may be sure it designed to deliver. He will there find the Clergy to have been the Lords Spiritual; who alone of all that State were wont to be Assembled in Parliament, and therefore could alone have been intended to have been destroy'd with it.

And now, let any indifferent Person consider how weak the Reasoning, how ridiculous the Insolence of this vain Writer upon this Occasion, must appear? If (says he) They, the Clergy, were then rightly said to be Assembled in Parliament, they may as rightly be said to be so Assembled still. And if Assembled in Parliament, why not a Member of Parliament? To those Intents and Purposes I mean for which They were assembled in it. Dr. W. will be pleased to answer this Question at his leisure.

sure. The Answer is not difficult: A very little Leisure will suffice to give it. K. JAMES
the 1st.
The Clergy spoken of in that Prayer, were not, as Dr. A. represents it, the Clergy of the Realm, but the State of the Clergy summon'd by the King's Writ to Parliament. Of these, the Bishops alone at that time (as for many Reigns before) came Actually to Parliament. Now that these are rightly said to be Assembled in Parliament, and to be a Member of Parliament, Dr. W. acknowledges: But that they are either summon'd to that Council by their Convocation-Mandates; or are in the same respect Members of the One, in which they are, and always have been, Members of the Other, He utterly denies; and desires Dr. A. at his leisure to prove it, if he knows how.

But Dr. A. proceeds; "Dr. W. will be pleased to Answer this Question at his leisure, and withal to inform us, whether among his late Meditations on that Day, this had not been a proper One. He would have had me, I suppose, have enlarged the Thanksgiving; and have shewn how the Prolocutor and Clergy which should have met at Pauls and York the 6th of November, were wonderfully preserved from being blown up at Westminster, with the Lords and Commons, on the 5th.

Let us hear how he concludes this Glorious Argument: "His Function may be some Excuse for his being a Stranger to the Language of the Statute-Book; but not to have so much Law as his Common-Prayer Book would have furnish'd him with, is, let me tell him, Inexcusable. Were it not too great a Presumption for me to pretend to TELL Dr. A. any thing, I would take the Liberty to TELL him in my turn, That had he been better acquainted with the Language of the Statute-Book, he would have forbore mentioning such impertinent Stuff as this out of his Common-Prayer-Book; and by so doing, have omitted a Reflection that I doubt, in the end, will be found to wound himself much more than it can do me.

Why Dr. A. refers these Words to that Office, as set out at the Restauration of King Charles the II<sup>d</sup>, I can no more divine, than why he quoted the second Collect, for a Passage which has stood almost these Hundred Years only in the first. The Passage to which he refers, was put into the first Form of Prayer for that Day, in the time of King James the First. It received no Alteration in either of the King Charles's Reigns. It continued the same under King James the Second: And notwithstanding all the Innovations under his late Majesty, remains just as it was to this very Day.

To return now to the Parliament which was appointed to meet by Prorogation, November the 18th, Anno 1606. It sate from thence to the 4th of July the next Year; and was then prorogued to the 16th of November after. With this Parliament the Convocation of our Province resum'd its Sessions, but did very little for the first half of their time. On February the 27th, the Archbishop brought in again the Book which he had deliver'd to be consider'd of the last Year: And it appears by the Subscription and Certificate of the Prolocutor, that it was twice read over, and approved of in the Lower House. Before the Convocation of the other Province could come together, there was an Archbishop made; and so a New Writ issued out to him for the holding of his Convocation, prorogued, as has been said, to the 19th of November before. In pursuance hereof that Synod was again resum'd, November the 29th, Eleven Days after the Parliament sate. From thenceforth, to the 10th of April, it was only prorogued without doing, or proposing any Synodical Business. On Friday the 10th of April, the King's Letters Patents were Open'd, and Read in Convocation; by which they were again empower'd to enter upon Business, as they had been in their last Assembly. What they did by Authority hereof, their Acts say not. If the Subscription in Dr. Overal's Convocation-Book, p. 92, may be depended upon, we must then conclude that it was read so far in this Convocation. But the Number appearing being exceeding small, (not above five or six) and only one part of the Book perused, I presume it was design'd to be again more fully and thoroughly Examined at some other Meeting; and so no Entry was made in the Acts of what that little Assembly had done in this Matter. By the King's Writ, dated July the 6th, two Days after the Rising of the Parliament, this Convocation should have been prorogued. But this Writ came not till late to York; for after this, they Assembled twice, on the 10th and 20th of that Month; and then were prorogued to the 17th of November, a Fortnight after the Parliament had been dismiss'd.

K. JAMES
the 1st.

It would be needless to pursue the several Continuations that were from thenceforth made of all these Great Assemblies. The fourth Session of this Parliament began, February the 9th 1609, and Continued till the 23<sup>d</sup> of July the next year. With this Session of Parliament the Meeting of Our Convocation was exactly Concurrent. I cannot say that nothing at all was done in it; because I find, in One Session, a Conference of the two Houses (occasioned by some Motions in the Lower House of Parliament) about Pluralities; and in another, Mr. Crashaw Convened before the Archbishop in the Upper House, for publishing an Erroneous Book. But these are All the Instances of any moment that my Enquiries furnish me withal. Dr. A. who has such exact Extracts of all these Convocations will be able better to account for the rest; if any thing that is material was done by them.

The Synod of the Other Province began the same day that our Convocation did. But it began to no other Purpose, but to be told when it should meet again. For excepting only the Business of the Subsidy (which we are not now to consider) this Assembly did not so much as propound any Business; or do any thing more than continue its Sessions from time to time, till the 3<sup>d</sup> of August, ten days after the Parliament was risen; when it was prorogued by the King's Writ to the 17th of October following.

On the 16th of October the last Session of this Parliament began; It continued till the of December; and was then Prorogued to the 9th of February, and so Dissolv'd. With this Session, our Convocation met again: If it did any Business 'tis more than I know; and I must leave it to Dr. A. to inform us what it was. All I can add is, that being prorogued with the Parliament to February the 11th, it was also Dissolv'd, two days after that Great Council. The Convocation of York, made large Sessions, and did no Business. From October the 17th it was prorogued to November the 9th, thence to December the first. From the 1st it was continued to the 20th of the same Month: Then to the 19th of February; and so was Dissolv'd, ten days after the Parliament had been concluded.

Sect. 90.

The next Parliament of this Reign began upon the 5th of April, 1614. It sate till the 7th of June, and so was Dissolv'd. On the 6th of the same April our Convocation met. In the Upper House one Griffin was Arraign'd of horrid Blasphemies; Submitted, and Recanted. This is all that I know was done in that House: Of any thing at all done in the Lower, I have hitherto met with no Information. But yet less than this, I mean nothing at all, was done in the Other Convocation; which being met, April the 6th, was prorogued to the 11th of May, thence to the 8th of June; so to the 15th of the same Month: At which time, being eight days after the Dissolution of the Parliament, that Assembly was in the like manner Dissolv'd.

From henceforth we meet with no more Parliaments till the End of 1620; when another began, after two short Prorogations, January the 30th, and sate till the 14th of June, 1621. It was then Adjourn'd to November the 14th; and from thence to the 20th of the same Month. Then it sate again till the 19th of December; from whence being again Adjourn'd to February the 8th, it was Dissolv'd. With this Parliament, the Convocation of Canterbury met, January the 31st. In One of its Sessions the Lower House exhibited a Schedule to the Upper of the Neglecters of the Canons of 1604: Besides which I can find but little that was done in either. Dr. A. therefore, who is the best able, must from his Extracts supply this Defect; and shew what this Assembly did, if it did any thing, more than Meet, and be prorogued. In the Province of York, the Convocation met now, as in former Years it had been wont to do; I mean, only to be Prorogued; and, when the time came, to grant its Subsidy; and so be again prorogued on as before. It began the same Day with ours, January the 31st. From thence it was continued to February the 21st; then to March the 14th. In the next Session, March the 23<sup>d</sup>, the Subsidy was Agreed to: After which we have a few distant Prorogations, to March the 28th, April the 18th, May the 16th, June the 6th, and June the 11th; On which Day, being a Week after the Rising of the Parliament, it was prorogued to the 15th of November, 1621. On the 21st of that Month, it met again with the Parliament: But it met only to be Continued; as accordingly it was to the 12th first, then to the 20th of December: From thence to the 9th, and lastly, to the 27th of February; at which time, being almost three Weeks after the Dissolution of the Parliament, this Synod was was also ended. In the former of these Sessions, the Subsidy was granted, and the Proctor's Wages order'd; but nothing else done: In the latter, nothing at all was either debated, or concluded upon.

The last Parliament of King James the 1st was order'd to be held at Westminster, February the 12th, 1623; but was Adjourn'd by Commission to the 16th, and then again prorogued to the 19th of the same Month. From thence it sate till May the 29th, 1624, and so was prorogued to the 2<sup>d</sup> of November following. This was the only Session of it, for in November it was again prorogued to February the 16th, and so to April the 20th; before which time the King dying, the Parliament was thereby dissolv'd.

With this Parliament the Convocation, of our Province sate February the 20th, 1623. Whether any Convocational Act (that of their Subsidy excepted) was done by the Clergy at this time I cannot tell; I can only say, that hitherto I have not met with any. In the 4th Session, March the 10th, a Complaint was made to the Archbishop by the Colledge of Physicians, against Ministers Exercising Physick, and a Declaration made by his Grace thereupon, that they should not do it, but only in their own Parishes, and that for Charity. And in another Session, a petitionary Letter was sent to the Lord Keeper to supersede a Subpena serv'd upon the Archdeacon of Norfolk, by reason of his Privilege of Convocation: But other Business besides this, I know not of any that was done by them.

The Province of York, which met at the same time, did yet less. For excepting two Protections granted to Persons belonging to their Body, and the Subsidy, with which we are not now concern'd; All the rest were only Prorogations from time to time; without any Attempt of, or Motion made to enter upon, Business. The Parliament was prorogued, as I have before observ'd, May the 29th: But this Convocation nevertheless sate on till June the 15th. And thought its self never the less a Legal Assembly, because the Other was risen.

I should here have clos'd up the History of this Reign; but that Dr. A. has advanced an Argument of a singular Nature from the Warrant for Summoning of this Parliament, and these Convocations, to shew, that Custom has made these Great Assemblies necessarily concurrent in point of Time with one another. His Words are these: "The very Warrant to the Keeper of the Great Seal Rights, &c. p. 68, 69. for issuing out Writs for a Parliament, is a standing Testimony against these "New Notions. It ran thus in King James the First's Time; and, I suppose, "runs so still.

These are to Will and Require you forthwith upon Receipt hereof to issue forth our Writs of Summons to all the Peers of our Kingdom; and also all other Usual Writs for the electing of such Knights, Citizens, and Burgeesses, as are to serve therein; and withal to issue out all Usual Writs for the Summoning of the Clergy of Both Provinces in their Houses of Convocation. And this shall be your Warrant so to do.

Bishop Hacket's Copy.

James Rex.

Trusty and well-beloved Councillor we greet you well. Whereas we are resolved to hold a Parliament at our Palace of Westminster the 12th Day of Febr. next ensuing. These are to Will and Require you forthwith, upon the Receipt hereof, to issue forth our Writs of Summons, to all the Peers of our Kingdom: And also all other Usual Writs for the Electing of such Knights, Citizens, and Burgeesses, as are to serve therein. And withal to issue out All Usual Writs for the Summoning of the Clergy of Both Provinces in their Houses of Convocation. And this shall be your Warrant so to Do. Dated at our Palace of Whitehall in Westminster, this 28 Decem. 1623.

"So that the Writs for the Convocations are, it seems, as Usual as those "for the Commons; and the One Assembly therefore is as Customary as the "Other.

This is Dr. A's Argument; and the Conclusion which one would think should naturally have follow'd from it, is this: In 1623, King James by the same Warrant order'd the Lord Keeper to issue out Writs for the Parliament and Convocations to meet about the same time; And therefore that Parliament, and those Convocations, were Concurrent in their Sessions one with another. But Dr. A. is here, as in most other Places, above the Common Laws of Argumentation. His Conclusions are General, tho' his Premises be not so much as Particular, but only Singular: And therefore 'tis enough for him that King James once order'd the

the Parliament and Convocations to be called at the same time, to warrant this Deduction; that therefore, it was the constant Custom for all other Kings, and for this Prince at all other Times, to do likewise.

But to examine this Argument a little more Carefully: "The very Warrant to the Keeper of the Great Seal for Issuing out Writs for a Parliament, is a standing Testimony against these New Notions. I allow it, supposing the Form of that Warrant were a standing Form, settled by Common, or Statute Law; and as constantly held to as the Legal Writs in the Register, and our Courts of Judicature, are. But in a Warrant out of the Secretary's Office, in a Matter that depends intirely upon the King's present Will, and Direction; and may be varied with every Parliament; the Argument will hold no farther, than to that one Instance from which it is fetch'd, and therefore ought not to be brought into any other Consequence. He proceeds;

"It ran thus in K. James's time, and I suppose runs so still. That it ran thus for that Parliament, I agree: The Copy, which I doubt not was taken from the Original Warrant, shews it. But this is no Proof that it ran in the like Form always. That the Case was otherwise in Queen Elizabeth's time, we have the Witness of an Honourable and Curious Enquirer into these Matters. He gives us the Common Form which was then used; and in that there is not one Word of the Convocation, or its Assembling. Let us take it in the Terms in which he has represented it to us.

D'Ewes Journ.
p. 2.

"Elizabeth, by the Grace of God, Queen of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To our Right Trusty and Right Well-beloved Nicholas Bacon Knight, Lord Keeper of our Great Seal of England, Greeting.

"Whereas We by our Council, for certain great and urgent Causes concerning Us, the Good Estate and Common-wealth of this our Realm; and of the Church of England, and for the good Order and Continuance of the same, have appointed and ordain'd a Parliament to be holden at our City of Westminster, the first Day of April next coming, in which Case divers and fundry Writs are to be directed forth under our Great Seal of England, as well for the Prelates, Bishops, and Nobility of this our Realm, as also for the Election of Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses of the several Counties, Cities, and Boroughs, Towns of the same, to be present at the said Parliament at the Day and Place aforesaid.

"Whereupon we Will and Command you forthwith, upon the Receipt hereof, and by Warrant of the same, to cause such and so many Writs to be made and sealed under our Great Seal for the accomplishing of the same, as in like Cases hath been heretofore used and accustomed. And this Bill signed with our Own Hand, shall be as well unto you, as to every such Clerk and Clerks as shall make and pass the same, a sufficient Warrant or Discharge in that Behalf given.

But Dr. A. proceeds; and because the King having first order'd Writs to be issued out for Assembling the Parliament, adds, (not only after a FULL STOP, but with an Introduction that manifestly severs the One from the Other)

"AND WITHAL TO ISSUE OUT all Usual Writs for the Summoning of the Clergy of Both Provinces in their Houses of Convocation, Concludes in this manner; So that the Writs for a Convocation, are it seems as Usual as those for the Commons. He is in the Right: The King's Provincial Writs to the Archbishops for Summoning their Convocation, are as stated, and settled, as those to the Sheriffs for summoning the Commons. But this is not his Meaning, nor will it answer his End: His Inference is of another kind, and has a farther Reach in it. "So that the Writs for a Convocation are it seems as Usual as those for the Commons, and the One Assembly therefore is as Customary as the Other. That is to say; Because King James here Ordered the Usual Writs for the Convocations to be issued out in the same Warrant in which he Ordered the Usual Writs to be issued out for summoning the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses to Parliament; therefore whenever a Parliament is called, the Convocation-Writs have as Constantly and Customarily been issued out, as the Writs for Electing of Knights, Citizens and Burgeses.

Dr. A. must excuse me if I cannot comprehend the Consequence of this, tho' I am not so dull as not to see through the Artifice of it. In the Original Warrant,

Warrant, publish'd by Bishop Hacket, the King having declared his Resolution K. JAMES
the 1st. to hold his Parliament, first Wills and Requires the Keeper of his Great Seal to issue out Writs of Summons to All the Peers: There is a half Stop. After which he proceeds to the Other Writs which are requisite to Compleat that Assembly; AND ALSO all other Usual Writs, for Electing of such Knights, Citizens and Burgesses, as are to serve THEREIN; Therein, that is, in the Parliament, before mentioned. Having thus provided for the Summoning of all the Members of Parliament; In the last place, after a Full Point, follows a farther Order for Writs to Call the two Convocations to sit about the same time with it. AND WITHAL TO ISSUE OUT (the Words are repeated, to shew that here a New Order began) And withal to issue out all Usual Writs for the Summoning of the Clergy of Both Provinces in their Houses of Convocation: That is to say, the two Usual Provincial Writs to the two Archbishops for that Purpose. Thus both the Words, and the Pointing of the Warrant, evidently bespeak the King's Meaning in it. To confound it therefore, as much as was possible, Dr. A. changes all the Stops of it. He puts the whole together within one Full Period, as if they were all alike relating to one and the same thing: And then Descanting upon, or rather Equivocating with, the word Usual, strains the Whole to this forced Construction; That the Lord Keeper should issue out Writs, as USUAL, for the Convocations to sit together with the Parliament; and so most logically infers from this single, and corrupted Instance, that it was the Constant Usage to Call the One, whenever the Other was Summon'd.

The Ingenuity of this kind of dealing with Public Instruments, I must leave to Others to judge of: It shall suffice me to add yet one later Instance more to shew the Weakness of it; and that even this form, as little as it makes for him, was yet by no means any Stated or Constant Form, of this Warrant, for the Calling of these Assemblies.

On the 24th of January, 1673, King Charles the II<sup>d</sup> in Council order'd a Parliament to be summon'd to sit at Westminster the 6th of March following. It was the 5th of February before any thing was resolved upon, with relation to the Convocations; the Writs for Summoning which were not agreed upon, till eleven or twelve Days after those for the Parliament had been actually sealed and sent abroad. The time was very short, and the Archbishop of Canterbury thought he could not receive his Writ, and issue out his Mandate thereupon to the Bishop of London, and have the other necessary Mandates dispatch'd into all the Parts of his Province, so soon as the King designed; and therefore he desired, that the Time for the Convocations Meeting might be enlarged. Accordingly at another Council held March the 3d, (but three Days before the Parliament met) an Order was made for the Convocation to meet upon the 3d of April following: And the Archbishop's Mandate for it bears date the 6th of March, the very Day that the Parliament sate.

As for the Other Province, the Writ for dissolving the preceding Convocation was not dated till the 12th of February, 19 Days after the Writs were Order'd for the New Parliament. Which being so, I shall leave it to Dr. A. to judge whether the King's Warrant to the Lord Chancellor for the Calling of that Parliament, could have any such Clause in it for the Convocations, as that upon which he here builds: Or by Consequence, whether this can be any such standing Form as he represents it to have been; which neither was wont to be made use of in the Reign before, and we are sure has fail'd, perhaps very often, in those which followed after.

King CHARLES the First.

No sooner was King Charles the 1st come to the Crown, but he immediately Summon'd his Parliament to meet at Westminster, May the 17th. It sate not till the 18th of June following: Thence it continued till July the 11th; when it was Adjourn'd to Oxford, August the 1st; and there Dissolv'd, upon the 12th of the same Month.

St. 9:7

With this Parliament the Convocation of our Province sate in both Places. At London, from June the 20th to July the 12th: At Oxford, from the 2d of August to the 13th; when it was also Dissolv'd. Yet in both these Sessions I cannot find that it did any thing more than give its Subsidies; for the rest, it was prorogued from time to time, till it was finally concluded.

The Convocation at York was Open'd in form, May the 18th, notwithstanding the Prorogation of the Parliament to the End of that Month. From thence we meet with a few distant Prorogations, but nothing done, till July the 21st. Then the Subsidies were granted, tho' the Parliament had been Adjourn'd on the 11th of that Month, to meet at Oxford, August the 1st. How long it sate after this I cannot tell: The Acts only mention another Prorogation to August the 4th; and so leave us without any farther Prosecution of this Assembly; which either met no more, or only in order to its being prorogued, or dissolv'd.

On Monday, February the 6th, this same Year, a second Parliament Assembled; and was Dissolv'd the 15th of June following. 'Dr. A. has observed how in the last Parliament of King James the 1st, the Premunientes Clause was executed by the Bishop of Litchfield. The same was now done by the Bishop of Norwich: And that we may the better know with what Design these Writs, about this time, were again begun to be put in execution, an Author, who pretends to have been well acquainted with this Affair, gives us this Account of it. There were some about the King who had Represented to him, that it would be for the Service of the Crown, as well as for the Honour and Interest of the Church, to support the Parliamentary Rights of the Clergy, and to bring them again into a Closer Union with the Lay-Commons in that Great Council. This Design thus set on foot, as I conceive, towards the latter end of the foregoing Reign, King Charles the 1st was Easily perswaded to countenance and further all he could in his. But the Difficulties which he met with put a Stop to his Designs; and the long Interruptions of Parliaments which follow'd after, and the troublesome State of Affairs when those of 1640 met, hindred him from doing any thing more in it.

This Parliament was summon'd to meet at Westminster, February the 6th: Our Convocation began at St. Pauls London, the next Day, February the 7th; and was Continued from time to time till June the 16th. I know not of any Business that it did in all this time, or that it met for any thing besides Matters of Form; not so much as a Subsidy being granted by it. In the Province of York a Question was mov'd, Whether any One would Constitute any Person his Proxy in the Convocation, who was not a Member of the Convocation; so that by vertue of such a Substitution, he should become a Member of it? And it was resolv'd in the Negative. But this one thing excepted, the Assembly was continued by distant Prorogations, from the 8th of February to the 28th of June, (almost a Fortnight after the Parliament had been Dissolv'd) without doing any Business; and then by vertue of the King's Writ, that also was ended.

The next Parliament of this Reign began March the 17th, 1627. It sate till the 26th of June, 1628; and was then prorogued to the 20th of October following. From the 20th of October it was farther Continued till the 20th of January next ensuing: Then it sate till February the 25th; from whence being Adjourn'd first to the 2d, and then to the 11th of March, it was Dissolv'd.

On the 18th of March, the Day after the Parliament, the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury Assembled. In the former of its Sessions, a Grant was made of Five Subsidies to the King; nothing else, that I know of, done. If any thing at all were done in the Latter, it is more than I have yet met with; and I have some Reason to think that nothing was done.

About the beginning of the Convocation of the Other Province the Archbishop died; yet the Guardians of the Spiritualities went on with it; and on May the 19th, being their second Session, they granted the like Subsidies that our Prelates and Clergy before had done. From thence they were prorogued to the 5th of June, and 11th of July. The Parliament had been prorogued almost a Fortnight before this last Session; yet they met, and were continued to the 20th of October following.

The Parliament began its Second Session, January the 20th: But the Convocation of this Province met not till the 10th of February, almost three Weeks after. Its first Prorogation was till the 26th of the same Month, the Day after the Parliament was Adjourn'd. Its next was to Wednesday, March the 18th, eight Days after the State Council was Dissolv'd: And it was yet later, viz. March the 22d, before this Convocation was ended; tho' the other had been concluded almost a Fortnight before. So that in short then, this Convocation met three Weeks after the Parliament began; Sate but once with it, and was not Dissolved till about a Fortnight after it.

Such

Such was the State of the Three first Convocations of this Reign : We must now make a large Step forward to the troublesome Assemblies of the Year 1640 : The first Parliament of which met April the 13th, and was dissolved the 5th of May after. The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury met by Authority of the King's Writ the next Day, April the 14th. On Friday the 17th, the King's Letters Patents were exhibited to it, by vertue whereof the Bishops and Clergy were impower'd to make Canons and Constitutions : But these being limited to the Time of the Parliament, and that Dissolved May the 5th, on the 13th of May a New Commission was granted ; by Authority whereof, they went on with the Business both of Canons and Subsidies, till the 29th of the same Month ; when the Convocation was by Writ Dissolv'd.

K. CHARLES
the 1st.
Sect. 94.
1640.

The Convocation of the Province of York, began the same day that the Other of Canterbury was Open'd. On the 5th of May the King's Letters Patents of Licence for them to make Canons, during the Continuance of the Parliament, were exhibited to them. But the Parliament was Dissolv'd the same day, and so the Letters, in effect, Out-dated before they were read. To remedy this, Others, dated the 20th of the same Month, were sent to them ; by Vertue whereof, they proceeded in their Business till about the 26th of June, and so were Dissolv'd, a Month after the Convocation of the Other Province had been Ended.

How great a Contention the Proceedings of these Convocations raised in those days, the Histories of that unhappy time will not suffer Us to be Ignorant. Dr. A. whose Diligence has not been wanting to catch at every the least Shadow of an Argument that may but seem to favour his Cause, has made his Advantage of it. He tells us that the Parliament which met not long after, Voted these Canons Illegal, CHIEFLY on this Head, because they were made in an Assembly, which tho' it met by the Parliament Writ, yet sate and acted after the Parliament was determin'd. I will not now enquire of Dr. A. How the two Convocations call'd by the Mandates of their Respective Archbishops, by vertue of the King's Provincial Writs, directed to Them purposely for that End ; could possibly be understood, in Law, to have met by Vertue of the Parliament Writ, which is of another kind, and relates to another, and quite different Assembly. I have sufficiently shewn the falseness of that Principle already. The Point which I must now take the Liberty to differ from him in, is, the particular matter of Fact relating to their Canons. He affirms that the Parliament Voted them to be Illegal CHIEFLY upon this Head, because they were made in an Assembly, which tho' it met by the Parliament Writ, yet Sate and Acted after the Parliament was determin'd. On the contrary I assert, that this was only a popular Exception, made use of indeed by some of the Warmer Members in their Invectives against them ; but never taken notice of by the House of Commons as any Ground at all of their Exception, much less insisted upon as the CHIEF HEAD upon which they VOTED Them to be Illegal. Let us see which of us are in the Right in this particular.

Rights, &c.
p. 67.

The first Resolutions which the House came to against these Canons, were on Tuesday December the 15th ; and those were to this effect.

K. CHARLES
the 1st.

Resolv'd upon the Question, Nullo Contradicente.

" That these Canons and Constitutions Ecclesiastical, treated upon by the " Archbishops of Canterbury and York, Presidents of the Convocations for " the Respective Provinces of Canterbury and York; and agreed upon with " the King's Majesty's Licence in their several Synods, begun at London
" and York in the Year 1640, do contain in them many Matters contrary " to the King's Prerogative; to the Fundamental Laws and Statutes of " the Realm; to the Right of Parliament; to the Property and Liberty " of the Subjects; and Matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Con" sequence.

Such were the Resolutions of the House in this Case; and in them we see what the CHIEF HEADS were, upon which they Rejected those Canons. That they condemn'd them not because they were made by the Convocation after the Parliament was Dissolved; that was so far from being one of their CHIEF HEADS, that it is not mention'd as any Ground at all of what they did: No, but for much Greater and more solid Reasons, supposing they had been in the Right. 1st. Because the Clergy had no Power, in ANY Convocation or Synod, to make ANY Canons, &c. to bind either the Clergy or Laity, without the Consent of Parliament. And, 2<sup>dly</sup>. That the Canons which they had made, contained Matters in them contrary to the King's Prerogative, &c. and matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Consequence.

It was but three days before the Passing of these Votes, while this Matter was actually under debate, that the Lord Keeper Finch was Voted a Traytor by them, and impeach'd before the Lords as such. They charged Him * with per-
" swading the Judges to deliver their Opinions for the Levying of Ship-mony:
" * For Illegal Actions in Forrest-Matters: * For Ill Offices done in making the " King to Dissolve the Last Parliament; ( that very Parliament with which the Convocation we are now speaking of Met, and if we will believe Dr. A. should have Ended; ) " and Causing his Declaration thereupon to be put forth. Had that House thought the Continuance of the Convocation after the Rising of the Parliament, to have been so contrary to the Fundamental Law and Rule of our Constitution, as this Author now pretends that it did; How came it to pass that they took no Notice of his Encouraging the King and Clergy in so Illegal an Action? He sealed the King's Licence; He subscribed his Opinion for their sitting on: ' It was upon his Authority especially, that they did Sit and Act; And yet in impeaching this very Man, the House took no manner of Notice of it, nor drew up any Article against him for what He did in it.

* Wharton's Life of AB.
Laud. p. 79,
80.

When about two Months after, they impeach'd Archbishop Laud of High-Treason, and made these very Canons One of their Articles against Him; Did they Alledge their being pass'd after the Parliament was Dissolv'd? Was this the CHIEF HEAD of their Complaint against them? Or, indeed, was it at all mentioned as any Fault at all. Let the Words of their Impeachment, in this Particular, determine betwixt Us.

Ibid. p. 154.

" 5. He hath traiterously caused a Book of Canons to be Compos'd and Pub" lished, and those Canons to be put in Execution, without any Lawful Warrant " and Authority in that behalf. Their Meaning is, that he ought not to have done it without the Consent of Parliament; as they had before declared in their first Question against them. " In which pretended Canons many Mat" ters are contain'd contrary to the King's Prerogative, &c. Many of the which " Canons by the practice of the said Archbishop, were surreptitiously pass'd in the " last Convocation, without due Consideration and Debate: Others by Fear and " Compulsion were subscribed to by the Prelates and Clerks there Assembled,
" which had never been Voted, and Pass'd in the Convocation, as they ought to " have been. And the said Archbishop hath Contrived and Endeavour'd, " to Assure and Confirm the Unlawful and Exorbitant Power which he hath " Usurped and Exercised over his Majesties Subjects, by a Wicked and Un-
" godly Oath, in one of the said pretended Canons, &c.

Ibid.

In Answer to this Article, the Bishop asserted the Authority by which these Canons were published, and put in Execution. He vindicated the Matters contain'd in them: He justified the Freedom and Method of their passing. But for the Lawfulness of the Convocations sitting and acting after the Parliament was Dis-

Dissolved, He said not a Word. He was not impeach'd upon that HEAD, and K. CHARLES<sup>3</sup> therefore needed not to make any Defence in that particular.

When Mr. Nicholas came to prosecute his Impeachment upon this Article, <sup>the 1st.</sup> lb. p. 282. He made his Entry, indeed, upon it with this Pretence, that it was against Law for the Convocation to Sit, the Parliament being Dissolved. But so he did with several Others which yet were far from making any Part of his Real Crimes: As it is but too Usual in such kind of Causes, to Aggravate Matters against Those whom they Prosecute, by any Topics that may be likely to move their Judges to Condemn Them. But then, that this was All he intended by it, his Own Words shew; where leaving these Preliminaries, He tells the Lords, that "He would pass these things by, and charge nothing upon him but the Votes of Both Houses, that those Canons contain'd Matters contrary to the King's Prerogative, &c. A plain Proof that the Sitting of the Convocation after the Parliament was dissolv'd, was not only not the CHIEF HEAD on which the Parliament Voted them to be Illegal, but was indeed, none of their Reasons at all.

However, since Dr. A. has endeavour'd to insinuate as if the Judges themselves had in some Measure Prevaricated, and not given a Clear Opinion in this Case; let us hear how the Archbishop (who best knew their meaning) defended himself against this Insinuation, "That it was against Law for the Convocation to Sit, The Parliament being Dissolv'd. No my Lords, said he, nothing against Law that I know. For we were Call'd to Sit in Convocation by a Different Writ from That which Called us, as Bishops, to the Parliament. And we could not Rise till his Majesty sent Us another Writ to discharge us; and this is well known to the Judges, and the Other Lawyers here Present: So we continued Sitting tho' the Parliament Rose. Nor was this sitting continued by any Advice or Desire of Mine. For I humbly desired a Writ to Dissolve us. But the best Council then Present, both of Judges, and Other Lawyers, assured the King we might Legally Sit: And here is a Copy attested under their Hands.

But I insist too long upon this Instance, tho' the most Pertinent and Popular of any he has yet brought in Proof of his Assertion. The sum of all is this; Some of the Warmer Members in their Speeches did inveigh against the Canons for this Reason, among others, that they were made by the Convocation after the Parliament was Dissolv'd. But that it was ever agreed to as the Resolution of either House, much less that it was upon this HEAD CHIEFLY, that they Voted these Canons to be Illegal, I do absolutely deny: And must desire Dr. A. either to shew upon what Authority he Affirm'd this; Or to leave the World to Conclude, that he had none; but wrote it purely to serve a turn, and give some Colour to an Assertion as false in its self, as it is contrary at once, both to the Prerogative of the Crown, and to the Rights and Liberty of the Church.

To proceed now to the Remainder of this Reign: On the 3<sup>d</sup> of November, the same Year, another Parliament began, which is all I shall need to say of it. To look to its End would be both ungrateful in its self, and of little Use to our present Purpose. With this Parliament, the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury met, November the 4th. By the Acts which remain of both Houses, it appears, that they met from time to time, and determin'd some points of Form as to Elections, &c. but did nothing more. The times were now very difficult, and the Bishops and Clergy under great Dangers, and worser Apprehensions. In this state the Bishops seem to have Assembled till towards Christmas: But the Clergy who were not under the same Difficulties, met a Month after; till at last, about the beginning of February, They both brake off their Assembling.

The Convocation of York was Summon'd to begin the same day that the Other of Canterbury had been. But before that day came, the Archbishop died, and their Meeting thereby was prevented. To remedy this Defect, on the 11th of December another Writ was issued out to the Guardian of the Spiritualities, to Assemble the Convocation of that Province with all convenient Speed. Upon this second Writ, a new Day was prefixed for its Meeting, January the 4th: But before that day came, the Publick Disorders were such, and their Discouragements so great, that, I suppose they never met at all. This at least is certain, that no Notice is taken, in their Convocation Books, of any Assembly that follow'd upon it.

the II<sup>d</sup>.

King CHARLES the II<sup>d</sup>.

1660.

Here therefore we must close up the Unfortunate Reign of that Excellent Prince, King Charles the Ist: On the 25th of April 1660, began that Convention which Restored his Son King Charles the II<sup>d</sup> to the Throne. It continued under that Prince (being by his Assent, and an Act made therewith, declar'd to be the Lawful Parliament of this Realm) till the 29th of December following. But the Disorders into which the Church had fallen during the Confusions of that fatal Civil War, were too great, to be presently remedied: Nor could things therefore be so ordered, as to have any Convocation fit with it.

On the 8th of May, the next Year, another Parliament Assembled, which by several Prorogations, continued till the 24th of January, 1678. Upon the very same day, the Long Convocation began, which sate with it, and was Dissolv'd about Three Weeks after it. During the two first Sessions of this Convocation there was much Business to be done; and the Bishops and Clergy were accordingly employ'd with Great Diligeuce about it. How they proceeded in it, as far as concerns the Province of Canterbury, the Acts of that Convocation, now Printed at large, may abundantly suffice to shew. As for the Part which the Province of York had in these Matters, it is but little understood; and for that Reason, as also because it is so considerable a Piece of Our Church History, I have put into the Appendix the whole Process of it. The latter of these two buisy Sessions Ended with the Parliament, July the 27th, 1663. From thence till the Dissolution of the Parliament there were about (xv) Other Sessions; and almost as many of the Convocation. But the Clergy, from thenceforth, Met only for forms sake; to be told (as Dr. A. has phras'd it) when they should Meet again: For after this I find no Synodical Business done; nor scarce the mention of any that was moved in either House. In short, except three things, of no great Moment; namely a Committee appointed to inspect a new Grammar, May the 4th, 1664; A like Order about a Latin Prayer-Book, May the 18th, and a Petition agreed to be made to the King for a Patent on behalf of Dr. Dupont, to have the sole Liberty of Printing his Greek Translation of the Psalms for seven Years, October the 11th, 1667; I do not know whether so much as a Motion was made of any Matter; Or the least thing done, but only to meet, and be prorogued; and Chuse another Prolocutor, when the old One Died, or was Promoted; the Grand Affairs of the Synod of this Province for above xv Years together. And yet even in this State it did not always attend upon the Parliament neither: For in 1665, That Great Council sate at Oxford from the 9th of October to the End of that Month: But the Convocation was prorogued from the 2<sup>d</sup> of August, to the 26th of January; and met not for above two Months before, nor almost Three Months after the end of that Session of Parliament. The same was, in effect, the Case of this Convocation about two Years after. The Parliament was by Proclamation order'd to meet July the 15th, 1667: It met, and was adjourn'd by the Kings command to the 29th of the same Month; when a Peace being concluded, it was Prorogued to the 10th of October, to which it had been prorogued at the End of the Session before. But the Convocation was not Summon'd at either of Those days; nor did it at all Assemble when the Other Council met. I might mention several other the like Disagreements in the Sessions of that Parliament and that Convocation: But I shall take notice of the chiefest of them in the Table which I shall subjoyn to the End of this Chapter; and not insist any longer upon them in this Place.

If the Convocation of Canterbury did so little, I shall not need to say that that of York did yet less; that is, did nothing at all. They met and were Prorogued; (a thing which Dr. A. makes such a grievous Complaint about, as if it had never been heard of till the last Reign) but that was all: No Business beyond Matters of necessary form being once Done, or so much as Attempted by them.

The long Parliament of King Charles being Dissolv'd January the 24th, 1678, another was Call'd to Sit at Westminster upon the 6th of March following. With this Parliament the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury was Summon'd; but it was Summon'd but two days before that State Council was to to meet: And the day appointed for its Assembling, was not till the 3<sup>d</sup> of April, a Month after the Parliament began. It was continued from time to time till the 15th of August, 1679: And was so far from doing any Business, that the formal Part of Chusing a Prolocutor, and Opening the Session, which had hitherto been constantly observed in this Province, was not Regarded.

the 1st.

The Case was the same in the Other Province, only the Concurrence with the Parliament was still less. It sate not till the 3<sup>d</sup> of May 1679: After which it was Prorogued from time to time without doing any thing till Monday, August the 25th, and then was Dissolved.

On the 17th of October the the same Year, another Parliament was Summon'd to Meet at Westminster; but was by several Prorogations continued till the 21st of October, 1680. It then assembled and sate till the 10th of January next following, and then was prorogued to the 20th of the same Month; when it was Dissolved. The next Day after the Parliament, both the Convocations were Assembled. That of our Province was by several Prorogations Continued till the 21st of January, 1680; but did no manner of Business. That of the Other Province was in like manner Prorogued till the 2<sup>d</sup> of December, 1680; after which, we find no Entries at all in their Books, till the End of this, and of the next Reign. However, even that alone may suffice to Assure us of the little that was done; and that if they ever met at all, it was only for Forms sake, and to prorogue to another Meeting.

There was yet one Parliament more Assembled in this Reign, at Oxford, March the 21st, 1680: It sate but One Week, being Dissolved the 28th of the same Month. The Convocation of our Province was order'd to meet, not at Oxford, but at St. Paul's, London, March the 22<sup>d</sup>. It was the same Day prorogued to the 6th of April, nine Days after the Dissolution of the Parliament; and then by a Writ of the same Date it was Dissolved.

1681.

King JAMES the Second.

And now we have but One Parliament more to bring us to the End of this long and tedious Deduction: It is that of King James the 1st, which began May the 19th, 1685, and sate till the 2<sup>d</sup> of July following. It resumed its Session the 9th of November, and continued to the 20th of December: After which it was prorogued from one time to another till the of July, 1687, and so was Dissolved.

Sect. 99.

With this Parliament the Convocation of our Province met, May the 20th: A Sermon was preached, and the Lower House ordered to choose a Prolocutor; and a Day prefix'd for the Presenting of him. Besides this, nothing at all was done, neither in that, nor the following Session of Parliament. But the Assembly was prorogued on till Tuesday, July the 13th, 1687, and then Dissolved.

King WILLIAM and Queen MARY.

The next Convocation which met after this, was in the first of the late Reign: With the Convention Parliament which sate from February to August, none was held in either Province. It met with the Parliament which began by Prorogation October the 19th 1689; but sate not till the 6th of November, Seventeen Days after the Parliament. To this Convocation their Majesties sent a Royal Licence, and not only empower'd them to enter upon Business, but propos'd to them such Matters as they thought fit for them to deliberate upon. They continued to meet to these Ends till the 14th of December; after which there was nothing done by them.

Sect. 100.

In the Province of York the Convocation began upon the 19th of October; but it was only Prorogued from Session to Session; and neither did, nor debated upon, any thing.

Having thus drawn down the Succession of our Parliaments and Convocations to the late Reign; it will now be time for me to stop, and consider what Innovation either those Princes, or our present Metropolitans have made; what they have done, I do not say which they had not a Legal Authority to do; but which other Princes, and Primates, had done before them.

Sect. 101.

Sect. 102.

As for the King our late Sovereign, whom the Letter to A Convocation-man, which first began this Dispute, seems to charge as the principal Obstrueter of our Convocations; I cannot see, if the Case be truly so as I have before Represented it, what could have been desired of him, that was not actually done by him. He Assembled the Convocations duly with every Parliament: He permitted them to Continue to meet, if they thought good, to the End, nay, and for the most, part long after the End, of every Sessions. And this without any One Instance, within all his Reign, to the contrary. For as for the Pretence of the *Convocation Writ*s being once dropp'd for the Province of York, I believe even Dr. A. himself is satisfied, that the Writ was both Ordered by the King, and Sealed by the Chancellor; However it came to stop at the Crown Office, and so not to be put in Execution within that Province. Whatever difference therefore there may be between Dr. A. and Me, in our Notions in this Case, 'tis certain there has been nothing innovated in matter of Fact. The *Writ*s for our Convocations have been Regularly issued out, with every Parliament; and if Dr. A. will permit me to add it, notwithstanding any thing I have before argued, it is both my Desire that they may, and my Opinion that they should always be so. And to prevent any Mistake either of my Design, or of my Judgment (if that be of any moment) in this particular, I will take the liberty here, once for all, freely to declare it.

It is, I think, as evident as 'tis possible for any Historical Point to be, that before the Time of King Henry the viiith, there was no manner of Dependence of the Convocations upon the Parliament. They were actually Assembled at several times; without any other Relation to one another, than what the Expectation of the like Aids from the Clergy, which were given Them by the Laity, justly raised in our Princes; and thereby Prompted them when they Demanded, or Received, any Supplies of the One, to Assemble the Other, either at, or near the same time; and to Demand, or Receive, a Suitable Grant from Them also.

I do therefore look upon it to be a Matter of the utmost Certainty, that tho' the Convocations of the Clergy, as they were first Summon'd by Order of the *King's Writ*s, were truly State Assemblies, yet they were not Parliamentary Attendants. On the Contrary; The Clergy have by *Other Writ*s been Called to Parliament, ever since any of these Convocations have been in use. For an Age or two they actually Assembled with it; and to this Day they are both Regularly Summon'd to it, and in the Account of our Law, as well by the Rules of our Constitution, do make One of the Chiefest Estates of it.

These Convocations our Princes were formerly wont to Require their Archbishops to Call at any Time, whenever they had Occasion for them: And they never did cause them to be Assembled, but only at such times as they had some particular Need of them. But since the 25th of King Henry the viiith, our Princes having taken up the Method of Confirming the Grants of their Clergy by Authority of Parliament; they have generally Order'd the One to be Assembled as often as the Other was held. By this means the Clergy have sometimes met together in Convocation, when the King has had no Design, or Occasion, to make use of them. In these Cases, if our Metropolitans have had any Business to propose to them, they have employ'd them in the Doing of that: Otherwise, they have Continued them by Prorogations, from time to time, till the End of the Parliament; about which time they have commonly been either Prorogued, or Dissolved, by Authority of the King's Writ.

Now this having been done purely by the Pleasure of our Princes, and in the free Exercise of their Royal Authority, without any Law of the Realm, or Rule of our Constitution, which Obliged them so to Do: I do humbly conceive, that the Bare Custom of doing this, has not Abridged their Royal Prerogative; nor induced any Legal Obligation upon Them to Continue to act so in this Particular, as their Predecessors have commonly done before them. I look upon them to proceed with the same Freedom in Summoning our Convocations now, that King Henry the viiith did, when he first began thus to Summon them heretofore.

This therefore, as I am perswaded it is the just Right of the Prince, so do I take it to be not only the Duty, but Interest of the Church, to support it. To Oblige the Clergy, necessarily to MEET with; and, as 'tis now phrased, to ATTEND upon, every Parliament; and being thus Assembled, Actually to Sit, and either Do, or be Ready in a Posture of Doing Business, as long as every such Parliament lasts; is such a Burden; as I verily believe should it be strictly exacted of them, would be found of great Charge and Inconvenience, if not to Others, yet to the Remoter Clergy; and especially to such whose Dignities require their Personal Presence at these Assemblies, without affording them, many times, a suitable Ability of Coming to them, and Attending upon them. To confine the Prerogative of the Prince, and deny him the Authority of Causing these Convocations to be held at any other Seasons, but just when the Parliament is Sitting, may be no less a Detriment to the Affairs of it; should such Exigences arise, or such Circumstances happen, in which there may be need of the Public Consultation of its Bishops and Clergy; and the Prince be content to Assemble them, when it might not be so proper for him to Convene the Other. Whereas to allow the King his Rightful Authority in this Case, can admit but of One Exception, and that such as having never yet happen'd, we have the less Reason to fear it; namely, that some Prince may hereafter arise, who may Refuse to Summon the Convocations at all, if once it be allow'd that He has it in his Power to Call them, or not, at such Seasons. But then, this no Prince who has any Regard to Religion, or to the Church, will Do: And should we ever be so unfortunate as to have one that valued neither, and therefore should refuse to grant any Writs to the Archbishops for this Purpose, I do not see but that the Result would be much the same. He would Abuse his Authority indeed in not issuing out his Writs as he ought to do; and so he would do, if the Church had any need of such an Assembly, tho' he were not under any such legal Obligation: But still without his Writs the Archbishops cannot Convene their Clergy, nor the Clergy Come together, on pain of such Punishment as our Law directs in that Case.

As therefore I do look upon our Princes to Act freely in the Calling of our Convocations, and to be at liberty, by our Law, to Assemble them at any time that they shall think Expedient to do; so do I account it to be for the Benefit of the Church, to Acknowledge and Support the Freedom of their Prerogative in this Particular. But yet still, I do conceive, that without some very great Reason to the Contrary, this having been the Custom of our Kings for above 150 years past, it ought not lightly to be broken in upon: Nor would I, by any thing I have here either Allow'd, or Proved, on this Occasion, be understood to give the least Encouragement to the future laying aside of this Practice; tho' I do not think the Prerogative of the Crown to be strictly Obliged, or Limited, by it. If there be nothing for the Clergy to do; or if the Times be not proper, nor expedient for them to Assemble; as they are (in Dr A's Phrase) summon'd a course, so may they by their President be prorogued a course; and their Session reserved to some more favourable Seasons. If there be, they are then at hand to do it; and have the High Court of Parliament Sitting, either to Confirm their Acts, or to Receive their Petitions; or to do any Other Business in which they may be Aiding to the Good of the Church. In short, To Summon the Convocations in time of Parliament, may have many Conveniences: What Inconvenience there can be to any Prince in it, or what Temptation, almost, to prompt him to Omit it, I cannot foresee. Whilst the Metropolitan has the Power to Ease his Clergy, being Summon'd, and not to Exact their Attendance, but only when there is some Business of moment to be done by them; neither can the Church suffer by it: And therefore as it has been the Custom for our Princes to Summon them, at such times, for above 150 years past; so is it my hearty Wish, that they should continue still to be Assembled at those Seasons.

All that I desire is that both the Prince, and the Metropolitan, may have Each their Legal Rights preserved to them: The one to Assemble the Convocation at any time, whenever the Needs of the Church shall require it: The other to excuse their Clergy, from a tedious, and laborious, as well as expensive, Attendance, when there is nothing at all, or nothing of any consequence, to be done by them.

But of this let every one judge as he sees cause; It is enough for me that, in fact, our late Royal Sovereign has made no Change in this matter. The Convocations have been duly called with every Parliament; and being Called, have been freely left by him to Assemble, if they thought Good, to the End of every Session. The Innovation therefore, if there has been any made, must wholly lie at the Archbishop's doors: Who have indeed, in both Provinces, prorogued their Convocations from time to time, without ever setting them upon any Business, or Requiring their Assembling in order thereunto. But so have their Predecessors done before them: And I appeal to the Account before given, whether in this I say any thing which the plain Evidence of Fact do's not bear me out in.

The first Convocation entred in the Books of York, began November the 24th 1545. It was on the same day Prorogued to January the 26th: But the Clergy of our Province having before that granted their Subsidy, those of that Province were Summon'd, before their time, to meet December the 14th. They Met, Chose a Prolocutor, Agreed to the Subsidy; and so were again Continued from time to time, without doing of any other Business, or being ever ask'd to do any.

In 1547, the Convocation met November the 5th, but was the same day prorogued to November the 23<sup>d</sup>; then to January 20th, almost a Month after the Parliament was Risen.

In 1552, the Convocation was Summon'd to Assemble March the 1st: The same day it was prorogued to March the 28th; then to April the 15th, that is, to a Fortnight after the Session of Parliament was over.

In 1558, The Convocation began the 10th of February: It was the same day prorogued to March the 16th, then to March the 31st; from thence to the 15th of April; but nothing done, or moved by it.

In 1566, The Convocation was held October the 1st; and prorogued to the 30th of the same Month. On the 30th it was again Prorogued to November the 12th, without doing of any thing: Thus was it continued to December the 20th, when it Agreed to a Subsidy; and so was once more put off without going upon any Business, till the 8th of January; before which the Parliament was dissolved.

I might, in the same manner, run over a large Catalogue of the Convocations of the Other Province; the Acts of which do alone remain entire to us. But I shall leave it to the Reader, to observe them as they lie in the foregoing Account; and take it for granted, that in the Province of York, the Archbishop has not only always enjoy'd the Right of Proroguing his Convocation according to his own Pleasure, without suffering it to enter on any Business besides that of Subsidies; but has frequently exercised that Right: And therefore that whatever Innovation may have been made on our side, yet to be sure there has been none at all, or none of any moment, on theirs.

It is true, the Convocations of the Province of Canterbury, have been wont to be more frequently employ'd, and to transact more Business, than those of York. But they have done it by the Direction, and Order of our Metropolitans; whom, I hope, Dr. A. will not deny both by the Laws of the Realm, and by the Canons of the Church, to enjoy as full and ample an Authority over their Synods, as the Archbishops of York can be presumed to have over their Convocations. Had we the Acts of all our several Assemblies of this kind entire, I make no doubt, but we should from them be furnish'd with abundant Proofs of this. However, what remains will afford us some, and those, sufficient Instances to shew, that our Presidents have exercised all that Power over former Convocations, that has been either Claim'd, or Exercised, by our later Primates.

Were the Convocation-Books of King Edward the sixth entire, we should, I believe, find very early Proofs in them of this Practice. The last of Queen Mary met by Prorogation, November the 11th, 1557. It was on the same Day Prorogued to November the 17th; on which Day the Queen dying, the Parliament was dissolved; and so the Convocation ended with it.

Of the Convocations under Queen Elizabeth, we have but an imperfect Account; yet in several of them, there seems to have been very little done. Such were those of 1566, 1572, 1588, 1592, 1601; of which, Dr. A. being the best qualified to give us the History, I must leave it to him to inform the World, whether they were not Prorogued, if not without doing any thing at all, yet without entring on any Business of moment: And whether those Prorogations were made at the Clergies Own Desire, or meerly by the Archbishop's Authority, let him also shew us.

Sect. 104.
Authority,
&c. p. 141.

But I must not pass over the following Convocations thus briefly. I had formerly affirm'd, what I see no Cause yet to retract; that our Clergy being wont in Convocation to Assess themselves, were commonly suffer'd to Meet and Sit so long long as it was Requisite for them to do for that Purpose. But that this being, done they were for the most part Adjourn'd; and met no more till the King had some new Occasion for their Assistance. Had I then seen the Convocation Books of the Other Province, as I could not have desired any better Evidence of the Truth of my Assertion, so neither should I have appealed to any Other. In defect of that, I was forced to make use of such Authorities as lay before me; and what I then offer'd, I must beg leave once more to Repeat; if for nothing else yet, at least, to Consider what Reflections Dr. A. has thought fit to make upon it.

" The Convocation which met the first of King James the 1st; was by Ibid. p. 142.
 " Prorogation, continued from time to time for seven Years together. Yet ex" cept it were in his first Year, we do not hear of any great Business that " was done by them, more then that of Granting Subsidies. Against this Dr. A.
 has several Exceptions, which I shall take as they lie in Order in his Book.

And, 1st. He affirms that I must speak this at all Adventures; because Rights, &c.
 " Fuller seems to say, that the Acts of this Convocation were lost, even in his p. (276.)
 " time. Dr. W. must therefore be a bold Adventurer to pretend to say what " was, or was not, done in it. Yet as bold an Adventure as this was, Dr. A. must allow that a Man may speak of Convocations whose Acts are lost; or he must have been as bold himself, in what he has said of those of King Henry the 8th, Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth; of few of which any Acts remain to us. He will tell us perhaps, that tho the Acts of these be lost, yet large Extracts of the Acts have been preserved. I need not Inform him, that so there have been of this very Convocation. He has the Extracts of it in his Own Possession: When I wrote they were in Other Hands; and from thence I had my Account of it.

He adds, 2<sup>dly</sup>, " That had I spoken out, and told the World plainly what " that Business was which they did in their first Year, it would have given Us
 " some account why they might Possibly have lain still a Good while after" wards. But that was not the Question: Whether the Convocation had Business, or no Business to do, I was not to dispute. The Point which I had to Consider, was, whether the Convocation may not be Prorogued, during the Session of Parliament, without being allow'd to Enter upon any Business; And whether, in fact, they had not been thus prorogued, long before the present times? If this had been done heretofore, there could then be no Innovation in doing of the very same thing now. That was all I was concern'd to shew: As for what he intimates, it might indeed have been of Use to Justify the Metropolitan in the Exercise of his Power, to shew that the Convocation had nothing to do; but my Business was only to prove, that he had a Rightful Power, in Subordination to the King's Authority, to Prorogue it as he thought fit: Whether at this or that time he ought, or ought not, to Exercise that Power, is another Question; and was reserved to another place to determine.

But 3<sup>d</sup> Dr. A's next Attaque is more pertinent: For he affirms, that that Ibid. p. (277.)
 " Convocation, after all, did Sit, and Do Business; and that of a very important " Nature: For in 1606, it pass'd Bishop Overalls Convocation Book. It is true, the Archbishop, in the fourth Session of that Convocation, did bring in a Book; which was afterwards both Read, and Agreed to by it. And some other Matters were done, part of which Dr. A. takes notice of, and more he will hereafter be able to afford Us. Nor did I produce the Instance of this Convocation to prove, that nothing at all was done by the Clergy in it; but that no Great Matter was done by it. It cannot be expected, that from the short Minutes I have of this Assembly, I should be able to give any Good Account of the Proceedings of it. But I believe, were the Computation to be made, it would appear, that the Meetings in which they Assembled only to be Prorogued, were much more numerous, than those in which they did any Business: And then let Dr. A. give us a Good Reason, if he can, why the Archbishop who Continued so many of its Sessions without suffering the Clergy to enter upon any Business at all, might not if he had pleased, by the same Authority, have Prorogued them at any other times; and not have suffer'd them to do even that little Business, that was, (comparatively,) done by them.

What 4th Dr. A. means by his Instance of the Bishop of St. Davids Speech in Ibid. p. (277.)
 1604, about the Use of the Cross, which he brings to prove, that the Canons were then Re-debated and his long note thereupon, I cannot imagine. The Convocation began March the 20th 1603. It pass'd the Canons, 1604: And at the Passing of them, that Speech was made; not upon his imaginary Revision of them, for which there is not the least Ground.

Sect. 105.
Ibid. p. (172)

But <sup>1</sup> Dr. A. Proceeds; and to what I had said, that in King Charles the 1st's time, there were but few Parliaments, and therefore we ought not to look for many Convocations; Replies, that "In the first Sixteen Years of King Charles the first, there were five New Parliaments Chosen, and as many Convocations; and every one of those Convocations met, and sat; and we know who were the Prolocutors in each of them. I agree with Dr. A: There were so many Convocations called in that Princes time; Prolocutors were chosen; in Each of them; and the Clergy put in a Posture (as he calls it) of doing Business: And I have before told him for what Reason they were so. The Archbishop did it in obedience to the King's Commands; that so they might be ready to Grant their Aids, whenever they should be Demanded of them. But did the Three first of these Convocations do any other Business? Or were they continued by the Archbishop from time to time without Entring upon any? The first of them he says was "hindred from doing much Business by the Plague, which then "Reign'd. And yet notwithstanding the Plague, they met six times, between May and July, in London. Then they were prorogued to Oxford, where they met again in Christ Church, August the 2<sup>d</sup>; in Merton Colledge Chappel, August the 5th; in the same place August the 12th: But they did only meet, they did nothing; till at last they were dissolved by the King's Writ.

However, to allow of this Excuse, for that Meeting: What hinder'd the next Convocation from doing Business, which began the 7th of February following, and Continued till the middle of June the next Year? My Notes of this are but very short, and may easily mislead me: Yet I believe Dr. A. will be puzzled from his larger Extracts, to tell us of any matter of Moment that was done by it. The same was the Case of the Third which met in March, 1627: In which, if my brief Minutes deceive me not, little more than the Subsidy was debated on; with which we are not at present concerned. In the 4th Convocation, the Canons of 1640 were pass'd; so that there can be no dispute, but that then the Synod did sit, and do the Business that was proper for it: But the last, which met the same year, was again but little employ'd. The two first Sessions were taken up in matters of Form. At the Third, some of the Body were appointed to Officiate on the fast day, which was order'd to be Observed; and the Lower House directed by the President, to determine the Controversies about Elections, which should come to be disputed. From this time, we find the Convocation Prorogued by the Archbishop, or his Commissioner, nine several times; but no Business done, nor any thing Attempted, but what related to Elections, or to the Forms of Proceeding; with which the Clergy usually fill'd up the time, till the Archbishops Prorogation was intimated to them.

This was the Case of four of the five Convocations of King Charles the 1st; of which Dr. A. Speaks. They Met, and were prorogued; but they did Nothing: At least by the short remains which I have seen of the three first, and the Acts of the last, it does not appear that any thing of Moment was done, or enterprized by them.

Sect. 106.
Ibid. p. (278)

But against this, Dr. A. excepts: "For even in these Convocations, some Motions (he says) were made, and Debates held, tho' no Synodical Conclusions were form'd. I do allow, that in the Diary of Archbishop Laud, we are told, that on March the 29th, 1626, there was a Debate about the Sermon which Bishop Goodman had preached at Court the Sunday before: And 'tis very natural to think, that Offence being taken at several Passages of it, the Bishops who met together, that day, should consider what was fit to be done by them thereupon. But the matter went no farther than Debate; for by the same Diary it appears, that tho' the Convocation was then sitting, yet that Affair was Committed by the King to a Select Committee of Bishops; who gave him their Resolution upon it, the 12th of April following.

Whether Mr. Fuller's Instances be more considerable, will best appear from the Words of that Author concerning the first, and last of these Convocations: Of that of 1625, he thus speaks: "The Convocation kept here, is scarce worth the mentioning; seeing little the Appearance thereat, NOTHING the PERFORMANCE therein. Dr. James made a motion, that the MSS Fathers in the Libraries

“ braries of the Universities, or elsewhere in England, might be perused. But “ alas! This Motion was Ended when it was Ended; Expiring in the Place “ with the words of the Mover thereof. Of the last of 1640, He says lit- Ibid p. 172.
 “ tle more, “ Abreast with the Parliament began a Convocation, tho’ unable long “ to keep pace together; the latter soon tiring, as never inspired by Commis- “ sion from the King to meddle with any Matters of Religion. Mr. Warrmistre “ made a Motion, to Condemn such Offensive Canons as were made in the last Con- “ vocation: But that too went no farther than a Motion; nor do the Acts take any Notice any such Motion was made at All.

But still, “ so much Business at least was done, in all these Convocations, as “ made their TITLE Good to Do more, if they thought fit. What Dr. A. means by this, I cannot tell; Sure I am, that all these Convocations are an evident Proof of the Archbishop’s Authority to Prorogue them, whenever He thinks fit; without asking any leave of the Clergy, or enquiring whether they have any Business to Do, or No. Let Dr. A. produce but any One Instance to the Contrary of this: Let him shew where the Archbishop ever ask’d leave of the Cler- gy to prorogue His Convocation; Or when they Refused to be Prorogued for this Reason, that they had Business to do, and insisted upon their Right, and Title, to Do it, in despite of his Authority; and then I will allow him to Conclude, that they did somewhat that might suffice to make their TITLE Good to Do more.
 But if this he cannot Do, (as I am pretty sure he cannot) He must then give me leave from the Variety before alledged, to conclude; that by Custom, as well as by an Original Power, the Metropolitan has a Right to Prorogue his Synod
 WHEN, and AS OFTEN as he pleases; and is accountable to none besides the King, in the doing of it. If indeed he exercises this Authority to the Prejudice of the Church; If he thereby hinders the Convocation from doing Business, when it would be for the Advantage of our Religion that they should do it; he may be justly charged with Abusing that Power, which both the Canons of the Church, and the Laws and Customs of the Realm, have intrusted him withal. But still the Power its self is his Just Right; and in Exercising of it, He does no more, than what He may lawfully Do; and what Our Archbishops have always Done, without the leave of any, but the King only.

In the Reign of King CHARLES the II<sup>d</sup>; I took notice of the Business done by Sec. 107.
 the Convocation of 1661, in Settling our Church, and the Liturgy of it, after the long Disorders of Our unfortunate Civil War: Which being done, I added, that tho’ that Convocation met with many Sessions of Parliament, for several Years together, yet nothing else was done by them; as appear’d by the Journal which I had seen of it. Well; and what says Dr. A. to this Instance? “ He Rights, &c.
 “ had a Journal (says he) where there are no Memorandums of any thing p. (279.)
 “ Done; and from that Empty Journal, one would think that he had learnt all “ his Skill in the Business of Convocations. Whatever Dr. A. thinks of Dr. W. or his Skill, yet for some of his Friends sake, I would not have him speak too contemptibly of that EMPTY JOURNAL. It was Mr. Munday’s Journal of the Pro- ceedings of the Lower House, which I referr’d to; a Copy of which I had then by me: And I am sure Dr. A. knows too well, how much Use has been made of those Precious Minutes since, to think it prudent to undervalue them, tho’ Dr.
W. has appealed in this Case to them.

“ But had not something else (He means Dr. Wake’s HEAD) been as EMPTY as “ that Journal, he would have forborn giving that as an instance how Convoca- “ ons have been employ’d whilst they were Used to Assess themselves, when all “ the Prorogations of which he speaks were after they began to be Tax’d by Parli- “ ament; and ALL of them were, with the Good Will and Consent of the Clergy.
 I accept his Complement; and only beg leave to inform him, that in Quoting of this Convocation in the last place, I quoted the last Convocation that ever Granted any Subsidy to the King: And I quoted it to shew, that the Subsidy being given, they from thenceforth did no Other Business; but were prorogued many times, for several Years together, without doing any thing that was material afterwards. But is Dr. A. in good earnest in what follows? Do’s he think, that the King too was Licenced by the Clergy to Prorogue them? That he says, it was done with the Good Will and Consent of the Clergy. I find then the Convocation has more Power than I imagined: A Power not only over the Archbishop, but the King too; so that even he must have their Consent, to Continue them;
 Or

or he cannot justify his doing of it. But Dr. A. cares not what he asserts, so it will, but Exalt the Authority of the Clergy, and Oppress an Adversary. In the mean time I desire him once more, before he sets up their Authority above the King's Prerogative, to prove, if he knows how, that the Archbishop needs either their Good Will, or Consent, to Prorogue them, as often as he pleases: Or that in doing of it, he do's any thing more than what All our Archbishops have Customarily, and Constantly done; without ever being Question'd for it by their Clergy, or (till these Reforming Days of ours) Opposed in it.

To conclude therefore this whole matter: From what has been said it appears,* That our Metropolitans have from time to time, prorogued their Convocations, as they have judged most Expedient for the Benefit of the Church, and for the Ease of their Clergy. * That in doing of this, they had no Check upon them from any but the King only; by whose Authority, as they have called their Convocations, so have they been Obliged to Continue their Sessions in such a manner, as not to Defeat his Ends in summoning of them. * That, in fact, these Assemblies have before now been Prorogued, from the first day of their Meeting, to the last; without ever entring upon any Business, or being allow'd to do any. * That for the doing of this, our Archbishops have often Granted Commissioners to such of the Prelates, or Clergy, as they have thought fit: And those Commissions have not only done this by vertue of that Delegation, but have been so limited in their Powers, as not to have been at Liberty to do any thing besides. * When the Convocations have met, yet it has often been only for Form sake; and that rather to satisfie their Obligation to the King's Writ, than out of any Compliance with any Duty that they owed to the Clergy; who even in such their Assembling, have Acted in Obedience to their Archbishops Authority: And they have Ordered them to Assemble once or twice, to shew that they were ready to do what the King Required; and so have prorogued them, without going upon any Work. All which being so, I must beg leave to conclude, till I shall be better inform'd; that in proroguing our late Convocations as they have done, our Archbishops have Usurped no Authority which did not of Right belong to them; nor have done any thing more, than what our former Archbishops had, if not exactly in every Circumstance, yet in all that was of any moment, done before them.

As for what Dr. A. so much urges, of their being Assembled in form, and Chusing a Prolocutor, and separating into two Houses, and putting themselves into a Posture of doing Business; I must be excused, if I cannot see any such need of it, where it is before-hand Resolved, that no Business should be done. And for the Archbishop's Authority in that Case, he knows very well, that in the Province of York, many whole Convocations have pass'd, and much Business been done, without their ever Dividing into two Houses, or Chusing of any Prolocutor at all. And so they did heretofore in the Other Province too; however the Largeness of the Bodies, which make up our two Houses, did at last force them to separate, for the better managing of their Debates. These Preliminaries therefore, are not necessary to the Acting of a Convocation; much less, to the Nature and Being of such an Assembly. Nor can any Reason be given why the Archbishop, who plainly has a Power of Proroguing the Convocation after these Forms are over, should not equally have the Authority, if he thinks fit, to Do it before. For either this, after all, the Archbishop of this Province must be allow'd a Power to Do; or it must be said, that his Authority over our Convocation, is not so great as the Archbishop of York's over the Synod of that Province; but that the Provincial Clergy have Claims on our side, which they have not on theirs; neither of which can, I conceive, be Asserted without some Violence to our National Constitution: It being certain, that the President of the Other Province has often prorogued his Convocation, without ever directing, or allowing them to chuse a Prolocutor; or to depart out of the Place to which they were summon'd before him.

However, to shew how much I desire to comply with Dr. A. even here too; (tho' I dare not pretend to Advise, much less, with him, to Direct, and Require my Superiors) yet would this satisfie, I would willingly become an humble Petitioner to them, that these Sacred Meetings (which I heartily wish may be, and do justly hope shall be, constantly Assembled with our Parliaments, as well as at all Other times, whenever the Church may have any need of them) should be from henceforth Open'd with the same Solemnity that they have heretofore been wont wont to be. That if in order hereunto, it would not be too great a Burden to the distant Clergy to be brought together for so small a Purpose, they might at the Beginning of every such Synod, be Required to Assist at the Solemnity, and Chuse their Prolocutor, as Dr. A. desires they should; and be directed by the Archbishop, if they had any Motions to make, or any Petitions to Offer, freely to make and present them. Would this contribute to the Ends of Peace and Union, as I do most sincerely desire the One, so would I heartily join in my Request, to our most Reverend Metropolitan, for the Other. But then in Order hereunto, I conceive, the Claim of Right in this Case must, in the first place, be dismiss'd; that so it may appear to be a Concession of Grace, not of Justice; and be Received as a Condescension to the Humble Requests of the Clergy, not as a Victory gain'd by Clamour and Importunity, over the just Authority of our President.

As for the other Notion advanced by Dr. A. That our Convocations have so necessary a Relation to the Parliament, that they cannot lawfully be separated; but the One must End, whenever the Other Rises; that is a Point, which how necessary soever it may be to his Hypothesis, yet I cannot by any means agree with him in. The History even of our later Convocations, manifestly overthrows it; and that there is not so much as a Colour for it in all our more antient Assemblies of this kind, the Account I have before given of them, abundantly shews. And because this is a Matter wherein I conceive the Liberty of the Church, as well as the Prerogative of the Crown, to be very nearly concern'd; I shall the more easily be excused, if I insist a little more particularly upon it.

Sect. 109.

What Dr. A's Sense is, as to this Point, we cannot better learn than from his Own Words; and that both as to Matter of Fact, and Matter of Right, in this Particular. The Matter of Fact he thus Delivers, p. 48. "About the Entrance of the last Age, when the Prerogative began to Recover the Ground it had lost to the Church, we find those Meetings of the Clergy and Laity, more closely United; the Dates of Henry the viiith's CONVOCATIONS being all ONE, or a FEW DAYS BEFORE OR AFTER (if not ALTOGETHER the SAME with) those of his PARLIAMENTS. This is a little mystical, and shews Dr. A. not to have well known what the Case of King Henry the viiith's Convocations was. First, he tells us the Dates of them were ALL ONE with those of his Parliaments: And then presently, as if he doubted that might not be true, He adds a Cautious, OR, quite contrary to what he had before affirm'd; ALL ONE; OR A FEW DAYS BEFORE OR AFTER; that is, OR NOT ALL ONE, but different. But neither did that please him; and therefore a third Essay was to be made in another form of Speech; and that too enclosed in Parenthesis, to make it still more Equivocal; (if NOT ALTOGETHER THE SAME WITH) So that, in short, the Dates of King Henry the viiith's Convocations were quite ALL ONE; or very near ALL ONE; if not ALTOGETHER ALL ONE, with those of his Parliaments. "And from EDWARD the vith to this Reign, the Clergy have, I think, met ALWAYS, and parted within a Day of the Parliament. There have been NO DEVIATIONS from this Rule that I know of, except in a Legantine Synod or two (which are no Presidents) and ONCE in the CONVOCATION of 1640; but that Experiment succeeded too ill, to be ever try'd a second time.

Rights, &c.
p. 48.

Dr. A. is here again a little Modest and Reserved; "The Clergy (says he) I THINK met always, and parted within a day of the Parliament. And again, there have been no Deviations from this Rule that I KNOW of: Words of Art and Caution, and such as this Author do's not commonly trouble his Reader withal. But he soon grew more positive: "For in p. 68, He became SURE of what before he durst not absolutely affirm. "SURE WE ARE, that the Convocations of the Clergy have (as has been said already) for above 150 Years, in EVERY INSTANCE (except that of Forty, and the Synods Legantine) met and rose within a day of the Parliament. Will Dr. A. stand to his Assertion as he has now roundly deliver'd it? No, he must qualify it once more; and therefore in his New Corrections, we are bid to alter it thus: SURE WE ARE that the Convocations of the Clergy Have been Used, to meet and rise within a day of the Parliament. Which being put in opposition to their having done it in EVERY INSTANCE, must imply, that this Custom was not Constant: That there had been Several Instances to the Contrary; only this had been the more COMMON USAGE; which is all that this Author seems by his last Thoughts to be willing to be held to.

Ibid. p. 68.

But

But how then will such an Usage infer, what he presently after delivers us, as Parliamentary, or Convocation-Law; "That the Convocation should meet ONLY and ALWAYS in time of Parliament? And, which is yet more wonderful, founds it upon the Authority of Custom; which if it has not been Constant and Uniform, (as by his new Correction he himself implies that it has not) can be no Custom; but will rather shew, that the Convocation may still meet, as it has sometimes done, tho' the Parliament be not Sitting, or Continue after it is Risen.

Sect. 110.

In Opposition to the Pretences of this Gentleman, I shall need only to shew, that he is intirely mistaken in his Matter of Fact upon which he founds his Custom; and that will prove, that he must be deceived in the Position, which he builds upon it. For however it be true, that since the Time of which he speaks, our Princes, for the Reason often before alledged, have generally Assembled our Convocations about the same time with their Parliaments; yet has it so fallen out, that there has been such a Distance, very often, between the Beginning and Ending of these Assemblies, that the One has often sate several Days, or Weeks, without the Other. Sometimes the King has not issued his Writs to Call, for Prorogue them, so nearly as is pretended; and thereby has sufficiently Vindicated his Right of doing both at his Pleasure. Sometimes Accidents have fallen out to hinder the Execution of his Writs; and by those a greater Distance has been made between them. And sometimes, tho' the King has issued out his Writs, and there has nothing extraordinary happen'd to hinder the Execution of them, yet our Archbishops, in fact, have not presently done it; as they must, and certainly would have done, had they known or believed any thing of what is now pretended, that their Convocations of Right cannot sit but ONLY in TIME of Parliament. And for this, as the shortest Method, as well as the clearest, in this Case, I shall referr the Reader to the following Table; in which he will find the Distance of our later Convocations, and Parliaments, plainly represented to him; and in that, Dr. A's Assertions evidently confuted.

Sect. 111.

And thus have I done with Dr. A's last Argument drawn from Custom; and shewn it to be neither sufficient to destroy the King's Prerogative, supposing it to have stood so as he pretends it has; and to have such manifest Defects in Point of Fact, as utterly take off all the force of it.

Dr. A. affirms, that the two Convocations have a Right to Meet, Sit, and Act, with every Parliament: That this they have constantly done ever since the Time of King Henry the viiith; and thereby have acquired the Authority of Custom, as well as they have always had the Law of our Constitution, to entitle them thereunto. But in Fact it appears, that since the Time of King Henry the viiith, several Parliaments have been assembled, and no Convocation at all has sate with them: With Others, One of the Convocations only has been held; and very often, when Both have been summon'd, yet (the Case of Subsidies excepted, which now is out of doors) little or no Business has been done, or so much as attempted to be done, by either of them.

pag. 48.

Dr. A. asserts, 'That the Dates of King Henry the viiith's Convocations have been all One, or a few Days before or after, if not altogether the same with, Those of his Parliaments. To pass by the odd Contradictory Terms of this Proposition, 'tis in Matter of Fact intirely false; and from the foregoing History appears plainly so to be. In 1511 the Parliament met, February the 4th: The Convocation of York sate not till April the 26th. In 1512, the Parliament Assembled November the 4th: The Convocation of York, January the 17th. In 1514, the Convocation of Canterbury met June the 22<sup>d</sup>: That of York, January the 22<sup>d</sup>; the One Seven Months, the Other a Fortnight before the Parliament was held. In 1515, the Parliament sate November the 12th: The Convocation of York, April the 9th. In 1523, the Convocation of York met March the 22<sup>d</sup>: The Parliament, April the 20th. In 1531, the Parliament came together, January the 15th; the Convocation of York the 7th of February following.

<sup>1</sup> Rights, &c.
p. 48, 49.
Comp. p 68,
&c.

Dr. A. says, 'That from the 1st of Edward the vith, the Convocations have met always, and parted, within a Day of the Parliament: That there have been no Deviations from this Rule, except in a Legantine Synod or two, (which are no Presidents) and Once in the Convocation of 1640: But that Experiment succeeded too ill to be ever try'd a second time. But the foregoing History sufficiently shews the Rashness of this Assertion. In 1555, the Convocation of York met four Months after the Parliament began; and almost three after it was Dissolved. In 1558, the same Convocation assembled Eighteen Days after the Parliament. In 1605, it met twenty Days; in 1606, eleven; in 1627, three Weeks after it. In 1678, the Convocation of Canterbury began a Month after the Parliament; that of York a Month later still.

The Case is the same as to their Rising, that it was for their Sitting. In 1547, the Parliament rose December the 24th: The Convocation of York near a Month after it. In 1552, the Parliament was dissolved April the 15th: The Convocation of York continued till May the 4th. In 1553, the Parliament was dissolved March the 31st: The Convocation of York granted not its Subsidy till the 15th of April following. The same Year a second Parliament met, and was dissolved December the 6th: But the Convocation of York went on till the 13th. In 1554, the the Parliament was dissolved May the 5th: The Convocation of Canterbury fate till May the 25th, and was then only prorogued till the October following. The same Year another Parliament was dissolved, January the 16th: The Convocation of Canterbury fate till the 26th of the same Month. In 1555, the Parliament was dissolved December the 9th: But the Convocation of York met not till the 4th of March after. In 1563, the Parliament rose April the 10th: The Convocation of York, April the 28th. In 1566, the Parliament was dissolved January the 2<sup>d</sup>; the same Convocation, January the 15th. In 1571, the Parliament was dissolved May the 29th: The Convocation of York fate June the 20th. In 1572, the Parliament rose June the 30th: The Convocation of York, July the 18th. In 1575 the Parliament ended, March the 15th: The Convocation of York granted its Subsidy April the 19th. To pass by the Parliaments of King James and King Charles the 1st: The long Parliament of King Charles the 1st was within our Memories, dissolved January the 24th, 1678: Yet the Convocation of Canterbury went on till February the 12th, nineteen Days after the Other was concluded.

As for the Case of the Convocations of 1640, I have before shewn that the House of Commons, violent as it was against them for what they did, yet pass'd no Censure upon them for the Time at which they did it. By Dr. A's Rights, &c. Leave, their Sitting after the Parliament was Dissolved produced not One Vote; p. 216. tho' some of the warmer Members were not wanting in their Reflections upon them, in this respect, as well as in Others. And I am so far from passing over this Instance, as any way contrary to my Assertion, that I insist upon it, as an evident Testimony of the Sense even of that Parliament against Dr. A. in this Particular. For had they thought their Continuance so great a Violation of the Rules of our Government, and Constitution, as he pretends, we may be sure we should have heard sufficiently of it: And I will venture to conclude, that they therefore only pass'd by this Circumstance, and condemn'd neither Them, nor their Canons, upon this Account; because they saw there was no sufficient Ground in it, on which to build any legal Charge against either.

Whereas therefore Dr. A. (to proceed this one Step farther in the Recapitulation of his Paradoxes) affirms, that the Convocations are so tied up to the Time of the Parliament's Sitting, that they cannot legally meet but when that Great Council is Assembled; I affirm this to be Erroneous, both in Law and Fact: Our Convocations have always been wont to sit at any time that the King has pleased to appoint for Them; and that tho' the Parliament has been Prorogued or Dissolved; as by a multitude of Instances, even within this last Period, I have now shewn.

The only thing that may seem to admit of a Doubt, is their Right to Act in their State-Capacity, after the State-Council is risen. And even that too do's not want sufficient Presidents to justify it. In 1553, the Parliament was dissolved March the 31st: Yet the Clergy granted their Subsidy, April the 15th. So they did again in 1575. The Parliament rose March the 15th: The Clergy began to debate of their Subsidy, March the 23<sup>d</sup>; and concluded it not till the 19th of April following. Nay, in the Reign of King Charles the 1st, the Parliament of 1625, was adjourn'd by the King from London, July the 11th, to meet at Oxford, August the 1st. Yet in the very middle of this Interval the York Clergy granted their Subsidy, July the 21st, ten Days after the Parliament had been Adjourn'd; and as many before it was to meet again.

But I insist too long upon these Remarks: I shall close up all with a brief Consideration of the present Parliament, which, were Men willing to be convinced, might alone suffice, to shew the Falseness of Dr. A's Principles in this Particular.

Among the other Provisions which were made by his late Majesty for the Peace and Safety of the Realm, that Statute was not the least by which it was ordered, that the Parliament should continue to sit for six Months after his Demise, and not be Dissolved, as otherwise it would have been, by his Death. By Vertue of this Act the present Parliament has continued in the State in which it before was, for these two Months last past; and is by no One doubted, to be the Complete, Legal Parliament, of this Kingdom.

But in that Statute by which the Parliament was thus continued, no Provision was made for the Convocations to sit on with it. They were left to fall with the Prince, by whose Authority the Archbishops had called them: And accordingly, they have in Fact been Dissolved all this while, tho' the Parliament has gone on to Sit and Act as before.

If by the Law of our Constitution, the Convocations be an Essential part of the Parliament; and as such ought always, by the same Law, to sit together with it, as Dr. A. pretends; then we must conclude, that this Parliament has sate all this while in an imperfect State; and by thus sitting and acting alone, by its self, has broken the Legal Constitution of our Government. An Assertion, I think, of a very bold and criminal nature; and such as no One who understands himself, and has that due Regard he ought to have for the Wisdom and Justice of her Majesty, her Council, and that Great and Honourable Body, will presume to own.

But if without any Injury to the Rights of the Church, or to the Laws of our Constitution, this Parliament has continued, and do's still continue, to sit, and do its proper Business, under her Sacred Majesty's Authority, tho' the Convocations are both Dissolved; Then must I be Allow'd to affirm no more, than what the whole Representative Body of the Realm in this Parliament Assembled, do in their Actions plainly speak to us; that the Provincial Convocations of Canterbury and York, Called by Authority of the Provincial Writs, directed to their Respective Archbishops and Presidents, are no Essential Members of the Parliament of England; nor have any Right, by the Rules of our Constitution, to Sit Always in time of Parliament; but may, upon good and just Grounds, be either not Summon'd, or be Prorogued from time to time, without entring on any Business; nay, or even be Dissolved (as now they are) and the Parliament nevertheless lawfully continue to Meet, and Act, without them.

The Other General Question, concerning the Right of the Convocation to TREAT of Canons and Constitutions, without the Assent or License of the Prince, Proposed, and Stated. My Opinion Confirmed: Dr. A's Exceptions against it Examined and Answered.

Sect. 1.

FROM the First General Question proposed to be discussed between Dr. A. and my self, concerning the Right of the Convocations to be Summon'd and Sit with every Parliament; I proceed to the Second, which relates to their Power of Acting, without any License from the Prince so to do. Now this being a Case which depends upon the Authority of an Act of Parliament, and the Practice of our Princes and Convocations thereupon, will admit of a much shorter, if not of a clearer Issue, than the foregoing. And that I may pursue it with all the Plainness I can, I will take this Method in the handling of it; First, I will state my Own, and Dr. A's Opinion, of this Matter: And having done this, I will, in the next place, proceed to offer such Reasons as still move me to adhere to my former Resolution of this Point; and to vindicate them from those Exceptions which Dr. A. has thought fit to bring against them.

 p. 110.

As for my Own Opinion in this Case, (if yet I may presume to call it my Own) 'I deliver'd it in the Words of the two Chief Justices, and other Justices, at a Committee before the Lords, 8 Jacob. I. Where having first resolv'd, " <sup>2</sup> That a Convocation cannot Assemble at their Convocation without the Assent of the King: They, in the next place, declar'd, to the Intent of the Matter now in debate, " That after their Assembly, they cannot CONFER to CONSTITUTE any CANONS without License de l' Roy. This those Learned Men founded upon the 25 H. 8. c. 19. " <sup>3</sup> The Design of which being to restrain the Clergy from doing somewhat which they had been wont to do in their Convocation, must take in as well their Making as their Promulging and Executing any Provincial Canons, or Constitutions; and restrain them from the One as well as from the Other.

To state this Matter more particularly; Having thus, in the General, shewn what the Design of that Act was, <sup>4</sup> I proceeded, in the next Section, to distinguish between Debating, or Consulting, of Other Matters, and in order to Other Ends; and Conferring to make Provincial Canons, or Constitutions: And declared my Opinion in behalf of the Convocation, that notwithstanding this Statute, the Clergy

Clergy may still Do the One, tho' they are forbidden to Attempt the Other. "Whether the Convocation may not, without the King's License, deliberate of such things as may be fit to be done by them for the Service of the Church, I shall not undertake to say. Certain it is, that they may not so Deliberate as to come to any Authoritative Resolutions, or to FRAME any ORDER or CONSTITUTION, of what kind soever it be, without the King's Leave.— To deliberate of what might usefully be Consider'd by them, and to Petition the King thereupon for Leave so to Do; This, as it is no ATTEMPTING To MAKE A CANON, &c. so do's it not, I conceive, come within the Design of that Prohibition which this Act has laid upon them. And if the King allows the Convocation to Sit, I do not see wherein they would transgress in framing such an Address, supposing that his Commission had not before prevented all Occasion for such an Application. But then still this is but asking Leave to act as a Synod; and it will, after all, remain in the King's Breast what Answer to make to such a Request; and whether he will grant them that Leave which they desire, or no. As therefore the Convocation cannot meet, but by the King's Writ; so neither, being met, can they proceed to any Canonical Debates, or Resolutions, without it. For by virtue of this Act, they are forbid not only to Make, but to Attempt; that is (as I understand it) to Do any thing that tends towards the Making of any Canons, without his Warrant for their doing of it. All which I elsewhere thus briefly sum up to the same effect: "So that now then, to state this other Point aright, the Question betwixt us is this; Whether the Laws and Customs of this Realm have not restrain'd the Clergy from Entering on any Synodical Debates, in ORDER to the MAKING of any CANONS, or CONSTITUTIONS, without the special License of the King first had, to warrant Them so to Do?"

But tho' this therefore might suffice, to shew what my Opinion in this Case was, and thereby to Cut off a Great Part of Dr. A's Exceptions against it; Yet to avoid, if it may be, all possible Mistakes, or Misrepresentations of it hereafter, I will here beg leave to give a more full, and distinct, Account of my sense in this Particular.

I have before, I think, very fully shewn, that the Convocations of the Clergy, Call'd by Authority of the King's Writ, were Originally Assembled for State-Purposes, not for Spiritual or Ecclesiastical Affairs. That accordingly they were, in many Circumstances, Essentially different from the Provincial Councils of the Church of England; and particularly in this, that the One were Call'd by the sole Authority of their Respective Archbishops, and for a long time consisted only of the Provincial Bishops, and Prelates: The Lower Clergy being not for several hundreds of Years either Summon'd to them, or accounted any Necessary or Canonical Part of them. But as in all humane Constitutions many Changes and Alterations gradually come in; so in process of time, a Confusion ensued in these Assemblies also. And that by this means; that the Bishops, and Prelats, and Clergy, being frequently obliged to meet together for the Affairs of the State, in Convocation; our Metropolitans took the Opportunity, for the Ease of their Clergy, to empower or permit them, to Act, at the same time, in their Ecclesiastical Capacities; and to proceed at once, both as a Council, and as a Convocation. This, as far as I can observe, was first begun by Archbishop Courtney, in the Convocation at Oxford, Anno 1382; and was become the Common Practice at the time that this Statute, of the Submission of the Clergy, was made.

King Henry the VIIIth being resolved to tie up the Hands of the Clergy, that so they might not be in a Condition of making any considerable Opposition to his Designs; in the first Place, by the Latitude of the Word Convocation, (which was now indifferently applied to any kind of Synodical Meeting of the Clergy) restrained them from Assembling by any Ecclesiastical Summons, without the Authority of the King's Writ; and thereby secured himself, that not only no State Convocations, but no Provincial Councils, should be held against his Consent. But because it would be necessary for him to Call the Clergy to Convocation, in order to the raising of those Subsidies upon them there, which they had not yet been accustom'd to Grant elsewhere; and that being Met in Convocation by his Writ, they might there proceed, by the Consent and Authority of their Metropolitan, to Act Synodically, without any leave granted to them by Himself so to do; do; therefore to secure himself against any Danger on this side too, it was farther Provided that they should not from thenceforth Attempt, or Make, any Canons or Constitutions Provincial, without the King's most Royal Assent and License, as well to Make, as to Promulge and Execute the same. So that now the Clergy being come together in one Capacity, by Vertue of the King's Writ, could not (as before they might have done) by the Sole Permission of their Archbishop, without any Assent or Authority from the King, proceed to Act in Another; but must as well have his Licence to Make Canons, when Assembled in Convocation; as his Writ, to Authorize the Metropolitan to Assemble them there.

Now this being the true design of that Prince in laying such a Restraint upon the Clergy, and what his Parliament, as well as Himself, aimed at in the Statute which they made to this effect; the Case of the Convocation, with respect to their Power of Acting, I take to be plainly this: That being Call'd by the King's Writ to Assemble in their State Capacity; (as both the Words of it import, and the Continuance of the like Form of Summons now, by which they had been wont to be Assembled under that Capacity heretofore, do plainly shew) They are by that Writ empower'd, not only to meet, according to the Mandate of their Metropolitan issued out thereupon; but, being met, are Authorized freely to Act in that Capacity, without any other Restraint than that One, of not being any longer at Liberty to enforce their Subsidies by Ecclesiastical Censures; which, indeed, from thenceforth they could not do, because they were by this Act generally Restrained from making any Canons or Constitutions Provincial, or Synodical, without the King's Licence; and no Exception, or Provision was made, for a Liberty to do that in this One Case, which they might not do in any other besides.

Accordingly, whilst they continued to grant their own Money, they had no need of any License, either to Debate of, or to come to a final Resolution upon, any Subsidies for the Government. They Granted them freely as before; and drew up their Grants into a solemn Instrument; and by their President offer'd it, under his Metropolitcal Seal, to the King for his Acceptance.

If they had any Addresses to make, or any Petitions to Present to the Bishops, the Parliament, or the Prince; they had, and still have, a full Liberty to Make, and to Offer them. And, as before, if they saw it needful, to proceed to any proper Synodical Debates, in order to the Regulating of any thing that might be wanting in the Doctrine, or Discipline, of the Church; They had an undoubted Right to draw up their Requests to their Archbishop and Bishops for Leave, or Directions to proceed upon it, so, I do humbly conceive, they may do the same now: Only with this Difference, That their Petition must now run, not for THEIR Leave, or Consent, (who are no longer able to grant them any) but that they would obtain the Princes Assent and License, who alone, since this Act, can Authorize them in this Particular.

Sect. 4.

And here, if I mistake not, the Power of the Convocation, as such, Determines. If they mean to proceed any farther, and to Confer, not in Order to a Petition for a License, but (as the Judges well express'd it) to Constitute Canons, they must first qualify themselves for such Conference, by the King's License; or they will come within the Penalty of that Statute which prohibits any such Attempt. But such a License being obtain'd, They are thereby made a Council, as well as a Convocation; and from thenceforth may Act within the Bounds of such their License, as securely in that Capacity, as by their Writ of Summons They had Authority to proceed in their Other.

Here therefore it is, that I account a License to be Necessary: Not to enable them to Consider of their Civil Grievances, or to Petition against them; Not to make any Addresses to the Prince, whether of Request for his future Protection, or of Thanks for his past Favours; Not to Grant Subsidies (had they still reserved to themselves the great Right and Privilege of Granting them;) No, nor yet to Deliberate of Ecclesiastical Matters, provided it be only in order to Petition their Prelates, and Primate; and by them their Prince, for a License to proceed farther, according to the Statute 25 H. 8. c. 19. But to CONFER to MAKE CANONS; to ATTEMPT any such thing; to ALLEDGE or CLAIM any such Right or Power, as still remaining to them; to put any such Power in Ure, and thereby to MAKE, PROMULGE, or EXECUTE any Canons by their Own Authority; This, and every part of this, I conceive, is now forbidden; nor may the Clergy, Clergy, without the Royal Licence, PRESUME to enter upon any such Debates.

But what sort of Licence is it, that the Statute do's require to Qualify the Convocation to proceed with safety to make Canons? Must it be a solemn Instrument under the Great Seal of England? Or will a Verbal Message sent by the Prince to the Clergy, suffice to indemnify them in this Case? In answer to this; It must, in the first place, be Confessed, that herein the Statute determines nothing expressly: It only says, That the King's most Royal Assent and License must to Them be had; and this is afterwards called his most Royal Assent and Authority in that behalf. And therefore the Prince being herein left at Liberty to Signify his Assent, and to Grant his Authority in such manner as he pleases; I do not see but that if the Convocation be satisfied its self, and can, upon Occasion, make a Legal Proof to Others, that the Prince did give his Royal Assent to their Proceedings; howsoever it be communicated to them, it ought to indemnify them in Acting upon it, tho' it should not be in the Way of a Formal License in Writing.

Seet. 5.

And accordingly, at the beginning, the King's Assent may, for ought I know, have been Convey'd, by word of Mouth, to the Clergy; first by his Vicar General; after that by the Archbishop, who sometimes signified his Royal Pleasure to them. But it was not long before a more Solemn, and Secure Method was introduced; and that, as seems most probable, at the desire of the Clergy Themselves: Who knowing the danger of the Times in which they lived, and having once felt the smart of falling under a Premunire, were desirous to Proceed upon as sure Grounds as they could; and to have the License upon which they Acted, Granted to them in so full, and evident a mannner, as might take off all suspicion of Doubt, or Mistake, in their Acting upon it. This I am sure was the Case of the Lower House of Convocation, in the 1st of King Edward the VIth; and might possibly have been the Practice of some Other Convocations before.

In the mean time, those who the most oppose these kind of Licenses in Writing under the Great Seal of England, yet cannot deny them to have been the constant Usage for the last Hundred Years: And that, I think, is enough to warrant me, to say thus much, (which is all I shall say as to this Circumstance) That if any Other kind of Signification of the Princes Assent, and Authority, might in strictness of Law suffice to Justify the Proceedings of the Convocation, (which I shall neither affirm, nor deny) yet to be sure this must be the most secure: And therefore it will be most advisable for the Clergy, who have so much to hazard, should they chance to be mistaken, to go upon safe Grounds; and not to venture to Act, on any lesser, or more doubtful Authority, than that upon which their Predecessors have Acted, for, at least, an Age before them.

Having thus plainly stated my Opinion in this Particular; It will now be time to see how far Dr. A. agrees with me in it; and wherein the true difference between us do's consist. As for the terms in which he proposes this second Question, they are too loose, and mystical, to let us into his Sense of it.

Seet. 6.

His Definition of this Right of the Clergy runs thus: "A Right of Treating and Rights, &c.

"Deliberating about such Affairs as lie within their Proper Sphere; and of Coming P. 2, 78.

"to fit Resolutions upon them; without being necessitated antecedently to Qualify Themselves for such Acts, and Debates, by a License under the Broad Seal of England. A pompous Description, full of bigg Words, which Signify nothing at all: To every part of which I am ready to subscribe, and yet am far from believing, what Dr. A. pretends, to be the Right of the Clergy in this Case.

To come therefore a little more closely to the Point: And here in the first place, Dr. A. very seriously assures Us, "That the Clergy are not, by the

Ibid. p. 79

"Statute of King H. 8. tied up Altogether from Acting Synodically. That the "Convocation, however under a Restraint by that Act, is not become such a "lifeless Body, as to have neither Sense nor Motion till animated by a Second

"Royal Command. Unquestionably, and according to Common Opinion and "Practice, they have, even since this Statute, in vertue of the Writ by which "they meet, a Liberty of Addressing, as they shall see cause, either with Thanks

"or Requests, or other proper Representations. I am clearly of his Opinion, and have freely own'd it to be my Sense. If he knows of Any that have either Spoken, or Written otherwise, let him press it as Home as he Pleases upon Them.

"But

Ibid.

" But it is presumed also, that they may go a great deal farther ; and that there is nothing ( in that Act ) which hinders them even from Devising and Framing the Draught of a Canon, so it be done only in a preparatory Way, and with Submission to the Royal Enacting Authority. Here therefore it is, that Dr. A. both Expounds, and Limits, those Loose and Mystical Terms, which were so very hard to be Understood before. " The Right of treating and deliberating about such Affairs as lie within their proper Sphere, and of Coming to fit Resolutions upon them, without being necessitated antecedently to qualify themselves for such Acts and Debates by a Royal License ; is a Right of Devising and Framing the Draught of any Canon, at their own Pleasure, and by their own Authority, without any Licence from the Prince so to do.

Rights, &c.
p. 98, 99.

" As for the Limitation ( and the only one it is ) that he puts upon their Power in this Case, so it be done only in a Preparatory Way, and with Submission to the Royal Enacting Authority ; He thus interprets his own Meaning in it. " The Statute ( as far as it relates to the Power of the Clergy in Convocation ) plainly implies no more than that Canons should not from thenceforth Pass, and become Obligatory, without the King's Leave, and Authority, given in that behalf : Without his Leave, which was requisite to their Passing ; and his Authority, which was afterwards to Ratify, and Give 'em Force.

But what Do's Dr. A. mean by Passing ? Or, What is that Passing of Canons to which he allows the King's Leave to be Requisite ? He will tell us that too. 'Tis not in Order to their Passing of Either, or Both, the Houses of Convocation. ( For that they may do without the King's leave : ) But 'tis in order to the Archbishops Passing, or Ratifying of them ; for which He, indeed, needs the King's License, tho' the Clergy do not. Let us take it in his own Words :

Ibid. p. 99.

" The 25th of H. 8. has not in the least Altered the Law of Convocations, in Relation to Any of the Powers, or Privileges, of the Inferior Clergy. They can still freely Consult and Debate, Petition or Represent ; propose the Matter, or Form of New-Canons ; and consider about the Inforcing, or Abrogating Old ones : In a Word, Act in All Instances, and to All Degrees, as they Could before the passing of that Statute. Indeed, my Lord Archbishop's Hands are tied by it : For He cannot now Call a Convocation without the King's Writ, which before this Act he might, and in Elder times, frequently did. He cannot now Enact and Constitute any thing by his Own Authority. --- He must before he Passes any Act of the two Houses, have the King's Assent to it. And after it is Passed, there must be the King's License also to Promulge and Execute it. But the Powers and Privileges of All the Other Members of Convocation continue WHOLE and INTIRE to 'em, notwithstanding this Statute.

Sec. 7.

And here now, One would think, We might venture roundly to State Dr. A's Opinion in this Case ; and Affirm it to be plainly this, That by the Clergy of the Realm of England, spoken of in that Statute, as Submitting Themselves to the King's Majesty, and promising, in verbo Sacerdotii, that they would never from thenceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in ure, or to Enact, Promulge, or Execute any New-Canons, unless his most Royal Assent and License might to them be had, to Make, Promulge, and Execute the same ; We are to understand ( tho' by a pretty hard Cataphoresis ) the Two Archbishops ; who, by virtue of this Act, Alone are limited in their antient Power, both of Calling their Respective Synods, and of Acting in them : Whilst All the Other Members of Convocation, and particularly the Inferior Clergy, have their Powers and Privileges continued Whole and Intire to 'em, and may Act not only in All Instances, but to All Degrees, as they Could have done before the passing of that Statute.

But no ; Dr. A's Meaning is not so easily to be fathomed : For when he comes to Summ up his Opinion, in the very same Chapter, I find the Case is alter'd ; and the Powers and Privileges even of the Other Members of the Convocation, to be very different with him now, from what they were before the passing of that Statute. His State of this Point, as it stands there, is this.

Rights, &c.
p. 113, 114.

" That the CLERGY COMMONERS being Assembled ( in Convocation ) had Antiently a Right of Framing Canons, and doing several Synodical Acts ( not inconsistent with the Law of their Country ) without expecting the Prince's Leave for entering on such Debates, or Making such Decrees.

" The 25 H. 8. c. 19. has not in the least infringed this Right, as far as the LOWER CLERGY are concerned in it.

That

“ That the Limitations there made to the Exercise of it CHIEFLY (He should have said ONLY) concern the Archbishop of either Province: Who is now restrained, as from Calling a Convocation without the King's Writ, so from Passing or Ratifying any Canon, without the Royal Licence; and from Pro-mulging the same by his Own Authority.

“ That the Inferior Clergy are no otherwise concern'd, than to take Care that they give their Consent to no Canons framed by Themselves, or sent from the Upper House, otherwise than with Submission to the Royal Pleasure; if the King's Licence, and Assent be not before Obtain'd.

“ That they are therefore left intirely at their Liberty to Confer and Deliberate, even about New Canons, and also to Devise, Frame, and Offer them to the Upper House, if with a Protestation Annexed, that they are neither Intended, nor Desir'd to be Enacted, without the King's Licence.

So that now then it appears, that even the Inferior Clergy are thus far affected by that Act; that if They Pass, or Consent to any Canons, without the King's Licence first Obtained by them in that particular; they must Do it with a Protestation Annexed, that they do not thereby intend to give any Force to them, unless the King shall think fit to Approve and Confirm them. And whatsoever Dr. A. may fancy, I take This to be some, and that a very great Limitation of the Clergy's Power; whom yet he before Affirm'd to be still at Liberty to Act in All Instances, nay, and to All Degrees, as they could have done before the Passing of that Statute.

And this even Dr. A. himself, thinks to be of so Great a Consequence, as to make up, indeed, the whole of what is really Intended by those Licenses, which since 1603, have been constantly granted to our Convocations in these Cases; as far as the Clergy are concerned in them. For tho' in the License, there is a great deal more Expressed, yet this he takes to be That for which alone the Clergy either truly needed them, or did intend to Do by vertue of them. Thus speaking of the License of 1603, he tells us, That “ it is not a bare Li- Rights, &c.
“ cense to Treat that is there granted, but beyond this (as the Words run) a full, free, and lawful Liberty, License, Power, and Authority, to Confer, Treat, Debate, Consider, Consult and Agree of, and upon, such Canons, Orders, &c. Now tho' a License to Debate of Canons, was not necessary, according to the Act, yet a License to Agree upon them, might be judged necessary;— being liable to be construed to a Sense Equivalent to Enacting, or Making of Them; which, without the Royal Assent, and License, They (the Clergy) were by the Act expressly prohibited to Do. The same I find him repeating in several other Parts of his Discourse upon this Point; and from All together Conclude, that, according to his Opinion, tho' the CLERGY may, without a License, Debate upon Canons, yet They may not come to an Agreement upon them; Or, at least, not without a Solemn Protestation made, at the same time, that by such their Agreeing to Them, they neither Intend, nor Desire, to Enact them, without the King's Licence.

Whereas therefore, in the Enacting of a Canon, these several Steps may be consider'd; * That the Bishops and Clergy in Convocation, may first, in general, Debate of such Matters as may be fit to be Canonically Establish'd by them: * Then Resolve to frame a Canon, or Canons, upon them; and having so done, may in the next place proceed * to appoint some Person, or Committee, to draw up the Form of a Canon, to be presented to, and consider'd of by the two Houses; And lastly, having, upon Debate, agreed to the Form so drawn up, may finally * Conclude upon, and pass the same, as the last Act of the Convocation in this Case: My Opinion is, that supposing them thus to begin to Debate at first, in order to the Enacting of a Canon, or Constitution, (which the Judges rightly call Conferring to Constitute) and not in order to Petition the Prince for his License so to Do; They do, by the Statute of the 25th of H. 8. cap. 19. need a License in every Step that they take, from the First to the Last: Whereas Dr. A. affirms, that they need it only for the last Conclusive Vote; when they come finally to Agree upon, and to Enact the Canon before drawn and fitted to their Liking; which (if I mistake not) is the true, and only Difference between us, in this Particular.

II.

Let us proceed to Examine which of these Opinions has the best Authority to support it; and will be most for the Interest and Safety of the Clergy, to proceed by in their Convocations?

Sect. 2.

For the better judging of which, Dr. A. will give me leave, in the first place, to Observe, that how clear soever the Sense of the Act, upon which the Authority of the King, and the Restraint of the Clergy, in this case, is founded, may appear to Him, yet Others have thought that there is some Ambiguity in the Wording of it; and that such as may Do the Clergy a very great Prejudice, should their Enemies at any time take an advantage of it, and interpret it according to the strictest Sense and Meaning that the Words of it will bear: That Sense and Meaning which Dr. A. cannot but know has (for the last hundred Years at least) been generally thought to be the true one; and has, in fact, been preferr'd to that which he would here set up against it.

&c p. 46.

The Branch of that Act with which we are concerned, consists of two parts: The One, the Recital of the Clergies Submission and Petition; the Other, the Parliaments Enacting thereupon. The Words upon which the Dispute between us turns, are these; "That the Clergy shall not from henceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in ure, or Enact, Promulge, or Execute, any new Canons, &c. without the King's License. And the Question upon them, in short, is this; whether these Words thus joined together in One continued Sentence, are not to be understood to relate to One and the same Thing? Dr. A. Confesses, that as they lie in the Clergies Submission, <sup>1</sup> "there may seem to be an Ambiguity: "That is, in plain terms, They do All of them there seem to belong to New Canons, yet to be made. Let us see how he proposes the Difficulty, upon his second, and improved Thoughts, of this Matter <sup>2</sup> "For still a Doubt remains "behind, in relation to the Submission its self, recited in the Preamble of the Act, "and ACCORDING TO WHICH this Clause is said to have been Enacted. That Recital of the Submission bears, how the Clergy had promised, in verbo sacerdotii, not to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in ure, or to Enact, Promulge, or Execute, any New-Canons. Where, tho' the Words Attempt, Alledge, Claim, Put in ure, "are divided from the others, Enact, Promulge, Execute, by the particle Or; "which is used there in a Disjunctive Sense, on purpose to distinguish, and set "apart the two Comma's of this Sentence, and the two Sets of Verbs which have "place in each of them; yet All do nevertheless, at the End of the Sentence, "seem to Centre in New Canons. And should therefore the first set of Verbs, "as imploy'd in the Subsequent Clause (by it self consider'd) be Allowed to belong "to Old Canons only; yet that Clause being said to be Enacted ACCORDING TO "THE SUBMISSION before Recited, the Question still will be, whether by vertue "of that Relation they must not be extended to New, as well as Old Ones. This "is the only Difficulty that can possibly perplex our Exposition of the Act; but "there is a Consideration, or two, that will effectually clear it.

Seet. 9.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid.

Whether his Considerations do answer this Pretension, we will Enquire hereafter. That which I would at present observe from this Discourse, is this; that <sup>3</sup> he cannot deny, but that here is, after all, a just Ground of Doubt in this Matter: And that so Great, that no less a Man than our Learned Dr. Cosins, was clearly of Opinion, that these Words did All belong to New Canons; which therefore he thought the Clergy were not only restrain'd from finally Concluding upon, but were forbidden to Attempt, &c. without the Prince's Leave and Authority.

But <sup>4</sup> Dr. A. carries this Difficulty yet higher: He Acknowledges, that upon the first passing of this Act, the very Clergy themselves, for ought he knows, might have supposed, that their Liberty of Debate was Restrained by it, as well as their Power of Enacting. Now One would think, that those who made the Submission, upon which this Act was founded; and lived at the time when it passed the Parliament, should have the best understood the Sense of Both. And that it must needs be very dangerous for the Convocation at this distance, to proceed upon such a Meaning of this Act, as not only the Convocations of the whole Last Age durst not venture upon; but those very Men who lived at the time when this Act was made, did apprehend not to come up to the full Scope and Intention of it. "Indeed, the DOUBTFUL WORDING OF THE ACT, (says he) "might possibly give the Clergy some Alarm at first, and put them under Apprehensions, that their Liberty of Debate was Abridged by it; or, at least, that it might "be Construed so to be, by those who in those distressing times, were willing "enough to take any Advantage of them. He seems to refer to the Petition of the Lower House of Convocation, in the 1st of King Edward the sixth; of which, He elsewhere elsewhere tells us, that Supposing it to be Authentick,<sup>1</sup> “the preferring it shews, <sup>Ibid. p. 466.</sup> “that the Clergy Doubted whether a Commission might not be necessary to enable “them to Attempt, Entreat, and Commune, &c. From all which therefore, thus much I conceive, Dr. A. himself will allow me to conclude, that the Clause of the Act, upon which this Question turns, is not so plainly and clearly drawn, as not to leave some room for Doubt; and to be Capable, at least, of a Construction, different from that which he has given of it.

And accordingly Dr. A. himself instances in One very Eminent Person, who Dr. Cost.
did so Understand it, and Interpret it in the Sense which I the rather think to have been Intended by it. The Author of the first Letter to a Convocation-Man having proposed the Question, “Whether or no the Convocation may Confer after their Summons, and Meeting, without the King's Special License and Assent; acknowledged, that the Common Received Opinion was in the negative.<sup>2</sup> If I take Dr. A. aright, he allows the same thing: Where shewing, that the Clergy are not, by this Clause, TIED UP ALTOGETHER from acting Synodically, (in which I easily agree with him) adds, “<sup>2</sup> Unquestionably, and according to Common Opinion and Practice, they have, ever since this Statute, in Vertue of the Writ by “which they met, a Liberty of Addressing, as they shall see Cause, either with “Thanks, or Requests, or other proper Representations. But it is PRESUMED ALSO “that they may go a great deal farther. An Expression full of Caution, and preparatory to an Explication of this Statute, that was to run counter the Common Opinion before Spoken of, and to lead to a Singular, and Unpresidented, Practice.<sup>Ibid. p. 79.</sup>

How far that other<sup>2</sup> Passage of Dr. A. may be fairly interpreted to the same Purpose, p. 101; I shall rather leave it to others to judge, than undertake myself to determine. “In the mean time, says he, we will suppose the utmost “that can, by the Severest Interpretation of the Act, be pretended; that the “Clergy are, by it, Cut off from Forming the Draught of a Canon, or even Deliberating about One, without being particularly impower'd to that purpose. This is plain, that Those who the most insist upon Dr. A's Interpretation of this Statute of Submission, cannot deny, but that there are such Difficulties and Ambiguities in it, as have misled some of our greatest Men; (if yet they were misled) and made way for an Opinion to have generally obtain'd; that by vertue of it, the Clergy are Restrain'd, as well from Debating about, as from Enacting any Canons; and may not only not Make any without a License, but not so much as Conferr to Constitute, without being first Authorized by the Prince so to do.<sup>Ibid. p. 101.</sup>

For farther Proof whereof, give me leave to observe yet One thing more, which Dr. A. again Confesses, and which was indeed too well known to be denied; That for a Hundred Years past, (not to rise any higher at present) the Clergy in Convocation have not presumed to Attempt, any more than to Enact Canons, without the King's License and Authority first had in that Behalf. Sect. 10.
<sup>3</sup> From the 1st of King James the 1st, Dr. A. himself dates the Original of these kind of Licenses. And tho' he is very positive, that “there is not any Opinion for Rights, &c. p. 363, 364.
“the Necessity of such a License Elder than that; yet even that supposes, and it is certainly most true, that this Opinion has prevail'd, both among our Clergy and Lawyers ever since: Insomuch that, within our own Memories, when some Synodical Business was proposed to have been done without it; it was, by good Advice, stopp'd upon this very ground, that they could not with Safety Attempt such Matters, without being Authorized by the King to that Purpose.<sup>&c.</sup>

Let us put these Concessions together, and see what the Result of them will be. The Clergy, by the 25th of H. viii. c. 19, are laid under a Legal Restraint in the Business of Making Canons, &c. (for, as to Other Matters, I am as willing as Dr. A. to think that their Power is not Restrain'd.) Dr. A. is of Opinion, that They may Debate and Agree upon the Substance of any Canon, without a Previous Authority from the Prince; but that they may not, without incurring the Penalties of that Statute, Make or Enact it. Others have thought, (and Dr. W. with them do's think) that by the Tenour of that Statute, they are Restrain'd from Debating, in Order to the making of a Canon, unless they have the Queen's License, and Authority, in that behalf. Sect. 11.
<sup>4</sup> Of this, the Temporal Judges are to have the Resolution; and should the Clergy be cast in their Opinion, they would incur a Premunire, by Acting contrary to the Purport of that Statute.<sup>Hobart. R. p. fol. 83, 84.</sup>

Statute. It is confessed, that the Act is Doubtfully drawn: That the Recital of the Submission of the the Clergy, seems to favour our Opinion, and to Restrain them from Debating about, as well as from Enacting and Making of Canons, without the Queen's Leave. Several of our greatest Men have thus understood that Statute, and thereupon have thought, that since the Passing of it, the Clergy may of themselves no more Attempt, than they may Constitute a Canon. This has been the prevailing Sense, both of our Lawyers, and Divines, for these Hundred Years; scarce any body has made a Doubt of it. And in Consequence thereof, our Kings have, for so long at least, constantly granted them Licenses to Debate, no less than to Constitute; and our Convocations have never presumed, without such a License, to Attempt the One, any more than to Do the Other. I appeal to any Reasonable Person, by which of these two Opinions, Prudence and Interest, to say nothing of Peace and Charity, ought to move those Venerable Bodies to govern their Proceedings? And whether, without examining this Matter any farther, that Rule, which in such Circumstances is wont to be recommended as the wisest Direction, may not alone suffice to determine the Point between us, that in Doubtful Cases the safer side is to be chosen? And that this is (at least) a Doubtful Case, when Dr. A. has said all that he can, his own Friends must Allow; tho' I confess, for my own part, I make no doubt, should it ever come to the Tryal, on which side the Determination of our Judges would go.

But if Dr. A. thinks this Use of these Concessions to be too Great and Conclusive; (which I shall then Agree that it is, when I see the Convocations adventure to Act by those New Measures which he has proposed to Them; and not by those more safe, and prudent Rules, by which their Predecessors have, for these Hundred Years, governed themselves in their Conciliary Debates) let me, at least, beseech him to allow me thus much Favour from them; that I may be permitted, without any suspicious Design against the Rights of the Church, (for which, I do assure him, my Concern is as hearty and sincere, as 'tis possible for his to be) with the same Freedom to Defend the Judgment and Actions of our Princes, and Convocations, of the last Age, that he has used in Opposing the One, and Censuring the Other.

Sect. 12.

In order whereunto, I will

(1st.) Enquire into the genuine Sense of the Statute, 25 H. 8. c. 19.(2dly,) I will shew, what the Opinion of Our Reformed Clergy, and Others, has been, as to this Branch of it. And,(3dly,) Will examine, How our Convocations have proceeded, since the time of this Act: And whether it do's appear that ever they did, in Fact, Debate of, any more than Conclude upon, any Canons, &c. without the previous Authority of the Prince so to Do.

(1st,) To understand the genuine Sense and Meaning of the Statute, in this Particular, Three things there are that may be needful to be consider'd; and I shall take them, for the most part, as they lie in Dr. A's own Account of them. 1st, The Clergies Offers to the King in this Particular: 2dly, The King's farther Demand of the Clergy, to which they were finally forced to submit: And, 3dly, The Form of the Statute, which was afterwards drawn thereupon; and the Import of which we are now enquiring after.

As to the 1st of these, The Clergies Offers to the King; Dr. A. has furnish'd us with Three several Draughts: Concerning the two last of which, tho' I am not satisfied that they were ever presented to the King, as the Act of the Convocation, or did ever pass in Synod as such; yet I shall not deny, but that they may have been Composed by the Clergy, and perhaps Communicated to the King; to the end that being approved of by Him, they might afterward have been proposed to, and passed by, the Convocation.

Sect. 13.

In the first of these, in Answer to the Complaint of the Commons, that they made Sanctions and Laws of Temporal things, not having, nor requiring, the King's Royal Assent to the same Laws so by Them made; they justify themselves in such their Proceeding. They tell the King, that They had this Power of God, and could not Submit it to his Authority. That their Authority of Making Laws was grounded upon the Scripture of God, and Determination of Holy Church. And as concerning the Requiring of the King's Assent to the Authorizing of such Laws, as had been made by their Predecessors, or should be made by Themselves; they doubted not but that the King knew That to Depend not upon their Will and Liberty;

berly, who might not Submit the Execution of their Charges and Duty, certainly prescribed by God, to his Assent. All the Qualification they made of the Stiffness of this Answer, was only an insignificant Compliment, as to his Own Personal Qualifications; which, to correct the Fault of Dr. A's Transcript, more than for any other Use that is to be made of it, I shall here add: "Altho' in very Deed the same is most worthy, for your most Princely and Excellent Vertues, not only to Give your Royal Assent, but also to Devise and Command [That] we should for Good Order and Manner [by Statutes and Laws] provide in the Church. Nevertheless, considering we may not so, [Nor] in such sort, Restrain the doing of our Office in the Feeding and Ruling [of] Christ's People, your Grace's Subjects; we most humbly desire your Grace, as the same hath done heretofore, so from henceforth to shew your Grace's Mind and Opinion to us, what your [High] Wisdom shall think convenient; which we shall most gladly hear and follow; IF it shall please God to inspire us so to do.

When this Allegation would not satisfy either the King, or the Commons, but the Convocation saw that they must do somewhat more to comply with the Resolution of Both; New Forms were drawn, and several Debates were held, how to compound the Matter with the King, upon the best and easiest Terms, and with the least Diminution, that might be, of their Authority in this Particular. The next Step therefore which They took, was to try whether they might not get Leave to continue freely to Make Laws, without any Restraint in that Particular, but to have the King's License and Authority for the Publishing of such of Them in which the Laity were concerned. "We be contented, say they, to make Promise unto your Highness, that in all such Acts, Laws, and Ordinances, as upon your Lay-Subjects, We, by reason of our Spiritual Jurisdiction, and Judicial Power, shall hereafter make; We shall not PUBLISH, nor PUT THEM FORTH, except first we require your Highness to give your Consent and Authority unto Them: And so shall from time to time Suspend all such Our Acts, Ordinances, and Laws, hereafter to be made, unto such Time as your Highness, by your Consent and Authority, shall have Authorized the same; except they be such as shall concern the Maintenance of the Faith and good Manners in Christ's Church; and such as shall be for the Reformation and Correction of Sin, after the Laws of the Church, and laudable Customs, as hath been heretofore made, and hitherto receiv'd, and used, within your Realm. In which Point our Trust is, and in our most humble manner we desire your Grace, that it may so be, that upon the Refusal of your Consent, which we reckon [that] we need not fear, [but] yet if any [such] thing should fall [out,] your Highness will be then contented that we may Exercise our Jurisdiction, as far as it shall be thought necessary [unto] us, for the Maintenance of Christ's Faith, and for the Reformation of Sin, according to our Offices, and the Vocation that God hath Called us unto.

This was the next Advance that the Convocation seems to have made, in order to the King's Satisfaction. Before they only pray'd, that his Majesty would let them know his Mind and Opinion, touching what He thought convenient; which they would gladly hear and follow, if it should please God to inspire them so to do. Now, tho' they cannot part with any thing of their Power, which concerns the Making of Ecclesiastical Laws, for which they expressly tell Him, "They no more needed his Consent and License, by way of Authority, than for Giving of Holy Orders: Yet, having Made them, they are content to ask his Leave for PUBLISHING and PUTTING THEM FORTH; and promise to Suspend Them, till such Time as they had Attain'd his Consent so to do. This was something more than they had before Offer'd; but yet the Limitations, which they put upon this Concession, did almost take off all the Benefit of it. For, first, this was to take place in such Laws, Acts, and Ordinances, only, which were to be made upon His Majesty's Lay-Subjects. And that, secondly, but in such of them only, as did not concern Faith, or Good Manners; or were not intended for the Reformation and Correction of Sin, after the Commandments of Almighty God, according to the Laws of the Church, and Laudable Customs of the Realm; in which they still Reserve a Power to Themselves, not only to Make, but to Publish Constitutions too, tho' the King should not give, nay, tho' he should Refuse, his Consent to them.

Whether

Sect. 15. Whether this Draught were ever laid before the King, and disliked by Him; or whether, upon better Advice, the Convocation did not think fit to tender it all to Him, I cannot tell: But by the Copy of a Third, and more full Submission, in which they come up still nearer to the Kings Expectations, it appears that this Second Project would not satisfy. In that "they offer and promise that from henceforth they would forbear to Enact, Promulge, or put in Execution, any such Constitutions, so by them to be Made in time Coming, unless his Highness by his Royal Assent, should License them to Make, Promulge, and Execute such Constitutions; and the same so made, should be Approved by his Highnesses Authority.

Ibid. p. 27, 28.

Now this One would have thought, should certainly have Answer'd the Utmost of What was expected from them. But yet some Circumstances there were in the wording of this too, and some Omissions, which made even this Offer, large as it seemed to be, yet not Go down with the King; to whom, I conceive, it was Privately Communicated. For first, what they here promised was by the Lower House limited to the King's Life; and so a Provision was made for the Recovery of their full Authority again, as soon as that Prince should die: Which however he Himself might have Connived at; yet those who managed that Affair under him, were not Contented with it. In the second Article, which concern'd Canons already made, several Circumstances did not please. But that which was most considerable was, that in the Close of all, such a Salvo was Added, as might in time be improved to the utter Overthrow of All that had been done: For all which I shall refer to the Form it self, as Dr. A. has published it from the Cotton MS. Besides that now, another thing was started, and that too was to be Agreed upon; namely to put the Assembling of the Convocation, wholly into the King's Power; so that they should no more Meet without his Writ, than they should make any Canons, or Ordinances, without his License and Authority.

Here therefore the King himself thought fit to interpose: And since the Convocation could not agree on any Form that would please him, He resolv'd to draw up a Form for them; and to send it to them by this Almoner; and what it was that he therein demanded of the Clergy, is the next thing, 2dly, to be considered.

Sect. 16.

Now that was plainly this; To oblige themselves neither ever hereafter to Meet in Synod, without the King's Writ; nor being Lawfully Assembled by it, to Claim any Right, or to Proceed by Vertue of any Authority of their Own, to Make Canons or Constitutions, without the King's Royal Assent and Licence first had, and obtained by them, for that purpose. In their two first Papers, they had flatly and positively insisted upon a Divine Right, or Power, to Make Laws in Spiritual Matters; and Declared it to be such, as it was not in their Power to Give up. This in their last Paper they had not indeed Asserted, but neither had they let fall any one Word to shew that they had the least Intention to depart from it. They promised only, that they would forbear to Use it without the King's Consent; and One House expressly limited the time of this forbearance to the King's Life: But they gave no Security that they would not hereafter Resume it, as a Right, which having Receiv'd immediately from God, they could no more part with, than (in their Own Parallel) they could with their Power of Giving Orders. The King therefore, to secure all, resolv'd to tie them fast from ever stirring hereafter: They had Offer'd not to Make, Promulge, or Execute any Canons without his License. This, whilst they held to their Word, Restrained their Acting. But because they had asserted a Divine Right, and Authority to Make Laws, which they pretended it was not in their Power to part with; and so a Reserve was still left, whereby to evacuate, upon the first convenient Occasion, their present Promise; therefore, to foreclose this too, it was thought needful to their Own three Verbs, to add three others; namely, "That they should not from thenceforth presume to Alledge, Claim, or Put in Ure, any such Authority; nor, in Consequence of such their Authority, should Make, Promulge or Execute, any Canons without the King's License."

In their second Paper, they had told the King that they were Contented to make Promise, not to Publish such certain Laws by them to be made, without his Consent: And in their Third, That they should forbear to Enact, &c. without his Royal Assent and License. This the King thought to be but a cold and faint Assurance: He resolv'd resolv'd therefore to make it much stronger, and thereby to tie them the more closely to their Word. In Order thereunto he requir'd them to Promise, in Verbo Sacerdotii, not only that they would never from thenceforth presume to Alledge, Claim, or put in Ure any such Divine Right, as they had before stoutly Asserted; or by so doing to Make, Promulge, or Execute any Canons, without his License; but not so much as to Attempt either the One, or the Other. Now this cut off all Occasion of any future Troubles in this particular; and was design'd at once both to prevent the Breach of this Promise here made, and to remove all such Jealousies and Disorders, as might otherwise have been raised by some following Convocations, had they not been restrained from Attempting, as well as from Enacting Laws; that is from Entering upon any Canonical Debates, or Coming to any Synodical Resolutions, whether in Vindication of their Presumed Right to Act by a Divine Authority in this Case, without regard to the King's Allowance; or in order to the Making of Canons, tho' they should not give their last Sanction to them, till they were Empower'd by the King to that purpose.

This therefore, I look upon to have been the true Occasion of those Additional Words, which the King's Council inserted into the Form, in which the Clergy were Required to make their Submission. They were not only not to Assemble hereafter in Convocation without the King's Writ; but were moreover to Recognize that they had not any Right to Assemble without it. Being met, they were not only not to Make any Canons without the King's License; but were to Renounce all Claim that they had to any Power of Making them, otherwise than by his Permission. And to secure them in both, they were farther to promise not to Attempt any thing, that might either seem to favour such a Claim, or to tend to such a purpose. "We do offer and promise in Verbo Sacerdotii, here unto your Highness, submitting our selves most humbly to the same, that we will never from henceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or put in Ure, or to Enact, Promulge, or Execute, any Canons, Constitutions, or Ordinances Provincial, or by any Other Name whatsoever they may be called in our Convocation, in time coming (which Convocation is, always hath been, and must be Assembled only by your Highnesses Commandment of Writ) unless your Highness by your Royal Assent shall License Us to Make, Promulge, and Execute the same, and thereto give your most Royal Assent.

Additions
Appendp. 30.

To this Form of Submission Those of the Lower House, if Dr. A. says right, gave their Assent. They had, indeed, no reason to refuse it: For having before agreed not to Make, or Publish, any Canons without the King's License; what remain'd, was only a Renunciation of an Authoritative Power, or Right of Making them; which they, as Presbyters, neither by the Law of God, nor by the Canons of the Universal Church, could claim; and therefore it was no great Hardship for Them to Renounce a Power, which only the later Custom of our Own Country, had intituled them unto, and which was from thenceforth no more to be Used by Them, without the King's Assent and Authority. But these Circumstances stuck harder with the Bishops: They accounted themselves to have a Divine Right to this Authority, and that they could no more Renounce their Power to Make Laws in Spiritual Matters, for the Faith and Government of the Church, than their Power of Giving Orders. And tho' they might be content to Submit the Exercise of it to the King's Pleasure, so as not Actually to Make any such Laws without his Consent; yet they thought it a little severe to be Obliged to give up their Authority so to do: And to promise that they would no more Alledge, or Claim a Right, to Enact any Canons without the King's License, than they would Put such a Right in Ure, by an Actual Making of Them.

Seft. 17.

It was upon this Account, that I conceive, the Bishops demurr'd to the Form sent to them by the King; and tho' the Lower House was willing to Agree to it, yet tarried till the Temporal Lords, (who had been with them upon this Occasion) returned from the King to whom they had been sent by them, before they would conclude upon any thing. The Event shew'd what their Resolution was: The King was perswaded to dispense with those Words, which bore the hardest upon their Authority; and adding only the last of Putting in Ure, to those they had before Agreed to; to wit, Enact, Promulge, or Execute; to receive their Submission and Petition, in All other Circumstances, such as himself had prescribed to them. And now, the Words of their Submission ran thus: "We do Offer and Promise, in Verbo, Sacerdotii here unto your Highness, Submitting our selves most humbly to the same, that we will never from henceforth Enact, Put in Ure, Promulge, or Execute any New-Canons, or Constitution Provincial, or any New Ordinance Provincial, or Synodal, in Our Convocation or Synod, in time coming ( which Convocation is, always hath been, and must be Assembled only by your High Commandment or Writ ) unless your Highness by your Royal Assent, shall License us to Assemble Our Convocation, and to Make, Promulge, and Execute such Constitutions and Ordinances, as shall be made in the same, and thereto give your Royal Assent and Authority.

Thus passed this Submission in Our Convocation: Whether it was Revived by our Bishops and Clergy the next Year, or Communicated to those of the Other Province, and Subscribed to, in like manner, by Them; as I cannot tell, so it is not very material to enquire. Three things only I would beg leave to Observe from what has now been offer'd, before I proceed to consider the Statute which finally passed thereupon: Namely, 1st, That it is plain, that All these Words (be their Import what they will) which we have been hitherto speaking of, viz. Attempt, Alledge, Claim, Put in Ure, Enact, Promulge, and Execute; do apparently relate to the Submission, and the Promise which the Clergy thereupon made to the King, concerning Canons and Ordinances, HEREFTER to be PASSED by them. That they would not from HENCEFORTH presume to Attempt, &c. IN their CONVOCATION IN TIME COMING; unless the King should License them to Make, Promulge and Execute the same. And so the Bishops and Prelates understood it; and therefore to all the Other Words, tho' plain enough before; They expressly added, New Canons, and New Ordinances; and Call'd them such Constitutions as shall be made in Our Convocation. And, indeed, 'tis of these alone that the whole first branch of their Submission treats; the two latter (joyn'd by the Convocation into One) being purposely designed for such Canons and Constitutions, as had before been made; and were now in consequence of their Petition to be Reform'd.

2<sup>dly</sup>, That in Opposition to All these Several Words, as they relate to the Clergies Submission, viz. Attempt, Alledge, Claim, Put in Ure, Enact, Promulge, and Execute; these three stand with respect to the Kings Licence, viz. Make, Promulge, and Execute: The two last of which being the same in both; it will follow that the first must be understood in such a Latitude, as to answer to all the Rest; So that the King by Granting the Clergy a License to Make Canons, would at all times Grant them thereby a full Power to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, Put in Ure, and Enact them. And the Reason of this is evident; because that all these being but several steps necessary to be taken in Order to the Making of Canons, which the Clergy before might of themselves have done, and with the King's License still may Do; A License to Make Canons must needs be understood to intend a Permission to Do All such Things without which they cannot be Made: And so Enable them Legally not only to Enact; ( the last thing done in Making of Them ) but also to Attempt, to Alledge, and Claim a Power, with the King's Consent, and by his Permission, to Enact; and so Do all that was necessary, from first to last, to the Making of Canons and Constitutions.

3<sup>dly</sup>, That by those words, Attempt, Alledge, Claim, and Put in Ure, Somewhat more was meant by the King, and Understood by the Bishops and Prelates, than a bare Enacting: For otherwise there would have been no need of their demurring so long upon Them, and making such an Interest as we find they did, for the Omission of Them. For in All the Other Clauses they came fully up to the King's Own Terms; which indeed were, in effect, their Own Offer in their last Form of Submission; excepting only the Acknowledgment, and Promise of not Assembling in Convocation without his Writ: Which whether we consider the Common Practice of that Time, or their present Declaration, that the Convocation, was, always had been, as well as ought to be, so Assembled; we have no Reason to think did very much stick with them.

Here therefore I would ask; What did the King Aim at, and the Bishops so much desire to avoid; the One by inserting these Words into the Form of their Submission, the Other in the Interest they made for the Omission of them? Was it that they should not expressly Constitute, or Enact any New-Canons, without the King's License? They had before Offer'd it: They still Agreed to Oblige them-themselves to that. But what was it then that they differ'd about? I have before shewn that the Bishops Supposed themselves to have a Right and Power given to them by Christ to Make Laws; and that such a Power, the Granting whereof depended not upon their Own Will and Liberty, nor could they submit it to the King's Pleasure. This they insisted upon not only in their first Answer to the Commons Petition, but in their next Draught; tho' I think not passed, yet it may be privately Communicated to the King. Here now was a Salvo still reserved, whereby to Vacate, upon Occasion, All that they should promise in this matter. They had no power to part with this Right; and therefore their Promise by which they did it, was from the beginning Null, and of no Force. This Pretence therefore, I suppose, it was that the King resolved to foreclose, by the Addition of these Words: Which as they clearly relate to New Canons hereafter to be made in Convocation; so I think they cannot be more naturally Understood, than of their Attempting, or Endeavouring, by some Synodical Act, (for of such only we are now speaking) to Alledge, or Claim a Divine Right, or Power (notwithstanding their present Promise to the King) and in Vertue thereof to Put such their Alledged, and Claim'd Power in Ure; by Conferring, Drawing, Consenting to, and so finally Enacting of Canons as before: All which they were hereby Required utterly to Renounce; and to promise, in Verbo Sacerdotii, that they would not make any such Attempt, in any of their Convocations, in Time Coming. This is my humble Opinion, as to the Meaning and Occasion of these Words: If Dr. A. can suggest any better, or more rational Sense of them, I shall be ready with the utmost Impartiality to consider it; and if I see cause as freely to Embrace it.

To proceed now 3dly, To the Act of Parliament drawn, the next Year, upon this Submission; the Meaning of which we are endeavouring, from these Premises, to Clear. And here it may be fit, in the first place, to take notice, that as this whole Transaction began in the House of Commons, and took its Rise from their Complaint to the King against the Proceedings of the Bishops and Clergy in Convocation, so the Statute which was form'd thereupon, began in that House too; and was from thence not sent, but brought up to the Lords, on March the 27th; but three days before the Parliament Rose. They still persisted in their Prosecution of this Matter; and were resolved by the Present Act, to hold the Clergy to their Promise, and thereby to deprive them, beyond all hope of Recovery, of their Antient Authority in this Particular. And accordingly we may observe how in the Wording of it, they have all along taken the strictest Expressions of both the Forms; I mean of that which the King sent to the Convocation; and of that which the Convocation passed, and presented to the King as their Act. So that we cannot think that they design'd to Enact any thing in Favour of the Bishops and Clergies Authority; Or to take off from the Force of any thing that either the King had Requir'd of Them, or They had Themselves promised the King in this Particular.

Seet. 19.

The Ground on which they went, was the Submission and Petition of the Clergy; which as the Convocation had Reduced from Three, to Two Articles, so in that the Commons followed their Steps. The Submission, in both, Referr'd to what concern'd New Canons hereafter to be made: The Petition, to such as had been before Made; and were then design'd not only to be Review'd, but being Approved by the Commissioners Appointed for that purpose, to be Ratified by Civill, as well as by Ecclesiastical Authority.

If therefore in drawing up of this Act, the Parliament first distinctly Recite the Submission of the Clergy in the same Order, and under the same Articles, in which the Clergy presented it to the King; and then proceed as distinctly to ENACT upon it: If One of these Articles, both in the Clergies Submission, and in the Parliaments Recital, expressly treats of Canons hereafter to be made; the Other of CANONS already in being, which were to be Review'd: And if there be nothing in the Enacting part, but what does as Plainly and Methodically relate to Both, in the same Order in which they had before made their Recital; then, I think, I may presume to affirm, that in Interpreting of this Statute, we ought not to disturb the apparent Order, and Method of it; but to take each part as it lies with Relation to its proper Subject; The first Enacting Clause, as referring to the first Reciting Clause, the Submission; The Other to the Second, the Petition of the Clergy.

Sect. 20.

Now that this Method was thus strictly observed, as I have affirmed, both by the Convocation, and Parliament, as I cannot offer any more unexceptionable Proof than that of their Own Records to shew; so shall I not need to appeal to any Other. The several Draughts of which, for the Greater Evidence of this Matter, I will here set down, in several distinct Columns, as they answer to One another.

Append. p. 33;
34.The Convocations Submission.

We your most Humble Subjects, Daily Oratours, and Beadsmen of your Clergy of England, having our Special Trust and Confidence in your most excellent Wisdom, your Princely Goodness, and Fervent Zeal to the Promotion of God's Honour, and Christian Religion, and also in your Learning, far exceeding in Our Judgment the Learning of all Other Kings and Princes that we have Read of; and doubting Nothing but that the same, shall still Continue, and daily increase in your Majesty;

I.

First do Offer and Promise, in verbo Sacerdotii, here unto your Highness, SUBMITTING our selves most humbly to the same, that we will never from henceforth Enact, Put in Ure, Promulge, or Execute any New Canons or Constitution Provincial, or any New Ordinance Provincial or Synodal, in Our Convocation, or Synod in time coming (which Convocation is always, hath been, and must be Assembled only by your high Commandment or Writ) unless your Highness by your Royal Assent, shall License Us to Assemble our Convocation, and to Make, Promulge, and Execute SUCH Constitutions and Ordinances as shall be made in the Same, and thereto give your Royal Assent and Authority.

Where the King's Humble and Obedient Subjects the Clergy of this Realm of England have not only Knowledge according to the Truth that the Convocations of the same Clergy is / always hath been / and ought to be Assembled only by the King's Writ / But also SUBMITTING themselves to the King's Majesty /

I.

Have promised in Verbo Sacerdotii that they will never from henceforth presume to Attempt Alledge Claim or Put in Ure or Enact Promulge or Execute any New Canons Constitutions Ordinance Provincial or Other or by whatsoever other Name they shall be called in the Convocation unless the King's most Royal Assent and License may to Them be had to Make Promulge and Execute the Same / and that his Majesty do give his most Royal Assent and Authority in that behalf /

Their Enacting upon that Recital.

Be it therefore now Enacted by Authority of this present Parliament According to the said SUBMISSION and PETITION of the said Clergy.

I.

That They ne any of Them from henceforth shall presume to Attempt Alledge Claim or Put in Ure any Constitutions or Ordinances Provincial or Synodals or any Other Canons nor shall Enact Promulge or Execute any SUCH Canons Constitutions or Ordinance Provincial by Whatsoever Name or Names they may be called in their Convocations in time coming which alway shall be Assembled by Authority of the King's Writ / unless the same Clergy may have the King's most Royal Assent and License to Make Promulge and Execute SUCH Canons Constitutions and Ordinances Provincial or Synodal upon pain of Every one of the said Clergy doing contrary to this Act / and being thereof Convicted to suffer Imprisonment and make Fine at the King's Will /

II.

II.

Secondarily, That whereas divers of the Constitutions, Ordinances, and Canons Provincial, or Synodal, which hath been heretofore Enacted, be thought to be not only much prejudicial to your Prerogative Royal, but also overmuch Onerous to your Highness Subjects, your Clergy aforesaid is Contented if it may stand with your Highness Pleasure, that it be committed to the Examination and Judgment of your Grace, and of 32 Persons, whereof 16 to be of the Upper and Nether House, of the Temporality, and Other 16 of the Clergy; All to be chosen and appointed by your most Noble Grace: So that, finally, which soever of the said Constitutions, Ordinances, or Canons, Provincial, or Synodal, shall be thought and determined by your Grace, and by the most part of the said 32 Persons, not to stand with God's Laws and the Laws of your Realm, the same to be abrogated, and taken away by your Grace and the Clergy; and such of Them as shall be seen by your Grace, and by the most part of the said 32 Persons, to stand with God's Laws, and the Laws of your Realm, to stand in full Strength and Power, Your Graces most Royal Assent and Authority once impetrate, and fully Given to the same.

II.

And where divers Constitutions Ordinances and Canons Provincial or Synodal which heretofore hath been Enacted and be thought not only to be much Prejudicial to the King's Prerogative Royal and Repugnant to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm / but also overmuch onerous to his Highness and his Subjects / the said Clergy hath most humbly BESOUGHT the King's Highness that the said Constitutions and Canons may be committed to the Examination and Judgment of his Highness and of 32 Persons of the King's Subjects whereof 16 to be of the Upper and Nether House of the Parliament of the Temporality / and other 16 to be of the Clergy of this Realm / and All the said 32 Persons to be chosen and appointed by the King's Majesty / And that such of the said Constitutions and Canons as shall be thought and determined by the said 32 Persons or the more part of them worthy to be abrogated and annulled / shall be Abolite and made of no Value accordingly / And such other of the same Constitutions and Canons as by the said 32 or the more part of them shall be approved to stand with the Laws of God and Consonant to the Laws of this Realm shall stand in their full Strength and Power / the King's most Royal Assent first had and obtained to the same

II.

And forasmuch as such Canons Constitutions and Ordinance as heretofore hath been made by the Clergy of this Realm cannot now at the Session of this Present Parliament by Reason of Shortness of time be Viewed Examined and Determined by the King's Highness and 32 Persons to be chosen and appointed according to the PETITION of the said Clergy in form above Reherced / Be it therefore Enacted by Authority aforesaid that the King's Highness shall have Power and Authority to Nominate and Assign at his Pleasure the said 32 Persons of his Subjects whereof 16 to be of the Clergy and 16 to be of the Temporality of the Upper and Nether House of the Parliament / And if any of the said 32 Persons so Chosen shall happen to die before their full Determination / then his Highness to Nominate Other from time to time of the said two Houses of the Parliament to supply the Number of the said 32 And that the said 32 by his Highness so to be Named shall have Power and Authority to View Search and Examine the said Canons Constitutions and Ordinance Provincial and Synodal heretofore made / And such of them as the King's Highness and the said 32 or the more part of them shall deem and adjudge worthy to be continued Kept and Obedied shall be from thenceforth Kept Obedied and Executed within this Realm so that the King's most Royal Assent under his Great Seal be first had to the same / And the Residue of the said Canons Constitutions and Ordinance Provincial which the King's Highness and the said 32 Persons or the more part of them shall not approve or deem and judge Worthy to be abolit abrogate and made frustrate shall from thenceforth be Void and of None Effect and never be put in Execution within this Realm /

Such

Such is the plain Method, and Tenor of this Act, as far as concerns this Matter; after which follow two Proviso's, in the very same Order:

I.

With Respect to Canons, &c. hereafter to be made.

* This Proviso was added by the Lords, and agreed to by the Commons.

Provided alway that no Canons Constitutions or Ordinance shall be made or put in Execution within this Realm by Authority of the Convocation of the Clergy which shall be Contrariant or Repugnant to the King's Prerogative Royal or the Customs Laws or Statutes of this Realm, any thing contained in this Act to the Contrary hereof notwithstanding

II.

With Respect to Canons which had before been Enacted.

* Provided also that such Canons Constitutions Ordinances and Synodals Provincial being already made which be not Contrariant nor Repugnant to the Laws Statutes and Customs of this Realm nor to the damage or hurt of the King's Prerogative Royal shall now still be Used and Executed as they were afore the making of this Act till such time as they be Viewed Searched or otherwise Ordered and Determined by the said Thirty two Persons or the more part of them according to the Tenor Form and Effect of this present Act

Seet. 21.

And here now let any indifferent Person judge, whether in so plain and clear a Method, there can be any Doubt made to what Canons, and Constitutions, each part of this Act Refers. The Clergy first SUBMITTING themselves to the King's Highness, offer and promise, not to Make any New Canons without his License. The Parliament, in the same Terms Recite, how that SUBMITTING themselves to the King's Majesty, they had Promised the same. The Clergy, secondarily, declare themselves CONTENTED to have such Canons, &c. as had been heretofore Enacted, Reviewed by the King, and Thirty two Persons, to be Nominated by him for that purpose. The Parliament Recite how they had BESOUGHT the King in the same Case, for a Review of those Canons, after the same manner which they had proposed in their Address to him. Having thus made a distinct Recital of the Submission and Petition of the Clergy; the one, as we have seen, with the Relation to New, the other to Old Canons; They as distinctly ENACT therupon, according to the said SUBMISSION and PETITION of the said Clergy: First, concerning Canons hereafter to be made; that they should not Presume to Attempt, &c. (the very words of their Recital) without the King's License. Then, concerning Canons, which had before been made, according to the PETITION of the said Clergy, to the like effect of their Own Recital, in the Introductory part of the Statute. The Method is Clear, and Natural, in all: The Parliament's Recital, agrees with the Clergies Address; and both with the Enacting part: And I think leaves it beyond all reasonable Doubt, that the first Paragraph, in every one, is to be Interpreted only, and wholly, of New Canons; the Latter, of Old; without confounding and intermixing the One with the Other, not only in the same Sentence, but in the middle of the same Words; without the least Ground or Intimation given, to warrant such a sudden, and Unaccountable Change.

Seet. 22.

To this Evidence, thus arising from the obvious Scope and Method of the Act, which is very clear, and exact; let us, secondly, add the Relation which the Words themselves have to the Form of Submission sent by the King to the Convocation. It cannot reasonably be Doubted but that the Words Attempt, Alledge, Claim, and Put in ure, did there as certainly belong to New Canons, as the others which follow in the same Uninterrupted Sentence with them, Enact, Promulge, and Execute. Nor can it any more be doubted, but that from thence the Parliament transcribed them into their Recital in this Act, in the same order, and with Relation to the same Subject. For thus they express themselves; "that the Clergy had Promised, in verbo Sacerdotii, that they would never from henceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in ure, or Enact, Promulge, or Execute, any New Canons. How can it be imagined that such a Grave and Wise Body, as the Parliament, should, in their Sanction upon this very Submission, after such a plain Recital, intend to depart from that manifest Relation which these these Words had to New Canons; and proceeding to Enact, in the same Words, and in the same Order, design by the the first four to Abrogate all the Old Canons then in being (of which not the least Intimation had been any were Given by them) by the last Three to prohibit the Clergy from Making New Ones, without the King's License: And all this without adding any One Word to shew that they had any other Canons in their view when they came to Enact, than those to which both the King's Paper sent to the Convocation, and their Own Recital from it, had Applied those Words before.

Nay let me add yet more, Thirdly; They not only give no intimation of any design to Change the Subject, concerning which they were Enacting in that first Paragraph; but in the Original Record of this Statute, still remaining, there is not so much as the Distinction of a Point to shew, that these Seven Verbs were to be thus strangely separated from One another, and Applied to two such different, or rather opposite, Subjects and Purposes. They all follow both in the Recital, and Sanction, of the Act, just as they lay in the King's Paper; with several Marks of Conjunction, but without any thing to shew that they were not to be All applied to the same Intent of Regulating the Convocation in the making of New Canons. The Record carries the Sense thus, in the Recital; That the Clergy had promised in Verbo Sacerdotii that they would never from henceforth presume to Attempt Alledge Claim or Put in ure or Enact Promulge or Execute any New Canons Constitutions Ordinances Provincial or Other or by whatsoever Other Name they shall be Called in the Convocation unless the King's most Royal Assent and License may to them be had to make promulge and execute the same. In all this Sentence there is not one Point; but all runs from the Beginning to the End, in a Continued Sense, the Whole relating to the same Matter. The Case is the same in their Sanction upon this Recital: For tho' there the Verbs are divided, the better (as I conceive) to shew that the Clergy were to be Restrained not only from Enacting, Promulging, or Executing of Canons, without the King's License; (as some would now have it, and the Bishops heretofore would only have been) but also from Attempting, Alledging, Claiming, or Putting in ure, any Power to to make any such Canons, without the like Authority (from which tho' they had no mind to be Restrained, yet the Parliament was resolved to tie them up;) yet in the whole Sentence there is again no Point; but the whole runs in the same continued Sense, without Interruption, and without Distinction: Be it therefore now Enacted by Authority of this Present Parliament according to the said Submission and Petition of the said Clergy that they ne any of them from henceforth shall presume to Attempt Alledge Claim or Put in ure any Constitutions or Ordinances Provincial or Synodal or any other Canons nor shall Enact Promulge or Execute any such Canons &c. Unless the same Clergy may have the King's most Royal Assent and License, &c. Now this, I think, plainly shews the Parliaments Intention; which would never have thus closely united all the parts of their Sanction in this Act, had they designed they should have Related to two such different Subjects, and have operated to such different Purposes, in its Force and Effect. And accordingly those who change their Sense, have in order thereunto made as bold with their Punctuation; and divided these Words as much in their Transcript, as they have in their Interpretation.

Sect. 23.

However, 4thly, let us see how it will run according to their own Construction: "Be it therefore now Enacted, by Authority of this present Parliament, according to the said Submission and Petition of the said Clergy; that "They, ne Any of them, from henceforth shall presume to Attempt, Alledge, "Claim, or Put in Ure any Constitutions, or Ordinances, Provincial or Synodal, or any Other Canons, which have heretofore been made. Will Those who advance this Sense of these Words, be pleas'd, first of all, to tell us, where the Clergy did ever Submit to, or Petition for, any such thing? That they agreed to have those Canons Reviewed; That they Consented, that such of Them as, upon the Review, should be thought and determined worthy to be Abrogated and Annulled, should be Abolite and Made of no Value accordingly; both the Parliament Recites, and their own Petition witnesses. But to be so rigorously tied up, that they should not from thenceforth presume at all, or (to state it to the best Advantage) not without the King's Express License first had and obtain'd, to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in ure, Any Constitutions, or Ordinances, Provincial, or Other, or any Oth Canons; and so put it at once in the King's Power

Sect. 24.

Power to Suspend, or even totally to Destroy the whole Ecclesiastical Polity, Jurisdiction, and Authority of the Church; which, according to this Sense, could from henceforth neither Put in ure any Old Canons, nor Make any New ones, without his License first had and obtain'd; was a Submission much greater than for ought yet appears, the King ever Required, or the Clergy ever Designed, or the Parliament ever Pretended that they had Made. On the contrary, to prevent all Doubt of their Meaning in this Particular, they expressly provided for the Proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Courts, by these very Canons, as before: That till such time as they were Reviewed, they should still be Used and Executed, as they were before the Making of this Act; that is, without any License first Ask'd, or Obtain'd, from the King, to that Purpose.

But we will go on with their Sanction, according to this supposed Sense of it: "Be it Enacted, &c. That they ne any of them shall from henceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in ure any Constitutions or Ordinances Provinciall or Synodall, or any other Canons which heretofore have been made. (So we are now to Expound it) "Nor shall Enact, Promulge or Execute any SUCH CANONS Constitutions or Ordinance Provincial, &c. unless the same Clergy may have the King's most Royal Assent and License to Make Promulge and Execute SUCH Canons Constitutions and Ordinances Provincial or Synodal. Can we imagine that the Parliament ever intended to Enact after so strange a Rate? To forbid the Clergy to Enact such Canons as were already Enacted, unless they first obtain'd the King's License to Enact the same? Yet this we must suppose, if the former part of that Sentence be to be understood of Old Canons; for to them the Relative SUCH do's evidently Apply the Canons, Constitutions, &c. which follow, and shew that we are to understand the same Canons, &c. in both the Members of it.

And this again, those who give us this Meaning, seem to have been aware of; who therefore, in their Explication of this Act, drop that Relative altogether, as if there were no such Term there; as indeed there ought not to have been, had the Parliament design'd to have been understood of One sort of Canons in One part, of Another in the Other part of the same Sentence. Upon all which Accounts, till I am better inform'd, I shall beg Leave to Conclude, that the King and the Parliament both intended the same thing: And that what they intended, consisted of two Parts; to One of which the Bishops had Agreed, namely, not to Enact, Put in ure, Promulge, or Execute, any New Canons, without the King's Leave; to the Other they had demurr'd, but were now by this Act constrain'd to Submit, viz. That they should not Attempt, Alledge, nor Claim, any more than not Put in ure, &c. any Such Canons; unless they had the same License for the One, which they had Agreed to Expect for the Other.

What those Words were designed to Restrain them from, I have already adventured from their Own Papers, as Publish'd by Dr. A. to Conjecture; viz. That it was to keep them from all future Endeavours to Recover the Power they now gave up; by Restraining them from Attempting, as well as from Enacting of any Canons, without the King's Authority: From Alledging and Claiming, as well as from Putting in ure, any Divine and Unalienable Right in this Case; which it was not in their Power to part with, and against which therefore all that the King had Required, and they Done, in Compliance with his Desires, was absolutely Null, and of no Force; as in some of their first Papers they had intimated to him that it would be.

But of this let every one judge as he pleases: It is sufficient to my Purpose, that by these Words the Convocation was design'd to be Restrain'd from somewhat else besides the Enacting of Canons, which was antecedent to it, and if done, would naturally End in it. If Dr. A. can tell us what that could have been, besides Conferring to Constitute, Concluding upon Draughts of Canons, and putting of those Draughts into their last Form, that the Clergy were wont heretofore to Do, but without the King's License may not do now, I am satisfied: My Aim being only to keep the Clergy from incurring the Penalty of this Act, not to restrain them from any Liberty which they may securely take within the Purport of it.

To these Arguments, drawn from the Method and Words of the Statute itself, compared with the Submissions and Petitions of the Clergy, upon which it was framed, I shall add yet two Observations more; which, tho' they do not directly serve to Expound the Act before us, may help to let us into a farther ther Understanding of the Design of those who drew it, and to shew what they meant in it.

Among other Arguments at first alledged by the Convocation, why they could not Oblige themselves to ask the King's License to make Canons, that which they the most strongly insisted upon was, "That they reputed and took their Authority of making Laws to be Grounded upon the Scripture of God, and Determination of Holy Church; and that therefore they might not Submit the Execution of their Charges and Duties, certainly prescribed by God, to the King's Assent. This they again repeated in their second Paper, wherein they say, that this Power and Authority of making Laws, in Matters concerning Faith and Good Manners, necessary to the Soul's Health, all Christian Princes have hitherto reckoned themselves Bound to suffer the PRELATES to use within their Realms; and have not claimed of the same Prelates, that they should from time to time Require their Consent or License by the way of Authority more in making of such Laws, than they do claim that they the said Prelates should from time to time Require their Consents Authorizable in the Giving of Holy Orders to any of their Subjects, or in the Exercising any other Spiritual Act depending upon their Spiritual Jurisdiction, the Authority whereof proceedeth immediately from God, and from no Power or Consent Authorizable of any Secular Prince. And yet we know how this very Prince, about the same time, and by the Advice of the same Ministers, who now prompted him to restrain the Bishops in Convocation from Exercising this part of their Authority, without his License; did also Restrain them from the Exercise of all the other branches of their Episcopal Jurisdiction, here spoken of, without the like License first had under the Great Seal of England so to do. Of this we have a very early Instance still upon Record, not long after the passing of this Act; a Commission Granted to Fox Bishop of Hereford, to exercise his Episcopal Jurisdiction; the very Person, who was the King's Almoner, when the Submission passed in Convocation, and brought them the King's Form, upon which they Submitted, to it. In these Commissions of License, it is Asserted (how truly I am not now to dispute) "that all manner of Jurisdiction; as well Ecclesiastical as Secular, flows from the King's Power, as from its Supreme Head; that it therefore ought to be acknowledged as owing meerly to his Royal Bounty, and to be given back to him whenever He should think fit to Require the same. Upon this Ground, the King Authorizes the Bishops to Give Orders; to grant Institution to Benefices; to Deprive Ministers, if need were; to Visit their Chapters, and Diocesses; and all this only during Pleasure.

Thus did the King bring the whole Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction within his Own Power; so that without his License, neither could the Bishops in Convocation make any New Canons; nor out of it, Execute any part of their Episcopal Authority, pursuant to the Old Ones. And as in the One, the Bishops were not permitted, without his Commission or LICENSE first had to impower them so to do, to Exercise any Preparatory Acts, in the Other Instances of their Authority (Attendant, the Chief Word of the Act of Parliament, is the very Word of the King's Prohibition in the Other Case, of which I am now speaking) but were presumed to be utterly Void of all manner of Ability to do any thing in that respect, till they had received the King's License, from whom their Whole Jurisdiction, as to the Actual Exercise of it, is said to flow: So much more in the Other Case, where this Matter is more fully express'd, may we justly suppose it to have been the King's Design to Restrain them from all Manner of Use of their Legislative Authority, till by the like License they should be enabled and allow'd, to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, and Put in Ure such their Authority; and in pursuance thereof, to Enact, Promulge, and Execute Canons and Constitutions, according to the Form and Method therein prescribed to them.

And that which further confirms me in the same Opinion, is, secondly, the Consideration of that Model of Ecclesiastical Government, which seems to have been lay'd by those who had the Chief Management of these Matters; which was plainly this: To Restore the Use of Diocesan and Provincial Councils, for the Ecclesiastical Government of the Diocesses and Provinces of the Realm; and therein, to transact those Affairs which were properly Conciliary; and which only the Later Practice of the foregoing Century, had brought within the Cognisance of the Convocation.

Sect. 27.

<sup>1</sup> Reformat.
Legum Ecclef
Tit. de Ecclef.
cap. 12, 19, 20.

That this was the Design of our first Reformers, the Body of Ecclesiastical Laws drawn up by Authority of that very Act of which we are now speaking, sufficiently shews: Wherein it is directly appointed, 'that every Bishop should hold his Diocesan Synod, every Year; And each Archbishop his Provincial Council, not statedly, or within any Certain Period of Time, (as Dr. A. pretends) but upon a just occasion; <sup>2</sup> Si contigerit in Ecclesia Gravem aliquando exoriri Causam, as the Constitution expresses it. For the Laws of the Church being now to be fully settled by Authority of Parliament, and thereby a Provision to be made for the Ordinary Government of it, the only need there could be for such an Assembly, must arise from some new Emergency, which had not been before sufficiently foreseen, or by consequence, provided for: And then the Archbishop, in whose Province it fell out, was to Convene his Provincial Bishops, and with them to Deliberate about it; and agree upon such Remedy as they should think needful in it. These Councils were to be called for that End Jussu ac Voluntate Regis; and being so Assembled for such a Particular Affair, and allow'd to meet upon it; they would also have been Licensed, as the Act directs, to do the Business for which they were Convened.

Now this being the Model to which the Church-Government was designed to be Restored; That the Ordinary Jurisdiction, and Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity, were to be first Established by Authority of Parliament, and that for all Greater Contingencies, which had not before been provided against, Provincial Councils were to be held from time to time by the King's Authority; it is plain, that the Business of the Convocation would have hereby been reduced to what it was Originally call'd for, I mean to Matters of Civil Interest; to such Affairs as the Clergy were to transact as Members of the Community, not as the Ministers and Governors of the Church. By consequence those who went upon this Design, must have intended to have utterly Restrained the Prelats and Clergy from meddling with any Canonical Matters There: From Attempting, as well as from Making of Canons, &c. which were no longer to be the Work of that Convention, but to be separately done in a proper Church-Council.

Let us now put this whole Matter together: That the Notion of King Henry the 8th, and his Council, was, that All Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction flow'd Originally from the Crown; was Owing to his Bounty, and might be Limited or Revoked by Him at his Will*; That, in pursuance hereof, he permitted not his Bishops to ATTEMPT or Exercise the most proper Acts of their Episcopal Function, but by his LICENSE and Commission; * That his Intention, with respect to the Convocation in particular, was, to Reduce it to the proper Business of a State Assembly; and for all Greater Church Matters, which concern'd the whole Province, to Revive the Usage of Provincial Councils, to which the Bishops of the Province only should be Summon'd; and for the rest, to leave it to every Bishop within his own Diocess, to hold his Yearly Synod for the better Ordering the Discipline and Government thereof; * And then let us consider the Words of the Act, upon which the Restraint of the Convocations Power is founded, and Compare it with the Form of Submission upon which it was drawn; and after this judge, whether that Prince, and that Parliament, must not have designed wholly to tie up their hands in all Matters of Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction; and to have forbidden them not only to Enact any Canons without his License, but to enter on any previous Acts, in order thereunto, without his Knowledge and Permission.

Seet. 28.

But against this Sense of that Act, Dr. A. excepts as an Error only of the last Age; which he thinks ought to be Reform'd, and set to rights, among some other Convocational Affairs, in This.

To make this Exposition pass off the better; instead of beginning in the Natural Order, with the Submission of the Clergy, and the Sense of that first, and so proceeding to the Act which was made upon it; He falls directly upon the Statute; and even in that too, passes by the manner of its Recital, and goes straight on to the Enacting part; which being thus separated from the rest, might, he supposed, afford him the better Opportunity of putting such Colours as he had now Occasion to lay upon it.

"<sup>3</sup> The Words of the Act, says he, are; That They, ne any of Them, shall from henceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in Ure any Constitutions or Ordinances Provincial or Synodal, or any Other Canons: Nor shall Enact, Promulge, or Execute any such Canons, &c. unless the same “ Clergy may have the King’s most Royal Assent, and License, to Make, Promulge, “ and Execute, such Canons, Constitutions, and Ordinances. Here (continues he)

 “ are Two several Things distinctly prohibited to the Clergy; in two different Mem- “ bers of this Clause, that have each their proper Verbs, and those Verbs Substan-

 “ is PLAINLY intended to Vacate all the Canons already made; the second, to “ hinder the Clergy from making any such for the future, without Leave of the

How false, as well as arbitrary, this Division of the present Clause of this Statute is; how contrary to the Scope and Method, both of the Submission of the Clergy, and the Recital of this very Act; nay, and to the Words of this very Sanction too, which not only Enacts According to their SUBMISSION, but by the Relative SUCH, in the Latter part of the Sentence, plainly shews that the same kind of Canons are to be understood in the One, of which mention had been made in the Other, I have already shewn; and shall not need again to repeat here, what I have so largely insisted upon but just before. Three Considerations there are which Dr. A. offers in Proof of his Interpretation; and what Force there is in Any, or All of them, to Confirm it, I now proceed to enquire.

The first of Them is this; That the entire Clause is said to be Enacted, according to the before Recited Submission and Petition of the Clergy: But their Submission Referr’d to the Canons hereafter to be made; their Petition to Those which had been already made; and therefore both these must have been included within the Sanction of it. Will Dr. A. excuse me if I say, that All this is but meer Supposition, without any Evidence or Authority, to Support his Conjecture. This Clause was, he says, Enacted, according to the Submission and Petition of the said Clergy. How do’s that appear? Or which way will he prove, that it was this Clause, and not All that part of the Act, which relates to the Submission and Petition of the Clergy, that was Enacted upon this Ground, and according to it.

Sect. 29.
Ibid. p. 23.

The Statute first distinctly Recites the Clergies Submission and Petition, the One after the Other, without the least Mixture and Confusion. The Submission wholly relates to Constitutions and Canons hereafter to be made; The Petition, to Constitutions and Canons already in being, which they desired might be Review’d. Having done this, it proceeds to Enact in these Words; Be it therefore now Enacted, by Authority of this present Parliament, according to the SAID Submission and Petition of the Clergy: And so goes on, in two distinct Paragraphs, answerable to the two Branches of the Recital before made; first to determine concerning New Canons, according to their Submission; and next concerning Old Ones, according to their Petition.

To shew yet farther, where they began to Enact upon the Latter of these, the PETITION of the Clergy; that They did it in the Method and Order of the Clergies Instrument, and their own Recital upon it; having in the first Clause settled the Business of New-Canons, they thus Preface their Sanction concerning the Others: “ And forasmuch as such Canons, Constitutions, and Ordinances, As “ HERETOFORE HATH BEEN MADE by the Clergy of this Realm, cannot now, at the “ Session of this present Parliament, by reason of the Shortness of Time, be “ Viewed, Examined and Determined by the King’s Highness, and xxxii Persons “ to be Chosen and Appointed ACCORDING to the PETITION of the said “ Clergy in FORM ABOVE REHEARSED; Be it therefore Enacted, &c.

What can be more plain, than that here they began to Enact upon the PETITION of the Clergy? That this Branch of the Act therefore, as it lies in the same Order, and refers to the same Subject, and is prefaced in this plain manner; so ought it to give a full Satisfaction to us, that therein the Petition of the Clergy was Confirm’d; and that the Other therefore, as it answers entirely, and only, to the SUBMISSION of the Clergy, so was it design’d to determine only of SUCH CANONS as that Submission referr’d to.

But I must add yet more: Dr. A. says, that this Clause (and not this whole Part of the Act) was Enacted according to the said SUBMISSION, and PETITION of the said Clergy. It will not, perhaps, be very material to ask him, How then he came to break the Order, and to apply the former part of it to Old Canons, the Subject of their PETITION; the latter to NEW ONES, the Business of their SUBMISSION; seeing neither New nor Old are expressly mention'd in this part of the Statute, but only Canons, and SUCH Canons, Constitutions, &c. That which I insist upon, and must needs desire some good Account of, is this; That if this was done ACCORDING TO THE SAID PETITION of the SAID CLERGY; that is, according to the Petition in the Statute before Recited; He will please to shew, where, in All that Petition, the Clergy desire 'that "the Force of All the " Old Canons might be actually Suspended, or, pro tempore, Abrogated; as by that part of this Clause he tells us that they were. They desire that these Canons might be Committed to the Examination of the King, and Thirty two Persons: That such as upon their Examination should be judged Worthy to be Abrogated, or Annulled, might be abolite, and made of no value accordingly. And that such Other of the same Constitutions and Canons, as should be Approved by them, to stand with the Laws of God, and to be Consonant to the Laws of the Realm, might stand in their full Strength and Power. But as for any any present, actual Suspension, of All the Old Canons, while this was doing, and before it could be done; for the Abrogation of them Pro tempore, of which he speaks, there is not one Word in their Petition: Nor did it ever enter into their Thoughts, to put such a Stop as that would have introduced, to all Ecclesiastical Proceedings, till such a Revision could be made of those Canons as they proposed.

If therefore this Clause of that Sentence, did Abrogate for the time ALL the OLD CANONS, as Dr. A. says that it did; if it actually Suspended the Force of them; Either let him shew Us in what part of their Petition, the Clergy, desired this; Or he must give me leave to conclude, that this could not be intended to be done according to the said Petition of the said Clergy; because indeed, it was never Desired, or so much as Consented to by Them.

Sect. 30.

And this brings me to what Dr. A. calls, (a little oddly I confess, but yet so he Calls it,) his Second Consideration, to prove that the former part of this Sentence ought to be applied to Canons already made, (for as to the latter, we both agree, that it belongs to such as were hereafter to be established: ) <sup>2</sup> " It is plain, says He, that the Old Canons were somewhere in this Act Suspended, or " pro tempore Abrogated: And it is as plain, that this Abrogation was performed " by no other Act of this Session, nor by any other part of this Act, but the very Member of this Clause now under debate; and therefore it was done in " this; and so this Part of it must be understood of old Canons.

Now here I do thus far Agree with Dr. A: That neither in any other Act of this Parliament, nor in any other Branch of this Act, were All the Old Canons Generally put under any present Suspension, or Abrogation: In this I dissent from him, that I do not yet see any reason to believe, that they were at all intended to be presently, either Abrogated, or Suspended.

This therefore Dr. A. undertakes to prove: <sup>3</sup> " 1st. From a Proviso in this very Statute for continuing them in force, untill a Review, which unless this " Abrogation be supposed, had been altogether needless. This is a very extraordinary Reason indeed, and bespeaks as extraordinary a Procedure in Those who made this Law: Who, by this Account, must first have Enacted According to the Petition of the Clergy, such a thing as the Clergy never thought of, I am sure never said one word about, in their Petition, as the Act it self Recites it. And then having Enacted it, must in the self same Act have clapped in a Proviso, to Annul what they had themselves Enacted, and Declare that it should be of no force. If this be a Reasonable Interpretation of an Act of Parliament, and agreeable to the Rule which he afterwards lays down, that of such the <sup>4</sup> Law Says nothing dishonourable ought to be supposed, I must submit. But if it be such a Sense as is utterly both inconsistent with the very Petition on which it is said to be founded, and contrary to what appears to have been their Own Intentions; so that, upon this Supposition, both the Allegation is false, and the Sanction of the several Members of this Statute Contradictory to its self; we must then conclude this to be a wrong account of the meaning of this Act, and Repugnant to the Intention of those who made it.

To

To shew this the more clearly, I must Observe, that by vertue of the latter part both of the Clergies Petition, and the Parliaments Recital of it, and Enacting upon it, the OLD CANONS were Ordered to be Reviewed: And upon that Review, such of them as should be Approved by the King, and the Thirty Two Commissioners, were to Continue in Force; such as should be Disapproved, were to be from thenceforth Abrogated and Annulled. If therefore a present Suspension were made of ALL these Canons, it must have been such as was Consistent with this Design; that is, an Abrogation of All of Them, pro tempore, as Dr. A. himself expresses it; till these Commissioners should have done their Work, and the King have Confirm'd it; and so a legal Declaration have been made, of what Canons should from thenceforth have been allow'd of, and what not.

Now such an Abrogation, or Suspension, is literally Excluded by the Proviso of which Dr. A. speaks: Which took care to indemnify the Bishops and their Officials, in the Use of ALL THESE CANONS (as far as ever they could lawfully have been Used) till such time as these Commissioners should have done their Work. And by Consequence, the Same thing, according to Dr. A. must in the Same Act have been both Established, and Annulled; if in One part they Enacted that ALL the old Canons should be Abrogated till the Commission was Executed; and yet at the same time Enacted, in Another part of it, that Those same Canons should All be Used, till this were done: Which I am sure must be either a flat Contradiction, if both these Clauses were Authorized by vertue of that Act; or if both were not, then since the whole Act was pass'd at Once by the King, I shall leave it to Dr. A. to give Us his Opinion in Law, which we are to adhere to; Whether to the first Repealing Clause, by which All the Old Canons, as He says, were immediately Abolished; or to the last Enabling Proviso, whereby We are very sure, they were All Allow'd for the present to be Used as they had been before.

But what need was there of such a Proviso, supposing that the old Canons had not been before Annulled? The House of Commons knew not of any need that there was of it, and therefore They pass'd the Act without it. But the Bishops, it seems, were willing, in those difficult times, to be secured in the Exercise of their Authority: They thought such an express Warrant for the Use of these Canons could do Them no harm; but might be of Advantage to avoid disputes; to justify their Proceedings; and to Guard both themselves, and their Officers, from any future Hazards. Therefore they Got that Proviso added by the Lords to the Bill; and the Commons, who never dreamt of Abrogating pro tempore All the Old Canons, readily Agreed to it, and so it became a part of the Act.

Will Dr. A. now in Return to this Question permit me to Ask him, upon his Own Supposition, the very same; What need there was of such a Proviso? If the Parliament design'd that the old Canons should still be Used till a Reformation of them was Made, and Published by the King's Authority; the Ready way had been to have struck out those Words Attempt, Alledge, &c. by which (He supposes) They had Annulled them; and not to have destroy'd One Branch of their Own Act, by the Addition of a Contrary Proviso in another part of it. If They did not intend to have them Continued, but to be presently Abrogated, then the Proviso was not only needless, but Contrary to their Own Intention; and so either way was not fit to have been put at all into the Bill.

But Dr. A. has a farther reason than this to justify his Opinion: For 2dly. He tells us it appears by the 37 H. 8. c. 17. that "ALL the Decrees, Ordinances," and Constitutions of the WHOLE CANON LAW, were by a Statute made in the 25th of the King's most Noble Reign, utterly abolish'd, frustrate, and of none Effect. But this was not done by any Other Act of this Parliament, nor by any Other Clause of this Act, except that of which we are now Speaking; and therefore it must be done by that: And so that Clause must be understood of old Canons before Made, not of such as should hereafter be Enacted.

The answer to this will be very easy, as soon as the matter of fact is truly stated. The Design of that Statute to which Dr. A. Refers, was to enable Doctors of Law, being Married Men, to Exercise Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction. It Recites, "how that tho' the King was, and ever had been, by the WORD of GOD, Supreme Head in Earth of the Church of England, and had full Power and “ Authority to Correct, Punish, and Repress, all manner of Heresies, Errors, Vi“ ces, &c. Springing and Growing within the same, and to Exercise all manner of “ Jurisdictions, commonly called Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction; yet the Bishop of Rome, “ and his Adherents, minding, as much as in them lay, to abolish this Power given “ by God to Princes, had made in their Councils divers Ordinances, and Constitu“ tions, that no Lay or Married Man should, or might Exercise any Jurisdiction Ec“ clestical; which they there affirm to be directly Repugnant to the King's Su“ premacy, and to his Prerogative Royal, his Grace being a LAYMAN. And albeit

 “ the SAID Decrees, Ordinances, and Constitutions, by a Statute made in the 25th “ Year of your Most Noble Reign (they are the Words of the Act, Referr'd to “ by Dr. A.) be utterly abolished, frustrate, and of none Effect; yet as well for the “ instruction of ignorant Persons, and for the better setting forth of the King's Pre“ rogative Royal, and Supremacy, They desire it may be particularly Enacted, that “ Lay Persons so qualified as the Act prescribes, may Lawfully Execute and Exercise
 “ all manner of Jurisdiction, commonly called Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction.

This is the true state of the Case; and from thence it appears, that this Recital does not assert, or even suppose (as Dr. A. pretends that it do's) that the WHOLE CANON LAW was Abolished by an Act of Parliament made in the 25th of H. 8. It speaks only of one sort of Constitutions; such as concern'd the Prohibition of Married Persons, from exercising of any Jurisdiction Ecclesiastical. Now of Those Constitutions it Affirms, That they were directly Repugnant to the King's Supremacy, and Prerogative Royal, his Grace being a Layman; and so in the Consequence thereof, were also contrary to the Word of God. Which being so, I shall not need to tell Dr. A. that all such Decrees, Ordinances, and Constitutions as these, were intended to be utterly Abolished, by that very Clause of the 25th of H. 8. which Ordered the Review of those Antient Canons: It being the express Condition of the Clergies Petition to that purpose, and so Recited by the Parliament in their Act; that such Constitutions and Canons as were prejudicial to the King's Prerogative Royal, and Repugnant to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, should be Abolite and made of no Value; and those only be Allowed to stand in their full Strength and Power, which should be approved to stand with the Laws of God, and to be Consonant to the Laws of this Realm. And by another Act<sup>1</sup> of the same Parliament, to which I rather think that Statute refers; it was expressly Enacted concerning the same Canons; “ That no Speaking, Doing, Communication, or Hold“ ing, against any Laws called Spiritual Laws, made by Authority of the See of Rome, “ which be Repugnant or Contrariant to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, or the “ King's Prerogative Royal, should be deemed Heresie; Nor should any One be Im“ peached, Vexed, or Troubled, upon such an account.

Sect. 33.

There is yet a Third Consideration, from whence<sup>2</sup> Dr. A. pretends to shew, if not the sense of the Act, yet at least the Opinion which the King's Attorneys and Councils have had of it; and which, should it be true, would at most serve only to be placed among his Other Negative Authorities, the Force of which we are hereafter to Examine. In the License granted by King James the 1st, Anno 1603, and so in all the Other Licenses granted by our Other Princes ever since, to the Convocations to make Canons, in which this part of the Act is Recited; All those Words which he pretends to have a respect to Canons already made, are Omitted; and therefore They do not belong to New-Canons yet to be made; at least, in the Opinion of those who drew those Commissions, they were not thought so to do. This is his last Argument, and of the least force of any we have yet considered. For not to pretend to Conjecture in a Case where, when all is done, neither Dr. A. nor I, can do any thing more than Conjecture: How do's it follow, that because the King's Attorneys took only the most material Words for their purpose, and Omitted the Rest, therefore they thought the Rest did not at all belong to this Matter?

The First Commission to which he refers, that of Anno 1603, was drawn, as he himself supposes, by my Lord Coke; who was then Attorney General. The Words of the Statute, under debate, were Omitted by Him. But did He therefore think that they had no Relation to New-Canons hereafter to be made? His Report of his Own, and the Other Judges Opinions, at a Committee of Parliament, some Years after, shews the contrary; and Dr. A. with all his turns, cannot get off the Force of it.

The last Commission under his late Majesty, was that of 1689: The Words disputed were there again Omitted, as they had Usually been: Yet that worthy Person who was then Attorney General, lived not only to Read Dr. A's Interpretation of this Statute, but freely to declare his Opinion against it.

In such Commissions as these, it is enough that the most material Words are express'd, which include all the Rest; especially where Those, which are Omitted, are so well Known, and so well Understood, as they are in the present Case. In 1586: the Clergy of York petitioned the Queen to License, and Authorize them to Devise, Make, and Ordain such Orders, Decrees, or Constitutions Provincial and Synodal, as they should think expedient, for the better Levying and Payment of the Benevolence which they had agreed to give to her Majesty. The Queen Consented, and gave them thereupon her License and Authority to Decree, Ordain, and Constitute any manner of Decrees, Orders, and Constitutions Synodal. &c. Can it be imagined, that she did not thereby effectually Grant them the Power of Devising, as well as Decreeing; but intended to intimate, that she had no Right to License them for the One, but only for the Other?

But what if after all, these Words have not been so utterly Omitted as Dr. A. would have it thought; but have been at least so far mention'd in All those Commissions, as to shew that they were look'd upon by Those who drew them, to have all that Relation I am now affirming to this Matter? Dr. A. Censures me for Referring in my Appendix to the Extract I had before Given of the Act of Parliament, for the Recital of it in the Commission of 1640. He makes it a Capital Crime, and finds out (as what will not an Uncharitable Spirit find out) a great deal of dishonest Cunning in it. I was mistaken in saying, that the Act of Parliament was Recited Verbatim in the Commission; I confess it: I wrote in haste, and perceived not the Omission of those four words in the Enacting part, till Dr. A. took Care to inform the World, and my self among the Rest, of it. But has not Dr. A. shewn a little of that Slight himself, with which he has thought fit to charge me, in the management of this very Argument? Let the Reader Judge. "In the Entrance of that Instrument (the License of 1603. says He) All of the Submission Act that Relates any Ways to the Clergies Power of Making Canons is Recited at large; and in that Recital, (which deserves Observation) these Words Attempt, Alledge, Claim, Put in Ure, are DESIGNEDLY OMITTED, as being known to belong to OLD CANONS ONLY, and to lay no Restraint therefore on the Clergies Power of MAKING NEW ONES. For thus that Instrument Runs, Whereas in and by one Act of Parliament, &c. It was Enacted among Other things that they nor any of them from thenceforth, should Enact, Promulge, or Execute any such Canons, Constitutions, or Ordinances Provincial, &c. And again, p. 26. having Censured Dr. W. for Referring to the Act, as Recited Verbatim in the Commission, he adds, tho' the most material Words (of it) and such as would be most Conclusive upon the Clergies Convocation Acts and Debates, if they really belong'd to 'em, are, as I have shewn, DESIGNEDLY OMITTED in that Recital. Many of these Licenses I have seen upon Record; and found Them tho' different from One another in several Respects, yet in this of the Omission of the Words, Attempt, Alledge, &c. always the same without the least Variation.

SECT. 34.

I may now Appeal to any unprejudiced Reader, whether Dr. A. did not design by this Discourse to work this Belief in him, that those Words, Attempt, Alledge, Claim, and Put in Ure, had never at all been put into any License since the 1st of King James the 1st: But that all that part of this Act, had been intirely Omitted in these Commissions, as not belonging to the Making of New Canons, but only to the Execution of the Old Ones? And yet let me now, in my turn, ask of Dr. A. Whether he ever saw any One License in all this time, in which these Words were not Recited as a part of that Statute? Or by consequence, whether what was the Casual Effect of haste in me, may not justly be suspected to have been an Unwarrantable Concealment in Him.

The truth then of the Case is this: The Statute, of which we are discoursing, twice Repeats these controverted Words; in its Recital of the Clergies Submission, and in its Sanction thereupon. In the former of these they have been constantly transcribed into every one of these Commissions: There it has been shewn, what the Convocations had in Verbo Sacerdotii promised as to this matter, viz. "That they would never from thenceforth Presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in Ure, or Enact, Promulge, or Execute any NEW Canons, Constitutions,

" tutions, &c. unless the King's most Royal Assent and License might to them
 " be had to Make, Promulge, and Execute the same.

Then it has been declared how it was thereupon " Enacted, ACCORDING to " the said Submission and Petition of the said Clergy AMONGST OTHER THINGS " that They, nor any of Them, from thenceforth should Enact, Promulge, or " Execute any SUCH Canons, Constitutions, &c. unless the Clergy might have " the King's most Royal Assent and License to Make, Promulge, and Execute " SUCH Canons, &c. What can be more evident, that that if Those who drew these Commissions had DESIGNEDLY OMITTED these Words in the Latter Clause of the Act, as not pertinent to their Purpose, They ought also, for the same Reason, to have Omitted them in the former: Whereas not only Reciting them there, where they were the most evidently Applied to the Subject of MAKING NEW CANONS, but adding moreover, that the Parliament had thereupon Enacted ACCORDING to that SUBMISSION; and to shew that they did not here again Repeat the whole of what was Enacted, expressly inserting that Cautionary Clause AMONGST OTHER THINGS; they have, I think, effectually Guarded themselves against all mistake in this Matter: And more plainly shewn by their Positive Application of those Words to this purpose in One part of the Act, that they did account them to belong to this Subject, than they can justly be supposed to have insinuated by their Omission of them (with such a Qualification as I have now observed) in the Other part, that they did not think them to Relate to the Making of New, but meerly to the Execution of Old Canons.

Sec. 35.

However, since Dr. A. has thought fit to put the Issue of this matter upon the Authority of these Commissions, let me desire him to give some satisfactory Answer to these Two Things; which naturally arise to be observed from them.

1st. Whether in these Licenses the King do's not, by vertue of his Prerogative Royal, and Supreme Authority in Causes Ecclesiastical, (which by this, and the other Acts Referr'd to, 1 Eliz. c. 1. was RESTORED to the Imperial CROWN of this Realm;) Give and Grant full, free, and LAWFUL Liberty, LICENSE, Power and Authority to the Convocation, to these several distinct Ends, and Purposes; to CONFER, TREAT, DEBATE, CONSIDER, CONSULT, and AGREE upon such Canons, &c. as were to be made by them?

And, 2<sup>dly</sup>, Whether the necessity of a License, or Commission to do This, be not founded upon the Authority of the Statute, which in these Commissions is always first Recited; and then the Commission immediately follows thereupon in these Words, or Others to this Effect, " Know ye that we for divers urgent " and weighty Causes, have Given and Granted, and by These Presents do give and " grant, full and free, and lawful Liberty, License, &c. The plain Construction of which can be no Other than this; that whereas by vertue of this Act, the Clergy, without the King's License, could not, by their own Authority; or in Consequence of their bare Writ of Summons; have Legally Proposed, Conferr'd, Treated, Debated, &c. the King, by his Commission, Authorizes them to do it.
 But especially, seeing at the End of this very Permission, these Express Terms are added to the same purpose; The SAID STATUTE, or any other Statute, Act of Parliament, Proclamation, Provision, or Restraint, &c. to the Contrary, notwithstanding.

Sec. 36.

I have now consider'd All those Arguments which Dr. A. has offer'd to prove, that the Words Attempt, Alledge, Claim, and Put in Ure, (in despite of the Use made of them in the form of Submission, sent by the King to the Convocation, and from thence transcribed into this Act; and of the Recital of it in the Preamble to this very Statute, upon which the Sanction we have now been considering was made) ought to be applied to One sort of Canons, and the following Words, Enact, Promulge, and Execute, to Another: Tho' they All run in the same Sentence, without so much as a Point between them to divide the Sense; and in a Paragraph which wholly, and absolutely, refers only to New Canons, hereafter to be made by the Clergy in their Convocations. As for 'Dr.
 A's Explication of the Word Attempt, there is very little force in it. The whole amounts to no more than this; that in whatsoever Case that Word is used, it still carries the same general Signification along with it; and denotes an Endeavour to do somewhat; and that for the most part such a thing, as ought not

not to be done; nor therefore to be Endeavour'd, or Set about, any more than than to Finished and Performed.

But in the sense of the Word Make, which is much more material, as <sup>Ibid. p. 36.</sup> it is used in this Place, I must beg leave to differ from his Notion: Which being both in the Form of Submission drawn up by the King's Order; in the recital of this Statute thereupon; and lastly, in its Sanction founded upon that Recital, Opposed to all those Other Words, Attempt, Alledge, Claim, Put in Ure, Enact; must be understood in such a Latitude, as to answer to All of them; and take in the whole process of what is requisite to the Passing of a Canon from its first Proposal to its last Establishment: All which as it comes within the sense of Making a Canon, so was it evidently intended to be understood by it upon this Occasion. The Words of the Submission run thus; That they (the Clergy) will never from henceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in Ure, or Enact, Promulge, or Execute any New-Canons, &c. unless the King's most Royal Assent, and License may to them be had, to Make, Promulge, and Execute the same. To Make, i. e. to Do All, from first to last, which is needful to the Passing of such Canons; the Particulars of which had been before set down: May Attempt it, may Alledge, Claim, Put in Ure, their Power of doing it; and thereupon may finally Enact it: From all, and every part of which, they had promised to abstain, unless they should have the King's License to Make Canons; that is, to do All that without which a Canon cannot be Made; and which therefore a License to Make Canons must be understood to Grant to them.

And now, there is but one thing more remaining, to clear up all the Doubts which Dr. A. has thrown in the way of the plain and literal Exposition of the Words this Act. And that is to Enquire whether the Account which he has given of of the Enacting part of this Act, can be reconciled with the Recital of the Clergies Submission, according to which, the Statute professes to Enact. It is a just doubt of his <sup>Sect. 37.</sup> Own raising; Let us see how he comes off with it. He Answers: <sup>Ibid. p. 47.</sup>

" 1st, That those Words, According to the Submission, do not necessarily imply that Clause to have been Enacted, according to the strict Literal Tenour,
" but only according to the Main Drift and Substance of the Submission before recited. This is a pretty bold Comment, and yet being Allow'd of, will signify nothing to his purpose. For indeed, in proceeding to Suspend or Abrogate all the old Canons, as he tells us by that Clause of their Act, which we are now considering, the Parliament did intend to do; They did not only not Enact according to the strict literal Tenor of their Submission, but contrary to the Design both of That, and of their Petition too: Which was not to Suspend All the Discipline and Jurisdiction of the Church, and to put an End to all Ecclesiastical Proceedings, by a present Repeal of all the Old Canons, before any New ones could be Made, or Settled in their Stead: No; They were so far from that, that when the Bill came up from the House of Commons without the Proviso which we now see at the end of it, they would not so much as leave that matter in Suspense; but by the Addition of that Declaration with respect to these Canons, took Care for the Continuance of them in their full force, till such time as a Review should be made of them. All that was demanded of the Clergy by the King; or that they Consented to; or indeed, that the Parliament Enacted; was, that the Canons already made might be examined by Thirty Two Persons, and that such of them as they should judge, to be contrary to the Word of God, to the Laws of the Realm, and the King's Prerogative, Royal, should FROM THENCEFORTH be Annul'd: And that the rest should not only continue still force, as they were before, but be yet farther Ratified and Confirmed; and be hereafter Exercised, not only by virtue of that Ecclesiastical Sanction which they had before, but of that Civil Authority which they should now have added to it.

This first Supposition therefore of Dr. A. fails in its very Foundation, tho' we should allow of the Odd Construction which he puts upon those very plain Words of the Act, where it professes to Enact According to the said Submission and Petition of the said Clergy. Nor will his Other Observation signify any more; which

2<sup>dly</sup>, <sup>Ibid. p. 49.</sup> <sup>3</sup> Supposes, that in the form of Submission sent by the King to the Convocation, and agreed to by the Lower House, those Words, Attempt, &c. did not relate to New Canons, but to Canons in General; and that the Bishops and Prelates, when they struck out the three first of them "Attempt, Alledge, and Claim, added the word New, which was not only not inserted, but was not intended, before. That the Parliament when they made the Recital Confounded the two Forms together; took all the Verbs out of the One, Attempt, Alledge, Claim, Put in Ure, Enact, Promulge, and Execute; and added the Word New, out of the Other; but without any Intention of applying it indifferently to all of Them; but only to employ the Three latter Verbs to the Subject of New Canons, and to leave the rest to belong to the Old Ones. This he seems to allow to have been a little Unaccurate; but for that he tells us, that the Parliament thought there was the less need of Exactness in the Recital, because that in the Body of the Statute they had taken care so clearly to distinguish these Verbs, and their Relation, as to leave no Room for a Mistake in the Application of them.

What a Company of Suppositions are here put together, not one of which has yet been, or ever can be proved to be true; and the greater part of which I have before shewn to be certainly false? In the form of Submission sent by the King to the Convocation, and Agreed to by the Lower House, the whole Set of Verbs plainly refers to New Canons. Let Dr. A. try what possible Construction can otherwise be made of it: They promise, in Verbo Sacerdotii, that they would never from thenceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in Ure, or Enact, Promulge, or Execute, any Canons, unless the King by his Royal Assent should License them to MAKE, Promulge, and Execute the same. What Canons did they promise not to Attempt, &c. but such as the King was to License them to MAKE? And what Canons could those be but New Canons, not yet Enacted, but hereafter to be made by them?

Again, The Parliament Confounded not the two forms together: They went upon that which the King had prescribed, and they followed it so strictly, as to have Omitted even the Word New in the first Draught of their Bill; till, upon debate, they thought fit, for avoiding of all dispute concerning the Canons of which they speak, to Add it; and then it was interlined in another hand, as some few other Words in like manner were.

Now this shews, Thirdly, That the Parliament were not so Negligent or Un-accurate in this Recital, as Dr. A. would have us believe that they were; but on the contrary, took a very particular Care about it, as that upon which they were to Enact; and ACCORDING whereunto, as themselves profess, their following Sanction was to be understood.

In short; In the Recital, All these Verbs immediately follow One another, without any the Least point to distinguish One part of them from the Remainder. They are all expressly determin'd, both by the Sense, and Words of it, to New Canons. The Sanction is framed upon this Recital, as the Act it self affirms: And in that too no Point of Distinction is found; Nothing to Seperate one part of the Sentence from the Other. And therefore I must still take the Liberty to Conclude, till Dr. A. can give me some beter Reasons to the contrary, that they do All belong to the same Subject; and that New Canons, hereafter to be made, is the Sole, Common Subject, of them All.

sect. 38.

The Conclusion of this first Argument is this: * That from the plain Construction of the form of Submission upon which this Statute was framed; * from the Recital of that Submission in the Act its self; * from the just, and regular Method of the Sanction which follows thereupon in both its Parts, with respect both to the Canons and Constitutions hereafter to be made, and to those which had been before made, but were by order of this Act to be Reviewed; and lastly, from the Evident Punctuation of the Record it self; it appears, that the Clergy in Convocation are tied up from Attempting, as well as from Enacting of any New Canons, unless they have the King's License to Make Them; which by the Purport of the Act, refers to the One, as well as to the Other, and gives them Authority to Do Both. That therefore without incurring the Penalty of this Statute, they may no more Treat, Debate of, or Draw up, than they may Enact any such Canons or Constitutions, without it: Which was the First Argument I proposed in proof of what I had before Asserted, and do still continue to affirm to be the Law in this Particular.

But that I may not seem to stand singular in this Opinion: or to have advanced any thing in restraint of the Proceedings of our Convocations which had not been commonly Received by our most Eminent Writers, of all Kinds, before; (tho' I take the Case to be so very clear, as not to need any farther Proof yet) I will proceed 2dly, To shew; What has been the Sense of our Reformed Clergy and Others, both Common Lawyers, and Civilians, as to this Matter.

not

This is another of those Topics, by which Dr. A. pretends to Confirm the Interpretation he has Given of the Statute 25 H. 8: And I am so much the more concern'd to proceed with him upon this Ground, in that he pretends thereby to expose me to the Censure of his Reader for an Assertion, in which nevertheless, both He and I, are Agreed; namely, "That the Interpretation of Authority, that Act given by the Author of the Letter to a Convocation Man, was never allow'd of, nor, for ought I know, so much as heard of, till that Gentleman first enlightned the World with it. For this<sup>2</sup> Dr. A. accuses Me of Rashness and Vanity: He "pretends that the Authorities by him produced, do sufficiently Expose it; and as fully prove the Truth and Justness of the other Exposition. But, indeed, for his Own Sake as well as Mine, I hope he is mistaken: For most certainly after all, he is as far from approving of that Author's Account of the Act, as I am; and has as fully declared his Sense against it.

The Opinion of that Writer in the Case before us was This: That besides the Writ of Summons, by Authority whereof the Convocation is Assembled, there needs only One License from the King to Enable the Clergy to Enact, Promulge and Execute any Canons or Constitutions; and that is the Patent by which they are Confirmed after they have pass'd the Convocation. Let us take it in his Own Words: 3 "To what purpose is such a License before hand to make Canons, since the King's Assent must be had to 'em Afterwards, e're they can be Promulged? Do's the Act say there shall be a DOUBLE License from the King? That he shall Assent Once to the preparing and framing Canons, Another time to the promulging 'em? Do's it mean any more than barely this, that before a Canon can be Enacted, Promulged, or Executed, the King's Concurrence must be had? And is not that HAD, unless it be given before-hand and afterwards too? A Leave, in general, to Make Canons, is given them by their very Writ of Summons: And a Leave, in particular, to Make this or that Canon, is given 'em, when the King Assents to this or that Particular Canon: And what Other Leave, besides these, can there be Imagined or Desired? The Author goes on farther at this rate, till at last he has utterly defined away All Enacting Power from the Clergy, on whose side he was engaged, and put it wholly in the King's Hand. "For to Enact, he says, is to give the Authoritative Fiat to a Law, by which it becomes Obligatory. But the Convocations neither do, nor can be construed to pretend by any thing of theirs, that goes before the King's Assent, to Make a Canon, which shall be a Law of the Realm, and binding: And therefore All they do, before they offer a Canon to the King, in order to his Assent, Rises not up to Enacting, and therefore they want no License for it.

And now, let me freely appeal to Dr. A. himself: Do's he Approve of this Construction? Do's he take this to be agreeable to the Sense of the Act? Or has he shewn it by any Authorities he has produced; or can he shew it by any Others, to have ever been deliver'd as the true Meaning of that Statute, till this Writer first enlightned the World with it? No; he allows, he insists upon the Necessity of a License, to Enact before, as well as upon a Patent of Confirmation, for Authority to Promulge, and Execute, after. He is so nice, as to doubt, whether the Clergy may safely Conclude upon the Form of a Canon without it; least even that should be Construed Enacting: And therefore resolves, that either they ought not to do it, or at least, not without a Protestation to save them harmless in it. But where then is my Rashness, or Vanity, in denying That, which he himself rejects as False and Erroneous? Or with what Justice can he say, that his Testimonies prove this Charge upon me, for disowning a Sense of this Act, which he is as far from Receiving as I am?

The Truth is, that Author had carried his Point, not only to an Unpresidented, but even to an Absurd Excess. Dr. A. has very much corrected the Extravagance of it; and brought it a great deal nearer, both to the Design of the Act, and to the Practice of our Convocations. He agrees, that, without the King's License, the Clergy may not Enact; but Affirms that they may Confer, and Authority, &amp;c. p. 289.

Debate, in Order to their ENACTING. This (tho' more Reasonable than what had been before advanced) I have deny'd, and must still beg leave to doubt of, for the Reasons before alledged. With which of these two, the Opinions of our Divines, and Lawyers, do the best agree, was the second thing proposed, and comes now to be particularly consider'd.

For the better Determination whereof, we must first make a Distinction of the Time since the Passing of this Act, into two several Periods: The One from the 25th H. 8. to the End of Queen Elizabeth, for about Seventy Years; the Other, the Age which has follow'd since; from the First of King James the 1st, to our own Days. In the former of these, if I take Dr. A. aright, he Affirms both the Opinions of our Learned Men, and the Practise of our Convocations, to have run generally on his side; but in the latter, to have come off, no less generally, to Ours. Some few Authorities, indeed, he alleges, within this time also, to make good the Interpretation which he has given of this Statute; but as they are but few in Number, so are they no less inconsiderable in their Weight too; as I shall shew, when I come to the particular Examination of them.

Sect. 41. But whether Dr. A. will allow of thus much or no, the Evidence of the thing its self is too great to be withstood; and it is the first thing therefore which I shall lay down, in proof of what I have Asserted; That the General Consent of our Church of England Divines, Common-Lawyers, and Civilians, for the last hundred Years, has been, that the Clergy in Convocation can no more Legally Confer or Treat, in Order to the Enacting of any Provincial Canons, or Constitutions, without a License from the Crown to warrant them in their Proceedings; than they can Conclude upon, and Enact them without it.

I shall hereafter Enquire, when I come to consider the Practise of our Convocations in this Particular, whether, in Fact, they have ever adventured to Treat in order to the making of Canons, till they were first Empower'd by Royal Authority so to do. At present, I am only to consider the Opinions of our most Learned Writers of all sorts; and I shall do it in the Order of the several times in which they Wrote.

Sect. 42. Whether I should here produce the Letters Patents of King James the 1st, by which he Confirm'd the Canons of 1603, as an Evidence of his Own private Opinion, or Reserve it to the History of that Convocation, I cannot tell. This is plain, that he there Recites that the "Bishops and Clergy had not only Received his License to Confer, Treat, Debate, Consider, Consult, and Agree of such Canons, &c. as they should think necessary; but had by Vertue of the said Authority thereby Granted to them; Treated, Concluded, and Agreed upon certain Canons, &c. to the End and Purpose by him Limited and Prescribed unto them.

p. 390.

Against this Authority, Dr. A. Excepts, that the King did not thus License them in consequence of the Statute of the 25th of H. 8th, but by his Prerogative Royal, and Supreme Authority in Causes Ecclesiastical: And therefore this is no Evidence, that That Statute intended to lay any such Restraint upon their Debates, as we are now speaking of. Should I allow of this Arguing, which yet is very weak, I do not see what Dr. A's Cause would gain by it. For whether it be by vertue of this Statute, or of his own Prerogative Royal; if the King has a Right to License the Clergy to Treat as well as to Enact, it will still come to the same End; that without such a License from the King, they have not any Authority of their own to do the One, any more than Dr. A. himself allows they have to do the Other.

But indeed, Dr. A. proceeds upon a meer Fallacy in this Exception: He tells us, "that in these Letters Patents there is a plain difference made between the King's Prerogative Royal and Supreme Authority in Causes Ecclesiastical; and the Particular Powers lodged in him by the 25th H. viii. That in vertue of the first of These, he is said to have Granted the Clergy full, free, and lawful Liberty, &c. to Confer, Treat, Debate, &c. upon Canons; but to have Given his Royal Assent to those Canons according to the form of a Certain Statute or Act of Parliament made in that behalf in the 25th Year of the Reign of K. H. viii. And from thence would infer, that the Latter only was done by Authority of that Statute, and not the Former. Well, let us suppose this to be as he pretends: But will he then tell us by what Authority the King Licensed them to Conclude and Agree upon Canons? Whether he did that too by his Prerogative Royal only, or in Vertue of this Statute? Seeing 'tis plain that he Authorized them upon the same Grounds to Confer, fer, Treat, Conclude, and Agree; and expresses all after the same manner, and in the same Sentence.

If therefore he Licensed them to Treat, by his Prerogative Royal and Supreme Authority in Causes Ecclesiastical, as distinct from this Statute, and not as Confirmed and Restored to the Crown by it, so he did to Enact too; and then we must enlarge the Conclusion, and infer, that the Prince has no Right by this Act to Commission them for the One, any more than for the Other. But if this be what Dr. A. himself will not presume to say; if he allows that by vertue of this Statute, the King has a Right to Grant them a License to Enact, and that by the Authority thereof, as well as by his Royal Supremacy, King James the 1st did Commission this very Convocation so to do; then he will give me leave to Conclude, that he did also Commission it, by the same Right, to Treat and Debate too: Unless he can shew as nicely here, as he has done in the Act of K. Henry 8, where we are to divide the Sentence; so as to accommodate the King's Prerogative to some of the Verbs, and the Statute to the Rest.

The Truth of this Matter is this: The King had before, according to the Purport of that Act 25 H. 8, and by his Supreme Authority in Causes Ecclesiastical, Restored, and Affirmed by it; Granted the Convocation a License "to Treat, Debate, Consult, and Agree, upon Canons. In Consequence thereof, the Convocation having drawn up a Book of Canons, now Offer'd and Presented the same to the King; humbly desiring him to give his Royal Assent to them, according to the Form of a certain Statute, or Act of Parliament, made in that behalf, in the 25th of H. 8: And also (which Dr. A. thought fit to conceal) by his Prerogative Royal, and Supreme Authority in Causes Ecclesiastical, to Ratifie and Confirm the same. This was all that farther remain'd to be done; and therefore it was here only needful to take notice of that Statute of K. H. 8. The Commission to Make these Canons, had before been granted; and there (where alone it was either proper, or needful) the Statute which required such a Commission, in order to that End, was not only Mentioned, but Recited, as we have before seen.

Having thus recounted the Clergies Request, the Patent proceeds to set forth the King's Confirmation of what had been Done by them: "How that having diligently Read and Consider'd their Canons, &c. He had given, and by these Presents did give, his Royal Assent, according to the Form of the said Statute, or Act of Parliament aforesaid, to All and Every the said Canons, &c. But is this all? No; He only says, that he did give his Royal Assent, according to the Form of the said Statute; but for his own Right and Authority to do this, he still Referrs to his PREROGATIVE ROYAL, which Dr. A. would have us believe was not made use of in this Particular. For thus it immediately follows; "And furthermore, we do not only by our SAID PREROGATIVE ROYAL, and SUPREME AUTHORITY in CAUSES ECCLESIASTICAL, Ratifie, Confirm, and Establish, by these our Letters Patents, the said Canons, &c. but Do likewise Propound, Publish, and straightly Enjoin, and Command, by our said Authority, and by these our Letters Patents, the same to be diligently Observed and Executed, &c.

So that now then it appears, that the King's Prerogative, and the Statute of the 25th of H. 8. are so far from standing in any Opposition to one another, that they Do indeed Both co-operate to the same End. The Statute ties up the Clergy, that without the King's Authority, they shall neither Attempt, Enact, Promulge, nor Execute any Canons, &c. under the Penalty therein express'd. And the King, by his Prerogative Royal, and Supreme Authority in Causes Ecclesiastical, gives the Clergy that License which the Act requires, to indemnifie them in their Proceedings: And thereby Authorizes them to Treat, Debate, Conclude, and Make Canons first; and then to Publish and Execute them when made. The Clergy are by the Statute tied up not to Do any thing in this Matter, without the Royal License; but the Prince is not empower'd by the Statute, to give his License to them, but grants it by vertue of his own Prerogative Royal, and Supreme Authority in Causes Ecclesiastical; According to the Form of the Said Statute.

From this Authority of the King himself, I proceed to that of his Attorney-General; who, probably, drew up these Commissions, and whose Opinion therefore (as also that of his whole Council) might from thence alone have been sufficiently inferr'd. But I shall add a more expresse Testimony of it in this Case;

port, p. 72.

Case; and because Dr. A. has complain'd of my dividing it into several Parts, (as indeed I did, not out of any such Design as he suggests, but meerly to accommodate it to the Method of my Argument) I will now set it down intire, as the Reporter has deliver'd it to us. His Words are these: "It was resolved by the two Chief Justices, and divers other Justices, at a Committee before the Lords in Parliament, divers Points concerning the Authority of a Convocation:

"1. That a Convocation cannot Assemble at their Convocation, without the Assent of the King.

"2. That after their Assembly, They cannot Confer to Constitute any Canons, without License del' Roy.

"3. When They, upon Conference, Conclude any Canons, yet they cannot Execute Any of their Canons without Royal Assent.

"4. They cannot Execute any after Royal Assent, but with these Four Limitations;

"1. That they be not against the Prerogative of the King.

"2. Nor against the Common-Law.

"3. Nor against any Statute-Law.

"4. Nor against any Custom of the Realm.

"And all this (adds the Reporter) appears by the Statute, 25 H. 8. c. 19.

"And this was but an Affirmance of what was before the said Statute.

I shall not need to observe, that, in this Opinion, the Judges exactly pursue the Method, and take in the whole Sense of that Statute, as far as it relates to the Matter of Canons yet to be made. The Words of that Act, which we are now discoursing of, viz. are, that the Clergy shall not presume to Attempt, &c. they more briefly, but withal more clearly, Expound by these very apposite Terms, CONFER TO CONSTITUTE: And that by the Conference of which they spake, they meant such a Debate as is design'd in Order to the Constituting of Canons, tho' it should not perhaps End in it; but be either let fall, upon the Debate, within; or be prevented by Authority, or a Prorogation, from without; appears by the next Branch; When They, upon Conference, Conclude, &c. Which sufficiently implies, that they might sometimes Confer without Concluding; and yet, if that Conferring were in order to Constitute, it would still come within the Conference, for which they had before agreed the License del' Roy to be necessary.

p. 410, 411.
Addit. p. 70,
71.

Against this Authority, Dr. A. makes two Exceptions; 1st, That the Report was not publish'd till after my Lord Coke's Death, and therefore may be suspected not to be Exact: And, 2<sup>dly</sup>, that taking it as it is, it makes nothing against him. To the former of these I shall not need to reply. Posthumous Pieces, tho' left imperfect by their Authors, and for that Reason oftentimes not fit to be Publish'd, may yet be faithfully Publish'd, as they are left; and so I conceive this was. Had Dr. A. ever heard but the least Intimation to the contrary, we do not so little know his Spirit, as to doubt but that he would have fill'd our Ears on both sides with it. But for the Latter, it is indeed very strange, and puzzles me to think what he would have had the Judges say, to have deliver'd themselves more fully than they did upon this Occasion. "The Clergy, say they, cannot Confer to Constitute any Canons, without License del' Roy: That is, says Dr. A. They cannot SO Confer AS to Constitute. But why then was Conferring at all mention'd? Why did not their Lordships plainly lay it down, without any more ado, that after their Assembly, they cannot Constitute any Canons? This would have been Clear and Intelligible; but then they should have done the same too in the next Branch; Having Concluded, or rather having Constituted, any Canons; yet they cannot Execute Any of their Canons, without Royal Assent. Whereas now, by repeating the Conference again, as a material Circumstance, and that with such a Term of Distinction, as plainly implies that sometimes their Conferring might end there, and not come to any such Conclusion; When, upon Conference, They Conclude any Canons; They evidently shew the Conference, of which they before spake, to be Conferring, in Order to Conclude; and that such, for which, whether they did thereupon Conclude, or no, yet the King's License, by the Statute 25 H. 8. c. 19. was requisite.

But against this, Dr. A. objects: That if we take it thus, the most material Point is omitted by Them, namely, the Need of a License to Constitute? Does he he, in good earnest, believe this? Did those Venerable Persons declare a License to be needful to Authorize the Clergy to Confer to Constitute, and yet not declare thereby, that they could not Constitute without One? But there is no fence against some Mens Constructions. <sup>1 Rights, Sec. p. 67.</sup> King Charles the 1st's Judges spake Equivocally, when they gave their Opinion, that the Convocation being call'd by the King's Writ, was to sit on 'till it were dissolv'd by the King's Writ, tho' the Parliament was dissolv'd. They had no mind to be understood, and therefore they drew up their Sense in such Terms as were not to be unriddled: King James's Judges are, for ought I can perceive, in the same Case: They either did pronounce on Dr. A's side, or he is resolv'd to make them do it, whether they will or no. In the mean time, their Words, I think, are very clear and full, and deliver to us this plain Sense, that by the Statute, 25 of K. Hen. 8. c. 19. the Clergy in Convocation cannot Confer, in order to the Constitution of any Canons, without the King's License; Whether, upon that Conference, they Do Agree and Conclude; Or whether they only Conferr, but upon Conference do not Agree, nor come to any Conclusion.

To this Opinion of the Judges, my Lord Coke subjoins his own Assent, in his Report of it. And in a MS Treatise of the Power of the Church to make Canons, where he argues upon this Clause of the present Act, he all along applies it entirely to New Canons hereafter to be made, and not to such as were before in use. At the beginning of his Discourse, he thus divides the Statute, as he says, into its proper Parts. "First, in the Preamble, the Clergy acknowledge the King's Power and Supremacy, in Causes Ecclesiastical; and that their Meddling aforetime, was but Presumption and Usurpation. Secondly, It contain'd their Promise, in Verbo Sacerdotii, that they will never from thenceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in ure, or Enact, Promulge, or Execute, any New-Canons, in Convocation, unless the King's most Royal Assent and Authority be given them in that behalf. Thirdly, They complain of the Grievous Burthen that the Subjects then endured by the Canons then in use, which were not only ever Onerous to his Highness and his Subjects, but much prejudicial to the King's Prerogative Royal, and Repugnant to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm. The Fourth part thereof, is, Their most humble Suit, that the said Constitutions and Canons be committed to the Examination of his Highness, and of Thirty two Persons to be by him Appointed. Thus my Lord Coke divided this Statute: In his Second Branch, he applies the whole first Clause, under Consideration, to New Canons; In his Two last, the Other to the Review which they desired might be made of the Old Ones. And in the Prosecution of his Argument, to shew, that the Clergy, by this Statute, had no Power given them to make Laws in their Convocation, the Ground on which he builds is this; that there were no such Words of Ordination, and Statute, to Authorize their New Constitutions, as in the other Clause there were to establish such of the Old Ones, as the King, and the Thirty two Persons appointed by him, should approve of; and therefore no New Power was granted to the Convocation in that behalf. His Words are these: "The Clergy having no Lawful Power to make Laws in their Convocation, for the Outward Government of the Church, before that Statute, it followeth that these Words in the said Act, viz. That they shall never from thenceforth presume to Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in ure, or Enact, Promulge, or Execute, any New-Canons and Constitutions, unless the King's most Royal Assent and Authority be given them in that behalf, (for so he abridges and delivers the Sense, even of the Enacting Clause of that Statute) being an Exception out of the said Clause of Restraint, can give them no Power to make Laws Ecclesiastical, without Addition of Words of Ordination and Statute, viz. That such Canons and Constitutions, so to be made, shall be from thenceforth Kept, Observed, and Executed, for Laws Ecclesiastical of this Kingdom."

Such was my Lord Coke's Argument upon this Statute. It is not my Business to examine of what Strength it is: This is clear, that, with relation to the present Act, he absolutely took all that first Clause to relate to Canons hereafter to be made in Convocation; and did not divide the Verbs, as Dr. A. now do's, so as to allot the Four first to One sort of Canons, the Three last to another; but applied the whole to One and the same kind, viz. to New Canons; which therefore he must have accounted the Clergy, by this Statute, to have been no less prohibited to Attempt, than to Enact. I might

I might, on the Church side, add to these Authorities, that of an Eminent Prelate, Bishop Bilson; who about the same time that the Judges delivered their Opinions in this Case, published the Latin Edition of his Perpetual Government of Christ's Church: But this being only a Translation of what he had several Years before set forth, in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, I shall chuse rather to consider his Account of this Matter there, than needlessly anticipate it here.

Such was the Sense of some of our Greatest Men, under King James the 1st: That the same continued to be their Opinion under his Son and Successor, King Charles the 1st, we have two such Evident Authorities to Prove, as may alone suffice for that Whole Reign. In his Declaration before the Book of Articles, set forth by Him, Anno 1628. He Promises, "out of his Princely Care, that the Church-Men may do the Work which is proper for them; the Bishops and Clergy, from time to time, in Convocation, upon their humble Desire, should have LICENSE under his Broad Seal, to DELIBERATE of, and to Do, all such things, as should concern the settled Continuance of the Doctrine, and Discipline, of the Church of England.

This Declaration, the King himself tell us, he published with the Advice of so many of his Bishops, as might conveniently be brought together. Dr. Heylin goes farther: He informs us, that Archbishop Laud advis'd, and procured the publishing of it; and therefore, we may be sure, had the Principal hand in the drawing of it. About twelve Years after, the King made good, what he had now promised: He Licensed the Convocation to Treat of, as well as to Make, Canons; and Confirm'd them just as his Father before had done: And by both these publick Acts, in two such distant Parts of his Reign, has sufficiently shewn, that he accounted the Royal License to be no less needful to empower the Convocation to Deliberate, than to Enact; and that they could not legally do either without his License.

But here again, Dr. A. is at his old trade: To Confer to Constitute, in the Judges Opinion, was So to Confer As to Constitute. And now to Deliberate of, and to Do, for Both which the King promised his License to the Clergy, must, he tells us, be taken Conjunctly; so to Deliberate as also to Do. For "Deliberating (says he) is not to be separated from Doing; nor a Leave supposed requisite for the One, but as it is to End in the Other. And for this, as far as I can see, we must be content to take his Word. If such Glosses as these can deceive, let them deceive: I neither hope, nor desire, to convince those, whom such kind of Expositions can persuade.

Sect. 46.

In the Testimonies before alledg'd, we have the Sence of the King's Council, of Archbishop Laud, and of several other of the Bishops delivered to us; as well as his own Royal Judgment, in this Case. I shall to them add the Opinions of a few Particular, but very Eminent, Authors, and so have done with this Reign. Among these, as none has spoken more expressly than our Reverend Dr. Heylin, so shall I, in the first place, begin with him. In his Historical Account of the Convocation, to which the King granted the Commission before mentioned; He tells us, "that the Prolocutor being admitted, his Grace produced a Commission under the Great Seal, by which they were Enabled (according to the said Statute of King Henry the viiith) to Propose, Treat, Consult, and Agree, &c. He had before spoken of that Statute, in a short Discourse preparatory to the Opening of this Convocation: In which, having shewn the Conformity between the Parliament and Convocation, in several Particulars, he closes it up with these remarkable Words to our present purpose; "In this, and this alone, they differ as to Matter of Form, that the Peers and People assembled in Parliament may Treat, Debate, and Conclude of any thing, which is to be tendered to the King for his Royal Assent, without any other Power than the first Writ, by vertue whereof they are Assembled; but the Bishops and Clergy are Restrained in their Convocation, by the Statute of the 25th of Henry the 8th, from Treating, Debating, Forming, and Concluding of, any Canons or Constitutions, &c. till they are Licensed thereunto by the King's Commission.

Heylin's Life of A. B. Laud, p. 397.

Ibid. p. 395.

This I think may be a sufficient Testimony of Dr. Heylin's Judgment in this matter: A Person than whom none was more high for the Legal Rights of the Church, or had more particularly Applied himself to the Study of these Matters. It is not impossible but that by the help of the same figure, by which he Conjoyn'd Deliberating and Doing in the King's Declarations, and thereby Evaded ded the Force of that dangerous Promise which the King made to the Clergy, of Granting them a License in Convocation for the One, as well as the Other, Dr. A. may tell us, that Dr. Heylin's Words, are to be understood after the same manner. That when he says the Clergy are Restrained by the Statute 25 H. 8. from Treating, Debating, Forming, and Concluding of any Canons, without the King's Commission, He meant only from such a Treating, Debating, and Forming, as was to End in Concluding; and must not be separated from it. To prevent this it may not be amiss to add this one Evidence farther of his Opinion, from a Letter written by him to a Person of Honour in behalf of the Convocation, which it was feared would not have been Call'd with the Parliament upon King Charles the II<sup>d</sup>'s return: "I know 'tis conceiv'd by some, that the Distrust which his Majesty hath in some of the Clergy, and the diffidence which the Clergy have of one another, is looked upon as the Principal Cause of the Innovation: For I must needs behold it as an Innovation, that any Parliament should be Called, and not a Meeting of the Clergy at the same time with it. To obviate this he shews, that the King had no reason to be afraid of their coming together: "For since, says he, the Clergy in their Convocations are in No Authority to PROPOUND, TREAT, or CONCLUDE ANY THING until they are empowered by the KING'S COMMISSION, the King may tie them up for what time he pleases, and give them nothing but the opportunity of entertaining One another with the News of the Day.

Mr. Vernon's
Life of Dr.
Heylin.

After so full an account of the Sense which this learned Advocate of the Episcopal Church of England had of the Restraint of the Clergy founded upon this Statute; I may perhaps be Excused, if I Offer that of Another, who tho' he has stood under a more doubtful Character, yet wanted not a more than ordinary Knowledge in these Matters; and therefore may be warrantably Appeal'd to, as no incompetent Witness in this Case. The Person I mean, is our Church Historian, Mr. Fuller, who thus delivers his Judgment; and is not at all Censur'd by his severe Examiner for it. "Since this Year (1532) from Archbishop Cranmer to Archbishop Laud, All Convocations are born Tongue-tied, till the King did cut the String thereof with his Letters Patents, (191) Allowing them leave to DEBATE ON MATTERS OF RELIGION. And again, speaking of the Last Convocation of King Edward the VIth; He tells us, that the Clergy had no Commission from the King to meddle with Church Business: "And every Convocation in its self is born Deaf and Dumb, so that it can neither hear Complaints in Religion, nor Speak in Redress thereof, till first Ephata, be thou Open'd, be pronounc'd unto it, by Commission from Royal Authority.

p. 420.

To make Dr. A. some Amends for this Opinion, which I have some cause to apprehend will a little move his Indignation; let me to this suspected Author, add the sense of another, a suffering Presbyter when he wrote it, but a pious and learn'd Bishop of our Church when he Publish'd it; the famous <sup>4</sup> Sanderson: Who in a very few, but very significant terms, thus decides the Case with his usual Judgment, and Perspicuity; that the Bishops and Clergy, "can not either Meet in Convocation, without (the Kings) Writ; or Treat without his Commission; or ESTABLISH without his Royal Assent. An Authority the more to be valued, not only for the Judgment of the Writer, tho' that were very great; but for that Integrity which was always so eminent in his Determinations: And that it utterly Excludes all Colour of that Cavil, with which Dr. A. in vain endeavours to defend himself; as if no Treating were forbidden, but such as was accompanied with Enacting; and to be taken together in Conjunction with it.

Sect. 48.

Def. of Episcopacy. p. 33.

I shall close up these Evidences with the Opinion of that Great, and Eminent Civilian, <sup>4</sup> Dr. Zouch, who to the very same purpose thus delivers the Sense of this Act, and of the King's Authority as settled by it; "Quod Synodus Nationalis, vel Provincialis, Convocari non debeat absque Regis Rescripto, nec in iis quicquam Tractari vel Determinari nisi eo Assentiente; nec quicquam Vim legis obtineat Priusquam Regalis Assensus adhibitus fuerit. "Dr. A. has endeavour'd, in Answer to this, to perswade us, that Dr. Zouch Relied implicitly upon Cosens Tables, and therefore his Authority ought to Go for nothing, or at least, for no New Authority. From whom Dr. Zouch took the Words of his Propositions, neither Dr. A. nor I can tell: The Act of the 25th H. 8. is the only thing to which he refers for the Truth of them. If he Copied Dr. Cosens his Expressions, yet that will not prove but that he did freely use his own Judgment in weighing of them, before he subscribed to them: And the force of his Authority will be never the less considerable, because upon a due Examination, He found Dr. Cosens to have been in the Right, and therefore follow'd him in the same Opinion, upon the Authority of the same Statute.

Sect. 50.

And now I may, I think, be allow'd to affirm, that for the last Age, the Prevailing Opinion of our Princes, our Counsellors, our Judges, our Lawyers, and even of our Convocations and Clergy, has been, that a License is Necessary to empower the Bishops and Clergy in Convocation, to DEBATE as well as to CONCLUDE; and that this Act do's require the Royal Assent both to the One and to the Other. But what shall we say to the LXX Years before? How went the Opinions then? And by what Authority did they Confer, from the Latter End of King Henry the VIIIth's Reign, to the Beginning of King James the Ist's? Will Dr. A. bear with me, if I adventure to Answer, that both the Opinions and Practise of those Times was, as far as I can judge, the very same that they have been since; and do equally bespeak the Words of this Statute, to have been understood in the same Sense from the beginning, that they Generally are at this Day.

Indeed, not long after the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, a Puritanical Party arose, who were Enemies to the Constitution of our Church, and to the Ecclesiastical Discipline, and muster'd up all the Objections they could invent, to weaken its Authority, and expose the Practise of its Courts to Censure and Contempt. Among other Methods which they made use of to this purpose, One of the chief was this; to argue from this Statute (upon the very same Ground which Dr. A. now proceeds upon) That without the Kings express License, the Bishops and Clergy could not Attempt, Allege, Claim, or Put in Ure, any Canons or Constitutions; which therefore, since they did not pretend to have for every Cause which they heard and determin'd by the Ecclesiastical Law, they Concluded their Proceedings to be contrary to the purport of this Statute; and that the Judges, and Others who were concern'd in them, were under the Penalty of it for such their Presumption.

But Others went yet farther; they laid their Scheme thus: ' That by the words, ANY OTHER CANONS in that Act, All Canons, of what sort or degree soever, whether Domestical, or foreign Canons, before that time made, were forbidden to be Attempted, Alledg'd, Claim'd, or Put in Ure; and by that means were at once, concerning their Practise and Execution with us, Annulled and made Void. That therefore, so many of them as at that time were not, or since that time have not been, Reviv'd and Re-authorized, ought not to be Attempted, Alledged, Claim'd, or Put in Ure, at this Day. But by the Proviso in that Statute, such only of our Own Provincial Canons were allow'd, as were not contrariant or repugnant to the Laws and Customs of the Realm, nor to the King's Prerogative Royal: The whole Body therefore of the Popish Canon Law, which was not made by the Clergy of this Realm, is hereby utterly Abolished, and may not Lawfully be Used; and of our Own, All such Rules and Maxims as either were not made in some Provincial Domestic Synod; or being made there, are not Agreeable to the Laws of the Realm, are likewise hereby Cut off. And how far these two Allegations, (both founded upon Dr. A's Sense of that Statute) would go to put an End to all the Proceedings of those Courts; I shall submit it to Those who are concern'd in them, to consider. In the mean time this is evident, that the design of all these Notions was the same; viz. To destroy the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction of the Bishops, and their Courts and Officers: And that the Ground they went upon, was the very same for which Dr. A. now so much Contends; viz. that by the Canons which the Clergy are forbidden to Attempt, we are to understand such Old Canons as had before been Made, not such New Ones as should hereafter be Enacted, in any following Synods or Convocations.

Apology for the Courts Eccles. part 1. chap. 1.

In Answer to this Suggestion, Our Learn'd Dr. Cosens undertook to defend those Courts, in which he was himself One of the Chiefest Judges; and the Ground of his Defence was built upon that Sense of the Statute which I have before offer'd. He asserts it, as a matter out of all doubt, that the design of the first Paragraph of it, was to Regulate the Clergy in Making of New Canons, not to Abrogate and Annul such Old ones, as had before been made. "The chiefest “ chiefest colour ( says he ) and pretence for this Opinion ( the Opinion of “ the Puritans and Dr. A. ) is taken out of the New Reviv’d Statute, made in “ King Henry the VIIIth’s time, of Submission of the Clergy. But the Words “ thereof do plainly discover the Weakness of such Collection. For it is not “ Enacted simply, that they shall not Put in Ure, &c. Any Constitutions, &c.

 “ but according to their abovesaid Submission and Petition ; which was, That they “ would not Enact, or Put in Ure, any New CANONS, &c. in their Convocation, “ without the King’s Royal Assent and Authority in that Behalf. Otherwise there were “ a flat Contrariety in the self same Act, by Reason of the last Proviso there“ of ; where CANONS already made, so they have the Qualities thereby limit“ ed, are appointed to be Us’d : For it is there said, shall be now still Us’d and “ Executed, as they were before the making of that Act.

I have the rather given this short Account of this Matter, that it may thereby be seen who they were, who, ( as far as I can learn, ) first set on foot the Sense of this Statute, which Our pretended Church Advocate now Advances, and for what End they did it. As for Dr. Cosens his Opinion in this particular, we have already seen to what he suppos’d that part of the Act to belong. That it related to New Canons hereafter to be Enacted, not to those which were before made. The meaning of the Words of it we have in another of his Pieces, to this Effect ; <sup>1</sup> “ that a Provincial Synod cannot be Called without the King’s Writ ; <sup>2</sup> Cosens Ta-and that being Call’d, nothing can be either Treated of, or Determined in it, ni- bles.
 si Consentiente & Assentiente Principe. So that by Attempting, &c. therefore he understood Treating ; the same which the Judges afterwards express’d by Conferring to Constitute, in their Exposition of it.

To evade this Authority, <sup>2</sup> Dr. A. first quarrels with the Book from whence <sup>2</sup> Rights &c. it is taken : He tells us, it is a Posthumous Piece, published after the Death of p. 409, 410.
 its Author, and therefore as he ( without any Ground ) supposes, Corrupted in this Place. To set it right, if not to the Author’s Sense yet to be sure to his Own ; He thinks that the word Treated, should be Wholly Struck out, and then all will be well. But as this is but precariously suppos’d, without any manner of Reason offer’d to support such a Conjecture ; so the Assurance we have, that Dr. Cosens did hold all that Paragraph of the Act, on which his Propositions are built, to belong to New Canons, is a sufficient, indeed a convincing Proof, that he wrote it just as we now have it ; and intended by the word Treating, to express the sense of what the Law meant by the several Terms of Attempting, Alleging, Claiming, and Putting in Ure.

From this great and Learn’d Civilian, Let us proceed in the Next Place, to <sup>3</sup> Sect. 52.
 the Opinion of a no less eminent Common Lawyer, and Antiquary, <sup>2</sup> Mr. Lambard, <sup>2</sup> Archeion in his Treatise of Courts, to the same purpose : Where speaking of the Con- page 10.
 vocation, with reference to this same Statute, he thus briefly delivers the Sum-of the Clause before us : That it is Always Summoned by the King’s Writ ; and can Do Nothing without the Royal Assent, first had and Obtain’d.

This I think, comes fully up to what we are now Affirming ; and yet the next <sup>3</sup> Sect. 53.
 Evidence, of as Worthy and Learned <sup>3</sup> a Divine, afterwards a Bishop of our <sup>3</sup> Bilson perpet.

 tans, of whom I was before speaking, against Us. The fault, say they, We find Chapt. xvi “ is, that Archbishops have Suppressed the liberty of Synods, and reserved all things to “ their Own Jurisdiction. To this he thus replies : “ Who I pray you, prohibiteth
 “ the Use, or Abridgeth the Power, of Synods, to Make Rules, and Determine causes “ Ecclesiastical ; the Metropolitan, or the Prince ? Take good heed, lest by eager,
 “ and often Calling for the Indiction and Decision of Synods, at the Metropolitan’s Hands, “ without the Prince’s leave, You Erect a new form of Synods, not to Advise and “ Guide the Magistrate, when they be thereto Requir’d, but to straighten or forestall
 “ the Princes Power.

“ True it is with us, no Synods may Assemble without the Princes Warrant, as “ well to Meet, as to CONSULT, of any Matters touching the State of this Realm.
 “ Otherwise they have no Power of themselves to make Decrees, &c. Which Sense himself thus clearly, delivers in his own Latin Translation of this same Book, <sup>4</sup> “ Verum quidem est nullas apud nos Synodos, sine Principis præcepto, <sup>4</sup> Edit. Anno

Sect. 54.

After so clear and formal a Declaration of this Matter, by three Persons of so great Eminency in three several Faculties and Professions; I know not what I could more add, unless it were the sense of a whole Convocation; against which because Dr. A. has made some Exceptions, tho' of no great Moment, which will come in their Order of time to be Examined, I shall but just mention it here, and so leave the more full Consideration of it to that place. The Bishops and Clergy of York having Agreed to a Benevolence to the Queen, in the Convocation of 1586. the Payment whereof they desir'd to enforce by their Own Ecclesiastical Authority; first accounted their Grant to her Majesty; and then, in the next place, requested her not only to Accept the same, " but also by her Letters Patents under her Great Seal, to Assent thereunto; and to License and Authorize them, in that their Convocation, to Devise, " Make, and Ordain, such Orders, Decrees, or Constitutions Provincial, and Synodal, " as they should think Expedient, for the more speedy and sure Levying and " Payment of the said Benevolence.

Such need did that Convocation think its self to have of the Queen's License to Devise, as well as to Make and Ordain, in their Assembly: And that this had been both the Opinion, and Practice of preceding Convocations, will in the Prosecution of their History more fully Appear. In the mean time, having hitherto shewn what Authority we have, of all kinds, for the Necessity of a Royal License to Attempt, as well as to Enact; to Treat and Debate of, no less than to Make Canons; Let us stop a while, and Consider whether Dr. A. has Offer'd as Good, and Full, and plain Opinions, to prove, that they may without any License, Deliberate upon, Frame, and Agree to such Canons, notwithstanding this Act; provided they do but in this last Instance, proceed with a Salvo for the King's Authority to be had before they shall be look'd upon as fully Enacted by them.

Sect. 55.

And first, I must observe, that the Greatest part of Dr. A's Authorities which he alleges in Confirmation of his Opinion, are meerly Negative. They neither expressly Apply those Words of the Statute, 25 H. 8. c. 19. Attempt, Allege, Claim, or Put in Ure, to old Canons, (as Dr. A. does) nor deny them to belong to New Ones. They neither Affirm that the Clergy in Convocation may Deliberate upon New Canons, in order to the Enacting of them, without a License first Granted to them so to Do, nor do they otherwise Intimate that they had any design to Determine any thing on the One side, or the Other, in this Controversy. But what then do's Dr. A. produce them for? Why he shews that some Persons, where they transiently speak of this Act, have only taken notice of the Clergys being deprived thereby of the Power of MAKING CANONS, but say nothing of their being Restrained by it, from Debating, or Treating, concerning them.

Now such Negative Authorities can be at the most but a Presumptive Evidence in this Case, supposing them to be full and Particular; but if instead of being such, it shall appear that they are General, and Imperfect, and Loose in their Accounts of this Statute; That in taking notice of it, they design'd only to mention what was the Main Thing that was done by it, without Entering on an exact Declaration of All the Circumstances which accompanied the Doing of it; it will then follow, that they are not so much as Presumptive Proofs on his side: Nor can serve for any thing, but to shew the weakness of a Cause, for which no better, or plainer Testimonies, could be produced. To come therefore to Particulars.

Sect. 56.
Rights &c.
pag. 89.
Addit. p. 51.

The Ant. Brit. he says, give this Account of the Act; that the Clergy in Convocation promised the King, that they would not Make any Ecclesiastical Laws in time coming, nisi & Synodus, &c. unless both the Synod were Assembled by the King's Authority; and the Constitutions Published therein, were Confirm'd by the same Authority. Will Dr. A. himself say, that this was all that the Clergy promised to the King? Then, for ought I can perceive, the Clergy may not only Deliberate, but may Conclude upon Canons without any License; nay may Publish, and Promulge them too in their Synod. All they are to do is to see, that before they send them abroad as Synodical Constitutions, they Obtain the King's Patent of Confirmation; (for of that only this Authority speaks) but as for any Other License, which yet Dr. A. himself, insists upon no less than I do, there is no need of it.

The

The other Passage which he produces from the same History, is yet more short: It takes notice only how the "Authority and Power of the Synod was lessened, or rather, intirely broken and overthrown, after that the Clergy had promised, that they would therein Decree nothing without the King's Authority. And Dr. A. may as well from thence infer, that having Decreed with the King's Permission, they needed no License to Promulge and Execute any Canon by vertue of this Act, because that neither of these do's that Author take any Notice; as that they did not need it to Treat, and Confer, because no mention is made of that. The End of such Debating as we are now speaking of, is Enacting, or Concluding upon Canons. Where there is, confessedly, no Power to do the One, it is but a Folly to set upon the Other. For what signifies it for a Venerable Body of Men to enter upon long Debates; to Consult, and Treat about the Matter and Draught of a Canon, when they know they must stop there, and can stir no farther without a Royal License. They may provoke the Prince; may raise Divisions in the Church, and discontents among the People; In a word, They may do Mischief to themselves, to Religion, and to the Civil Peace, by such Debates. But as to all the End at which such Debates either Do, or I am sure, should Aim, it is Vain and Fruitless for Men to Deliberate of what they neither Can, nor Dare to Go through with. And therefore it is enough for an Historian who regards the Dignity of that Body, to say, that they cannot now, without the King's Leave, Make any Canons, without troubling himself to descend to every other Circumstance of their Confinement; Or to take a particular Notice, that they may not without such a License, Treat or Confer in those Matters, in which they are confessed to have no Authority to Establish, or Decree.

My Lord Herbert in his History of King Henry the VIIIth, gives a very short Abstract of the several Acts which were pass'd in the same Parliament with this of which we are now discoursing. The Submission of the Clergy he thus recites, that they will not from henceforth Make, or Alledge, any New Constitutions without his Highness's Assent and License. Do's this take in the full Substance of it, as it lies in that Act? Dr. A. will not pretend that it does. And yet defective as this Recital is, One thing it does which Dr. A. did not care to Observe; that is, it takes two of the Verbs made use of in that Act, and Applies them Both to New Canons; tho' one of them belongs to that Set which he contends to Relate only to the Old Ones. So little does that Passage make for his Advantage! But his Lordship goes on, and thus Abridges the Parliament Sanction upon their Submission; that in the Convocations, nothing shall be Promulged, or Executed, without his Highness's License. What says Dr. A. to this? Is this all that that Statute Requires? Then 'tis for Promulging and Executing only, that the King's License is required by vertue of it: And so the Clergy may still not only Attempt, but Enact too, whatsoever Constitutions they Please, without it.

Sect. 57.
Herb. Hist.
p. 399.
Rights, &c. p.
89, 94.
Addit. p. 40.

In the other Passage, my Lord Herbert refers not to this Act, but to the Submission of the Clergy some Years before. By what mistake his Lordship Applied the Promise there mentioned to that Submission, I cannot tell. It is enough that he speaks only of what the Clergy Promised, not of what the Parliament Enacted: And I need not tell Dr. A. that the Words Attempt, &c. were not in their Submission, tho' they were put into the King's Form; and from thence taken into this Act. However, here again, all that the Historian says is, that they promis'd for the future to Make no Constitution, nor Execute any without the King's Leave: He mentions not Attempting, &c. in one part of that Clause; nor does he any more take any more notice of Promulging in the Other. The reason of which is easie to account for; because Making, and Executing did, in effect, comprehend Them All; and therefore in a Place where, as an Historian, he had no need to be more particular, He thought it enough to mention those only.

Ibid. p. 349.

Rastal, and Poulton, are two Other Authorities alledg'd by Dr. A. to justify his Interpretation of this Statute. Had they Read upon it; had they otherwise given a full Account of it; their Learning and Profession would have made their Opinion the more Considerable. But to Appeal to Abridgments for the Sense of a particular Clause, or Word in a Statute, is a singular Method; and such as will be likely to give but a little Satisfaction to those, who desire to know the full Meaning and Comprehension of it. However, let us hear what

p. 40.

what they say: Poulton in his Abridgment, puts this Title before the Act, "That the Clergy in their Convocations shall Enact no Constitutions without the King's Assent. He says only Enact, therefore he suppos'd they might have Treated without it. By the same Logic I add, therefore having Enacted, they may also without the King's Assent, Promulge and Execute; nay, and for ought appears by Dr. A's Quotation, may Assemble too in Convocation without his Writ.

But he proceeds: "Rastall in his Repertory at the End of the Statutes, makes this to be the purport of it; That the Clergy in their Convocations shall Enact nothing, unless they have the Kings, (He should have added Royal) Assent and License. I answer as before: If this be not only the purport, but the full Purport of it, then there is no need of any Writ for the Convocation to Meet by; nor of any Letters Patents of Confirmation for Canons when Made, in order to the Legal Promulgation and Execution of them. If it be not the full Purport of that Act; if what Rastal expresses be so far from being so, that Dr. A. himself must Own all this to be wanting, to Compleat the Purport of it, he may please to tell Us why an Abridgment in which so many material things are Omitted, may not have pass'd over Attempting, as well as Promulging and Executing of Canons; nay and even the King's Writ of Summons, to Call them to Convocation.

Sect. 59.
Rights, &c.
p. 94.
Addit. p. 40.

Mr. Fox in like manner, gives a Summary account of this Act: He mentions only Enacting and Executing, of Canons; and says, that the Clergy had promised in Verbo Sacerdotii, not to do this without the King's Royal Assent. He takes no Notice either of Attempting on the one Hand, or of Promulging on the Other; but refers to the Statute for a more full account of it.

Rights, &c.
p. 94.
Addit. p. 40.

Bishop Godwyn is still more loose and imperfect: He says, that in this Parliament an Act was made for Abrogating the Authority of the Synod or Convocation, in Making of Ecclesiastical Canons, nisi quatenus Rex eos Ratos habuisset, unless the King gave his Royal Assent to them. If by Making of Canons Dr. A. will strictly understand, the Sole Act of Passing, or Enacting of them; then here is no reserve for the King's Assent to their Promulging, or Executing of Canons, &c. any more than for their Debating about them. But if to avoid this Omission, he will take it in a large Sense, so as to Comprehend the whole Process of the Convocation in this matter, from first to last; then to Make Canons, in this Signification, will import as well their previous Treating about them, before they pass'd, as their Publishing and Executing of them afterwards. In the former Sense, the Historians account is notoriously short of the Purport of the Act; in the latter, it refers as well to what he pretends is Omitted, as to what he must acknowledge ought to have been mention'd by him.

Rights, &c.
p. 94, 95.

Mr. Masons Authority I take, at all Adventures, as I find it reported by Dr. A. and upon the Credit of that, beg leave to ask him what it signifies to his Purpose? He says, that "it is Enacted by Authority of Parliament, that the Convocation shall be Assembled always by Vertue of the King's Writ? I agree with him, and make no manner of Question of it. He adds, "That their Canons shall not be put in Execution, unless they be approv'd of by the Royal Assent: I am perfectly of the same Mind; and desire Dr. A. to say, whether I ever made any doubt of it.

Sect. 60.
Rights, &c.
p. 97.
Addit. p. 45.

To proceed therefore to somewhat that may be more Pertinent; "the Authority of the Convocation its self, which set out the Institution of a Christian Man, a few Years after they had Submitted. In the Dedication of that Book, the Prelates address the King after this Manner: Without your Majesties Power, and License, we Acknowledge and Confess, that we have none Authority, either to Assemble together for any Pretence or Purpose; or to Publish any thing that might by Us be Agreed on, or Compil'd? What would Dr. A. infer from hence? The King had by a special Commission caused the Archbishops, Bishops, and other Prelates out of both Provinces, to meet together at Lambeth; and Required them "upon the diligent Search and Perusing of Holy Scripture, to set forth a plain and sincere Doctrine concerning the whole Sum of all those Things which Appertain to the Profession of a Christian Man. They Met, and drew it up accordingly; in a Book entituled by them, The Institution of a Christian Man: And having so done, they Dedicated it to the King, by whom they had been Call'd together, and Commissioned for this Purpose. "We do Offer it, say They, here- with unto your Excellent Majesty, most humbly beseeching the same to permit and suffer it, in case it shall be so thought meet to your most Excellent Wisdom, to be Printed;

Printed; and so with your supreme Power set forth, and commanded to be by us, and all other your Subjects of the Clergy of this your most Noble Realm, as well Religious as Other, taught to your Highness's People: Without the which Power and License of your Majesty, we Knowledge and Confess, that we have none Authority either to Assemble our selves together for any Pretence or Purpose, or to Publish any thing that might be by us Agreed on, and Compiled.

This was the Occasion of the Declaration here mentioned, and the Ground on which it was made. The King design'd to have a Book of Doctrine compiled, and set forth by Authority. He thereupon Assembled his Bishops and Prelates by his Commission; and by the same Commission, Required, (and in that Authorized Them,) upon the diligent Search of Holy Scripture, to Compile such a Treatise. They Met, Debated, and Drew up the Book, which they were commanded to Compile; and then desired the King that it might be Printed, Set forth, and Taught by his Command, to All his People. They took not the least step without his Assent; but from their first Meeting, to their final Concluding, had his Assent and Authority, to justify them in what they did.

And to shew that this was no more than was Necessary for them, they first profess, that they could not have thus Met together for this End, without his License: Without the Power and License of your Majesty, We Knowledge and Confess, we have none Authority to Assemble our selves together for any Pretence or Purpose: And 2dly, They add, that having Met, and Compiled such a Treatise by his Majesty's Command, They could not yet by their Own Power, Publish or Set it forth: Or to publish any thing that might be by us Agreed on and Compiled.

But what is there in all this to prove, that the Convocation may Debate and Treat of Canons and Constitutions, tho' not Enact them, without the King's License? Was this Meeting, in the first place, a Convocation; such as that Act speaks of? No, but a Select Committee appointed by a particular Commission, and for a particular End. Were here any Canons or Constitutions Provincial or Synodal, Debated upon, or Made by them? Not so neither: But a Book of Doctrine was Compiled out of the Holy Scriptures, at the King's Command. Do they in their Dedication, speak of Canons or Constitutions, such as the Act refers to? No, They do not; but of a Theological Treatise Agreed on, and Compiled by them. Or, to Allow for all this; Do they say, lastly, that they had Power to have Agreed upon, and Compiled such a Book as that, without the Kings Commission? Dr. A. himself dares not say it; but he thinks they IMPLY as much. I confess, I cannot see where any such thing is Implied. But be it so; Will Dr. A. stand by such an Implication? Will he Affirm that the Convocation, without the Kings License, have Authority to Agree upon, and to Compile any such Determination or Doctrine? If so, he will go much farther than I thought his Principles would have led him; which, as I understood him, left the Convocation a liberty of Debating only, but not of Agreeing and Compiling, without the King's License; or (at least which comes to the same thing) without a Protestation made, to Guard them against the Penalty of this Act, for the want of it?

In short, that which the Bishops and Prelates here acknowledge and confess, is this, that without the King's License, they had no Authority to Assemble, for any Pretence or Purpose; nor being Assembled (as here they were by the King's Power) and having by vertue thereof Agreed to, and Compiled such a Treatise, had they yet any Authority, without the like License, to Publish what they had Compiled. It was the King's License alone that could Authorize them to have Assembled together, to Agree, and Compile; and it was the same License alone, that could also warrant them legally to Publish what, being so Assembled, they had Agreed upon, and Compiled.

This was their plain Meaning, and all it proves, I conceive, is this; that if the King grants a Commission to any Number of Bishops, or Prelates, to meet together for any Particular End or Affair; they may, without any farther License, Treat and Debate of the Affair for which the King Assembles them, and come to proper Conclusions upon it. A Truth that no body, I believe, makes any Doubt of; but the pertinence of which to Dr. A's present purpose, I am yet to understand. For that this meeting was a Convocation, or Acted as such, was Dr. A's Error when he first wrote, as it had been Dr. W's before. He afterwards saw this to be a plain Mistake; but yet to make it look like a Proof to his purpose, was willing to dissemble it; as by comparing his cautious Note in the Margin of his Corrections, with what he afterwards observes concerning this very Book; it manifestly appears.

Sect. 61.

Hitherto I will adventure to say, Dr. A. has not alledged any one Testimony that do's in any Measure come up to the purpose for which he produces them. All he pretends to is, that the Writers whom he quotes do not expressly take notice of the Clergies being Restrain'd from Conferring to Constitute, as well as from Enacting of Canons; tho' neither do any of them Deny, but that they are so Restrained. The Passages give only a summary Account of this Act; and that (as most such general Accounts are, and I have particularly shewn these to be) a very short, and imperfect one.

But there are some Other of his Authorities which not only labour under this Defect, but fall under another Exception; namely, that they are taken from such Authors who were Enemies to our Church, and may therefore justly be suspected to have misinterpreted this Statute out of ill Will to it; as Dr. Cosens complains some did in his time, and we know, Others continued to Do in the next Reign also. He tells us that,

* Addit. p. 40,

The Ministers<sup>1</sup> of Devon and Cornwal allow, that the Clergy Assembled by the King's Writ, and his most Royal Assent, and Authority, given, may Enact and Put in ure, Canons, &c. Provincial. They are much in the Right; but would have spoken more to his Purpose had they said, that the same Clergy, without his most Royal Assent, and Authority given, might have Treated and Conferr'd about the like Canons, tho' not have Enacted and Put them in ure.

* Ibid.

The<sup>2</sup> London Ministers alledge, "that since the Submission of the Clergy of this Kingdom, the Convocation is bound by the Statute 25 H. 8. c. 19. from Decreeing or Executing ought repugnant to the Customs, Laws, or Statutes of the Realm. This again is a most certain Truth; but what the consequence of it is to the Purpose in hand, let him tell us that can.

* Ibid.

<sup>3</sup>Mr. Huntly, expounding this Statute, as far as concerns the Business of New Canons, says, that it Submits the whole Clergy to the Supreme Jurisdiction of the Crown, in these four Particulars; 1. That they cannot make any Canons in their several Jurisdictions, but only when they meet in a Provincial Synod. 2. That they must not meet in a Provincial Synod, until they be first Call'd thither by the King's Writ. 3. That when the Clergy are so Met, being so Call'd, and HAVE Made CANONS, they cannot Execute or Put them in ure, nay they cannot Promulge, or Publish any one of these Canons, until they are Confirm'd by his Majesty's Letters Patents. 4. That so far they may go, farther they cannot. If Dr. A. pleases to say what he infers from any, or all these Assertions; I shall very readily consider it: For my part, I know not how to Apply them to his Advantage.

But it may be, it is Mr. Huntley's Account of the Old Canons that falls in so nearly with his Exposition: "Which are either Canons made beyond Sea; and of these, he says, that none of the Clergy, in their several Jurisdictions, can Execute, or Put in ure, any such foreign Canons, until those foreign Canons are first Receiv'd here for Laws of this Land, by the King's Sufferance, and the Subjects free Consent, and Custom; Or Canons in this Land formerly made: And of Those, this Act Abrogates all such as are contrary to the Supreme Jurisdiction of the Crown, &c. and Approves and Establishes all the rest, until they be otherwise order'd by the 32 Persons there mentioned. From what part of the Act Mr Huntly infers the first of these Assertions, (which yet I take, in the main, to be very true) I cannot well determine. The other is plainly enough delivered in it. But neither in both, or either of these, can I see any thing that proves what Dr. A. affirms, and is, the Point in Doubt between us; that these Words, Attempt, &c. belong to Canons Already Made: And that the Clergy therefore, are Restrain'd only from Enacting, not from Conferring, &c. to Make Canons.

* Addit. &c.
p. 42.

The Treatise<sup>4</sup> of Oaths very rightly observes, that no Constitution or Ordinance should be Made, or Put in Execution, without the King's Authority: But still neither does that say, that Constitutions and Ordinances may be Debated upon, and Drawn into Form, and every thing done besides Enacting, that is requisite to the Making of them, whether the King gives the Clergy a License, or not, to Do it.

* Ibid. p. 43.

<sup>5</sup>Mr. Beals Papers either afforded nothing to Dr. A's Purpose, more than these Tracts had done, or if they did, he has had the ill Fortune to overlook it.

" Without

“Without the Prince's Writ, the Archbishop cannot Assemble any Convocation or Synod, nor Put in Ure any Canon therein agreed without her Highness's Sign Manual. What follows; why therefore they may Attempt, Allege, and Claim, without it? Nay, but I must add more (seeing that too is omitted, as well as all the Rest) therefore, they may Enact, and Promulge, without any License to Authorize them so to Do.

Again, “by the Statutes of England, no Bishop ought—to Publish any Decree or Canon, without the King's special License and Assent. The Consequence again is clear, and lies exactly before.

Again: “In the Articles of 1584, 'tis said in the Title, Establish'd by the Clergy; which Mr. Beal thought implied, that the full Strength thereof was derived from the Convocation, not from the Queen; who, as they there say, did but Allow and Confirm them. This he marvel'd much at, and thought to be a great Presumption: Let him draw the Conclusion from it that can.

Anno 27 Eliz. It was complain'd to the Parliament, “that the Clergy did Make, Promulge, and Execute, Articles and Injunctions, without her Majesty's Writ, and Royal Assent, contrary to this Act. Do's any body doubt but that if the Fact was true, the Complaint was very just. But Dr. A's Inference is this; That they complain'd only of their Making, Promulging, and Executing, and did not add their Attempting, Treating, Conferring. The Reason is so very plain, that I wonder Dr. A. did not, or rather would be thought not to have seen it. They Made Canons; this was alledged: And this sufficiently prov'd, as well as implied, that they had Attempted them. They Made them, 'tis the Word of the Act, which Answers to All the Verbs under Dispute; to Attempting, as well as Enacting: And therefore, by the Tenor of that Law, no less than in the obvious Reason of the thing its self, it includes all the rest. They Made, Promulged, and Executed Articles, without her Majesty's Assent: This was so great an Offence, so much beyond Attempting, &c. that Dr. A. may as well infer, that a simple Assault or Battery, is not prohibited by our Law, because it is not laid in an Indictment for Murder; as that Treating about Articles or Canons, is not forbidden, because it was not mention'd in a Complaint, where the Clergy were charg'd with Making, Promulging, and Executing of Them, without any License first had to warrant them in that behalf.

In a word, Concerning the Statute 25 H. 8. c. 19. Dr. A. tells us, Mr. Beale Observed, that the King has Authority; 1. To Summon Synods, and Convocations, by his Writ. 2. By his Royal Assent, to Approve their Constitutions before they be divulged. 3. With this Proviso, that nothing be done Contrariant or Repugnant to the Law of the Realm. Here again he would have it observ'd, that Mr. Beale says nothing of the Unlawfulness of Conferring without a License. 'Tis Allow'd; but withal it must be farther Observ'd, that neither do's he say Any thing of Enacting, any more than of Debating: And therefore, by the same Reason, that from this Omission he inferrs the One may be done without the Royal Authority; he will give me leave to conclude, that so may the Other too.

Sec. 61.

If Dr. A. be not yet sensible, of how little Force such kind of Inferences as these are, I will endeavour, by a parallel Instance or two more clearly to convince him of it. Bishop Sanderson, in a Treatise which he wrote on purpose to shew that Episcopacy was not Prejudicial to Regal Power, gives this Account of the Statute of 25 H. 8. c. 19. “That by that Statute, upon the Submission and Petition, of the Clergy, it was Enacted, that no Canons, or Constitutions, should be MADE by the Clergy in their Convocation, without the King's License first had in that behalf, and his Royal Assent After. This he delivers as the Sense of that Act: And from thence I thus argue, by Dr. A's Rule, that had this Reverend Prelate thought the Clergy were tied up not only from Enacting, but from Treating too, without the King's Authority, he would certainly have mention'd it; because this would yet more have shewn the Dependence of the Episcopal Jurisdiction, upon the Royal Supremacy; which was the thing he was there concern'd to prove, and for the sake of which, he alledg'd the Sanction of that Statute. And yet, in another part of that very Treatise before referr'd to, he declared the King's License to be necessary for the One, as well as for the Other; for that the Clergy cannot either <sup>2</sup>MEET without his Writ, or TREAT without his Commission, or ESTABLISH without his Royal Assent.

Sanderson's
Episcopacy;
&c. p. 121.

Ibid. p. 33.

* Heylin's Tracts, fol.
pag. 41. §. 6.

How expressly Dr. Heylin asserted the Necessity of a License, to enable the Convocation to Treat and Debate, I have before shewn: And yet, in his Justification of our Reformation, where he avowedly delivers the Sense of this Act, he do's it after the very same manner that those Authors do, whose Opinions Dr. A. Alledges on his behalf. "It's true, says he, the Clergy, in their Convocation, "can do nothing now, but as their Doings are Confirm'd by the King's Authority: And, I conceive, it stands with Reason, as well as Point of State, that "it should be so. For since the two Houses of Parliament, tho' Called by the "King's Writ, can Conclude nothing, which may bind either King, or Subject, "in their Civil Rights, until it be made good by the Royal Assent: So neither "is it fit, nor safe, that the Clergy should be able, by their Constitutions and Synodical Acts, to Conclude both Prince and People, in Spiritual Matters, until "the Stamp of Royal Authority be imprinted upon Them. "It is true, the "Clergy of this Realm can neither Meet in Convocation, nor Conclude any thing "therein, nor put in Execution any thing which they have Concluded, but as "they are Enabled by the King's Authority. So that, according to this Account, (may Dr. A. if he pleases, argue) All that Dr. Heylin thought the Clergy needed the King's Authority in, was, A Writ to Meet; a License to Conclude; and a Commission to Execute. But as for any Other License to Debate, or Treat, he knew no Occasion for it: If he had, he would never have omitted the Mention of it in a Place where he was expressly shewing what Incapacities the Clergy were brought under by that Statute, and the Submission on which it was founded.

* Against Ful-
pag. 65.

To confirm this Construction, as to Dr. Heylin's Opinion in this Case, yet more: Let us consider how he reports the very Form of Submission, which was sent by the King to the Clergy. "That no Constitution, or Ordinance, shall be "hereafter by the Clergy, Enacted, Promulged, or Put in Execution, unless the "King's Highness do Approve the same by his High Authority and Royal Assent. I conclude therefore, that the King never Required the Clergy to promise, in Verbo Sacerdotii, not to Attempt, Allege, Claim, or Put in Ure, any such Constitutions, or Ordinances; for, if he had, Dr. Heylin, who saw the Acts of this Convocation, and in Them the Form of that Submission, which Fox the Almoner brought to it from the King, would undoubtedly have mention'd that, as well as the rest. Yet Dr. A. knows how wrong an Inference this would be; and that All those Words were most certainly in the King's Paper, tho' Dr. Heylin omitted them (as Historians are but too apt to do) in his Abridgment of it.

* Hist. of
pag. 371.

In short; The same Dr. Heylin thus relates the History of the Convocation i Jac. I. "That by the great Industry, and indefatigable Pains of Archhishop "Bancroft, a Body of Canons was Collected, to the Number of 141, out "of the Articles, Injunctions, and Synodical Acts, during the Reigns of Q. Eliz. "and K. Edw. the sixth. Which being methodically Digested, Approv'd of in "Convocation, and Ratified by his Majesties Letters Patents, in the due Form of "Law, were stoutly put in Execution by the said Dr. Bancroft, translated to the "See of Canterbury, in December, 1604. Here we have a full Account of the Proceedings of that Famous Convocation, as far as this Statute is concern'd in them. The Convocation was Assembled by the King's Authority; but that being done, we hear of no Royal License for Collecting, Digesting, and Approving, of these Canons. Afterwards, indeed, when the Convocation had made them, they were Ratified in due Form of Law by his Letters Patents: But Dr. Heylin knew well enough, that the Convocation had Power sufficient of Themselves, without any Other License than that of their first Writ, to Collect, Digest, and Approve, of such Canons and Constitutions; and therefore he mentioned no Letters Patents for this, but only for the Ratifying of them; which was indeed the Whole of what they wanted them for.

Will Dr. A. allow of this Arguing in this Case? Will he permit me, in despite of the King's License, which himself has seen, and which Dr. Heylin had seen too, when he wrote this, by the meer dint of Consequence, to Argue a plain Matter of Fact out of Doors? If not, let him shew in what his Allegations differ from These; and why that should be a good Argument in his Case, that is none at all in this.

Sec. 63.

But there are still two Authorities remaining, which must not be forgotten: Mr. Bagshaw's, in his Argument against the Canons of 1640; And King Charles

Charles the First's, in his Proclamation against the Assembly of Divines, Anno 1644.

"The former, 'he says, in that famous Argument, being to produce the Words of this Statute, by which the Clergy have Power to Make Constitutions, says they are, That they shall not Enact, Promulge, or Execute, any Constitutions, &c. unless they may have the King's most Royal Assent to Make, Promulge, and Execute, the same. But as to Attempting, Alleging, Claiming, or Putting in Ure, he never dream'd that these were in the Act apply'd; or were Applicable to this Purpose; and therefore do's not mention them. And therefore he concludes, "that to the Making of Canons, there must be the King's Royal Assent.

Addit. p. 27

To shew how little we can depend on this Inference of Dr. A. which is still the same that All his Others were, a meer Presumption, without any Certainty, and therefore without any Force; I must observe, that Mr. Bagshaw's Business, in that Argument, was to shew the Illegality (that was what he undertook) of the Canons Made in that Convocation. His Second Topick, to prove this, was thus propos'd by him, "That they were not well Created by any of the King's Writs, or Commissions, to Enable them to MAKE Canons. The Question he thus states, Whether they had Lawful Authority to Make them, by force of the Statute 25 H. 8. c. 19. His Business was not nicely to state what the Clergy might, or might not do, without a Royal License, by virtue of that Statute, in the Business of Making Canons; much less of Attempting to Make them: But to argue, whether such certain Canons, ALREADY MADE, (and therefore past Attempting) had been Made by such Authority as the Act requires?

Mr. Bagshaw of the Canons, pag. 1.

And he thus begins his Argument with a downright Fallacy, not to say any thing harder of it. "The Words of the Statute, says he, by which the Clergy have Power to MAKE Canons, (he should have said, by which the Clergy are Restrain'd in their Power, which before they had, both by Right and Custom, to Make Canons; for that indeed was the Truth of the Case: But to wave this as foreign to my present Purpose) "are penn'd in the Negative: That they shall not Enact, Promulge, or Execute, any Canons, or Constitutions, &c. unless the same Clergy may have the King's most Royal Assent to Make, Promulge, and Execute, such Canons, &c. By which it plainly appears, that the Clergy have no Power to MAKE Canons, but in their Convocation; and that to the MAKING of these Canons, there must be the King's Royal Assent. Whether this were so, or no, comes now to be Examined.

Thus Mr. Bagshaw: And the Result of what he says, is plainly this: He argued about Canons already Made. He was to shew, that the Clergy had not had a Legal Commission for the Making of them. He had therefore no Concern with the Debates of the Convocation, previous to their Enacting. He own'd they had two Commissions from the King, before they Made them, and his Letters Patents of Confirmation after. But he pretended, that the first Commission determined with the Parliament; and if it had subsisted longer, was yet revoked by the second: Which being made out of Parliament, he deny'd, that it was such a License as that Statute required; or sufficient to Empower the Clergy to Continue to Sit as a Convocation, much less to Make Canons, in such their Assembly.

What therefore Mr. Bagshaw thought of the Convocations Power, to Treat without a License, or of the Words which relate thereunto, this Argument informs us not. He consider'd only of what was required to the Making, Promulging, and Executing of Canons, &c. That was his Province; and therefore to that only he applied both his Recital of the Statute 25 H. 8. and his Arguments upon it.

As for the Proclamation of King Charles I. "He tells us, it forbade the Assembly of Divines to Meet upon these, and these Accounts only; because, by the Laws of the Kingdom, no Synod, or Convocation of the Clergy ought to be Call'd, &c. but by the Authority of the King's Writ. Had it stopp'd there, this alone would have been sufficient to shew the Illegality of their Assembling; by virtue of any other Authority: Nor was there any need of the King's Proceeding any farther. However, he adds, "That no Constitution, or Ordinance, Provincial, or Synodal, may be Made, Enacted, Promulged, or Executed, unless with the King's Royal Assent, and License, first obtain'd. In the first Branch, he shews their Meeting to be Illegal; in the second, that their Acting (should they proceed to Make any Orders or Constitutions) would be so too.

Sect. 64. Rights, &c. p. 97.

His Concern was not to determine all the Niceties of that Act, consider'd with respect to a Legal Convocation. He insisted upon the two main things, that were proper to be taken notice of in such a Proclamation; That they could not Assemble without his Writ; nor Make, Enact, Promulge, or Execute, any Constitution, without his Assent. For the rest, what that Prince's Opinion, concerning the Convocations Power to Confer without a License, was, I have before sufficiently shewn, both from his Declaration set before the 39 Articles; and from his License and Patents of Confirmation, granted to the Convocation of 1640, about three Years before. So that this therefore may be another Proof of the Weakness of these kind of Authorities; and shew how little they can be depended upon, in a Matter of such Moment as this. The King here took no notice of the Clergies being prohibited to Confer and Debate, without his License: Therefore, says Dr. A. he thought that they might Treat, and Confer, without it. But in his Other Instruments, he expressly granted the Convocation a License to Confer, and Debate; and Asserted his Royal Prerogative to License them in this Matter: And therefore we are sure Dr. A's Inference from this Proclamation, must be fallacious; and that, notwithstanding the Omission of that Branch of his Sovereignty here, yet he did account the Clergy to be Restrain'd from Deliberating upon, as well as from Concluding of Canons, without his Royal License to Authorize them so to Do.

p. 98.

We are now come to an End of those Passages, by which Dr. A. pretends to Confirm his Exposition of this Statute. There are yet two Suggestions against this Restraint, which I suppose was laid upon the Clergy by it, which tho' of no great Moment, may yet be Proper to be just taken notice of, before I conclude this Point: The One is, that in the <sup>1</sup> Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum, there is not, as far as he can find, any One Expression that implies the Composers of it to have thought, that the Clergies Synodical Debates lay under any Restraint from the Crown; which (says he) is a very strong Presumption that they did not think the Clergy to lie under any. Now to make this any Presumption at all, and much more a very strong Presumption in this Case, we must suppose, that the King's Power over the Acts of Convocation, by virtue of this Statute, is somewhere or other Declared in that Book. It being otherwise unconceivable, how the Omission of this One Particular Circumstance of the Clergies Restraint, by virtue of that Act, should be a very strong Presumption against it; supposing that in that Book there is neither any mention made at all of this Act, or of the Incapacities which the Clergy were laid under by it. And yet this is the very Truth: That Collection speaks not one Word of the Convocation; or of what the Clergy may, or may not Do, there. It provides only for the Occasional Assembling of Provincial Councils for the Common Affairs of the Province; and determines of what Persons they should Consist, and by what Authority they should be Called. But as for the Convocations, of which we are now discoursing, there is not a Word about them: And Dr. A. may as well say, that the Clergy may Enact, Promulge, and Execute what ever Canons they Please, without any License or Commission to empower them so to Do; and tell us, the Silence of that Book is a very strong Presumption of the Truth of such an Assertion; as infer from thence, that it is any Presumption at all of their Power to Confer without it.

p. 376.

Nor is the Silence of <sup>2</sup> Archbishop Parker's Directory, of any greater moment in this Particular: Which shews only the Form of Opening the Convocation; but meddles not with any part of the King's Authority, by this Act, to License the Clergy to Confer, Enact, Promulge, or Execute. It proceeds no farther than to the Choice of a Prolocutor, and so concludes. But in those Convocations, which have had the King's Commission to Treat, &c. the earliest Notice that has been taken of it, has not been till after the Prolocutor was Chosen, Presented, and Confirmed; and therefore, in such a Formulary as Ends with that, we ought not to expect any account of it.

Sect. 66.

To Conclude therefore this second Point: That the Clergy in Convocation have no Power to Treat, Confer, Consult, or Debate, in order to the Making of any Provincial Canons, or Constitutions; Our Princes; Our Judges; Our Council learned in the Laws; Our Civilians; Our Divines; have plainly and fully declared. Those of Q. Elizabeth's Reign, speak after the very same manner that their Successors have since done: That the whole first Clause of the 25th H. viii belongs longs to New Canons, hereafter to be made; so Dr. Cofens. That the Convocation can Do nothing without the Royal Assent first had and obtain'd; so Mr. Lambard. That it cannot Consult without the the Prince's Warrant; so Bishop Bilfon. Whereas, on the other side, Dr. A. has not produced any one Church of England Writer (I might add, nor Puritan neither) that Exprefsly Applies those Words of the Act, upon which the Dispute depends, to OLD Canons, or denies them to belong to NEW Ones: Or otherwise affirms that the Clergy in Convocation may Treat, Consult, and Debate, about Provincial Canons, and Constitutions, in order to the Making of them, by their Own Authority, without any License or Assent from the Prince so to Do. He has only amassed a Heap of Witnesses, who speaking either of this Act, or of the Restraint lay'd upon the Clergy by it, do not expressly take Notice of this, as neither do they of several other Inabilities, under which yet we both agree they do lie, by vertue of that Statute; and from thence infers (but how Weakly, how Precariously, nay, how Falsly, I have abundantly shewn) that they were not aware that any such Incapacity was thereby laid upon them. Which being thus evinced, I proceed in the

(3d) and Last place, to Enquire how our Convocations have proceeded since the Passing of this Act; and whether it do's appear that the Clergy have ever, in fact, Treated, Conferr'd, and Debated, upon any Canons or Constitutions Provincial, or Synodals, in order to the Enacting of them, without being first Authorized by the Prince so to Do?

And this is again another Proof which Dr. A. himself allows to be of great Force in this Case; but ' he denies it to have been always on that side of the Question which I am now defending; and taxes me, with his accustom'd Severity, for affirming of it. He accuses me for carrying the Concession of the first Writer in this Dispute farther than he thinks his Words will bear; and thus Concludes with Relation to us both: " Indeed, should that Author have allow'd the " Stream either of Practice, or Opinion, to have been ALWAYS contrary to " his Sense of the Act, he had been, as Dr. W. now is, under a gross mistake; " for it is Certain that both General Opinion and Practice were on his side for many Years after the Act pass'd. But why then, if this be true, has Dr. A. left his side, to advance a middle Opinion, between His and Mine? The Author of that Letter held, that the Clergy had no need of any previous License to Enact: That One only was requir'd by the Statute of the 25 H. 8. c. 19. And that was the Confirmatory Patent by which the Constitutions, before made by the Convocation, were allow'd to be Promulg'd, and Executed. Now this Dr. A. utterly Rejects: He insists upon the Necessity of a License to Enact, tho' not to Treat; and in so doing, is Guilty (by his own Account) of that very thing for which he so severely Censures me: Whilst he also gives up that Right which yet, at the same time, He confesses the General Opinion and Practice for so many Years after that Act had been Pass'd, went for.

To correct therefore Dr. A.'s Expressions, and reduce them to his own Meaning, His Assertion I conceive should be this; that the General Opinion and Practice for many Years after that Act pass'd, were on that Side of the Question which he has now taken: And so it will agree with what follows; " That upon a strict enquiry into the Matter, He finds no Instance of a Commission to Treat that is not Threescore and ten Years younger than the Statute its self. " That the several Convocations in the twelve last Years of Henry the VIIIth; " Those of Edward the VIth; of Queen Mary; and Queen Elizabeth; All, for " ought he can find, TREATED without any such Commission or License in Writing. " 'Tis true, he says, the Registers of most Convocations, Summon'd since this " Statute, were lost in the Fire of London: However, large Extracts out of several of them are preserved, and compleat Transcripts of some: And in none of these is there the least footstep of any License under the Broad Seal to be seen, but very Plain Intimations to the Contrary.

So that now then the Matter of Fact, according to Dr. A. must have stood thus, That from the time of this Statute to the end of Queen Elizabeth, it does not appear that the Convocations had any Commission, or License in Writing, under the Broad Seal, to Treat; but that there are very plain Intimations to the Contrary; that is, that they had no such License, but Treated without any.

Sect. 68.

But still there is a difficulty or two remaining to be Clear'd, before we can proceed to Examine the particular Matters of Fact in this Case. For when Dr. A. tells us he can find no Footsteps of any Commission, or License; I conceive we are to understand him according to the Nature of his Own Hypothesis, and to his express State of this Point, p. 363. of a Commission to Treat: And that therefore, by ACTING without any such Commission, He means, that the Convocation Acted without any such License as that of 1603; whereby the Clergy were empower'd to Confer, and Treat, as well as to Enact. For otherwise, if he means that they Acted without any Commission at all, either to Treat, or to Enact, He out-runs his Own Hypothesis; and proves more than he pretends to, or will venture to Affirm the Convocation may do without a License, since the passing of that Statute.

I shall therefore take it for Granted, that Dr. A. does not design hereby to lay aside the need of Commissions, or Licenses to Enact (the necessity of which, by virtue of this Statute, he both Owns, and Contends for) but meerly of Licenses to Treat; the only Ones which, if I mistake not, he is against. But his next Limitation will be more difficult: For even of these Licenses he speaks as Commissions, or Licenses in Writing, and under the Broad Seal. Now 'tis certain the Act of King Henry the VIIIth determines nothing in this particular. It do's not say, that the Clergy shall not presume to Attempt, &c. any New-Canons, &c. unless they shall first have obtain'd the King's License in Writing,* under the great Seal of England, to Make, Promulge, or Execute the same. It speaks only of the King's License and Authority to be first had: But after what manner the King should send his License, or Give his Assent to them, in this Case, it prescribes not; nor pretends to Limit the Prerogative at all in that particular.

* Which the same Act expressly requires for the Confirmation of such Canons as should be Approved by the 32 Persons; and would therefore have done here, if here it had been necessary.

And accordingly, in stating of the matter in debate, I have purposely avoid-ed this, as a Circumstance in which I had nothing to do to Determine any thing One way or Another. The Act of Parliament requires the King's Assent and License to Attempt, as well as to Enact Canons; and in pursuance of that Act, I do affirm his Assent and License to be necessary to indemnify the Convocation in the One, as well as in the Other. But that this Assent should be testified by a License in Writing, under the Broad Seal, the Act says not; nor shall I therefore contend, that such a License is otherwise necessary, than as it seems to be most safe, and has for these last hundred Years, at least, been confessedly granted after that manner. Whether it was always so Convey'd to the Convocation in Writing, under the Great Seal, is another Question; in which I shall leave it to Dr. A. to think and resolve as he Pleases.

Whereas therefore Dr. A. speaking of Queen Mary's License to Cardinal Pool to hold his Legantine Synod, which still remains upon Record in the Register of his See, makes this Use of it, in the Present Case; "that if any other License of this Nature had, from the time of those Legantine Synods down to that of King James the Ist, been granted, it would also either in the Rolls, or Registers, be found; But none such appearing there, we have all the Reason in the world to Conclude that none issued: The most that can be inferr'd from hence, supposing the Fact to be true, is, that these Licenses, at the beginning, were not wont to be Granted, as now They are, in Writing, under the Great Seal; But it does not at all argue that the Clergy had not the King's Assent and License convey'd to them some other Way, according to the Purport of this Act.

† Rights &c. p. 375.

To convince even Dr. A. himself of the Weakness of his Arguing in this particular, let me only change the Point under Consideration, from a License to Treat, into a License to Enact Canons; and then ask him this Question: Has he met with any such License upon Record, during the time of which he here speaks? If he has, and if in those Licenses there is no mention made of Conferring, Consulting, and Debating, but only of Enacting Canons; that I confess would be to his Purpose, and weigh more with me than all he has yet alledged. But if he has not Met with any such License; (as from his Silence, in this particular, we may venture to conclude that he has not) then let him consider what the Consequence, upon his own way of Arguing, must be. I will give it him in his own Words: "The Observation naturally arising from hence is, That if any License of this Nature (relating to the Acting of our Convocations, and to the Clergy's Making of Provincial Canons there) had, from the time of these Legantine

‡ Ibid.

“ gantine Synods down to that of King James the 1st, been Granted, it would “ also either in the Rolls, or Registers, be found : But none such (as I can hear “ of ) appearing there, we have all the Reason in the World to Conclude that None issued.

And now what says Dr. A. to this Argument? Will he adventure, by the meer Strength of such an Inference, to Affirm, that the Clergy, during the time of Queen Elizabeth, Enacted Canons in Convocation with any Commission, or any Other License whatsoever, from that Princess so to Do? If not, let him give me the same Liberty that himself takes; and allow me to conclude, that tho no such License in Writing should appear either upon the Rolls or Registers, yet the Convocations may have had a License to Treat; as well as he must Grant that, notwithstanding the same Defect both in the Rolls and Registers, yet they certainly had the Queen's License to Enact, Promulge, and Execute.

The true State, therefore, of the Matter in Debate betwixt Dr. A. and Me, in the present Case, is this: Whether, in Fact, the Clergy did ever presume to Attempt, any more than to Enact, any Canons or Constitutions, in their Convoca- tions, without the King's License and Authority for the One, as well as for the Other?
 And to determine this; We must, first of all, lay aside All such Convocations, as, being Assembled, did not Confer upon nor Constitute any such Canons, as no Presidents either One way or Other in this Case. For whatever Business besides they Did, if they neither Attempted, nor Enacted, any Canons or Constitutions Provincial, or Synodal, it is All without the Compass of this Statute; and is such for which no special License or Commission is required by it.

Sect. 69.

2dly, If the Convocation should at any time be found to have Conferr'd even about some Canonical Matters; Yet, if it were not in Order to Constitute Canons, but only to Agree whether they should proceed to Make any Canons, first, and then to Address, or Petition the Prince for License (according to this Act) to Deliberate upon, and Enact them; this again, as it it would not be to Attempt to Make Canons, so neither would it prove any thing of a Right in the Clergy to do All that is Previous to the Enacting of them, without being empower'd by any Royal Authority in such their Attempt.

3dly, If the Convocation should not only have Attempted, but have actually Made, such Canons as the Statute speaks of; and it should not appear from any accounts, which are now remaining, that the Clergy had a License from the Prince to Confer or Treat about them; Yet still this will be no Proof, that they did Confer without Any, unless it can be shown that they had a Royal License, or Commission, to Enact such Canons, at the same time that they had none at all, or that it does not appear that they had Any, to Attempt, or Debate upon them.

4thly, Seeing in all such Commissions of License as Remain to us, there is evermore Granted, in the same Instrument, a Power to the Clergy to Confer, Consult, Treat, and Debate, as well as to Enact, and Constitute, in their Convocati- ons; if at any time either the Minutes which remain to Us of those Convocati- ons whose Acts are now lost; or Our Histories, which were written by Those who had seen their Acts, shall inform Us, that the Clergy were Directed or Empower'd, or otherwise Licensed by the Prince, to make Canons, &c. We ought to Conclude, that they were Commission'd not only to Enact them, but also to Debate upon them; unless there be some particular Remark which expressly takes notice that they were Empower'd thereby to Enact only, but not to Attempt, and Confer also.

But especially, 5thly, If we shall sometimes find that the Convocations did go to Work by a Previous Royal Authority, to Debate, as well as to Conclude, tho' at other times there should be no Mention made of any such License, yet this will warrant us to Conclude (unless the Contrary do Appear) that they did proceed Always by the like Authority; because, by Law, they were Always Oblig'd to do so.

Sect. 70.

These I take to be the General Rules by which we must proceed in judging on which side the Matter of Fact, in this Case, lies; and upon these, I shall now go on to the particular Examination of it. But before I do this, One Remark there is which I ought not to omit, because it is not only in its self very true, but is made by Dr. A. himself; and will, I think, go as great way towards the Deciding of the Point in Debate betwixt us.

At the Opening of the Convocation of 1537, ( ' so Dr. A. calls it ) Cromwell the King's Vicar General declared the Cause of their Meeting in a Speech, which the <sup>2</sup> Ant. Brit. thus briefly sum up ; Regis esse Voluntatem, &c. " That it was the King's Pleasure to reduce the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, to the Rule of the Holy Scriptures, and to Abolish all such things out of it, as were not supported by the Authority of God's Word. But <sup>3</sup> Mr. Fox gives us the very Words that he delivered, and they begin thus: " Right Reverend Fathers in Christ, The King's Majesty giveth you high thanks that ye have so diligently, without any Excuse, Assembled hither according to his Commandment. And ye be not Ignorant that ye be called together to determine certain Controversies, which at this time be mov'd concerning the Christian Religion and Faith, not only in this Realm, but also in all Nations thorow the World. For the King studieth Day and Night to set a quietness in the Church ; and he cannot rest until all such Controversies be fully Debated and Ended, thro' the Determination of you, and his whole Parliament. -- And he desireth You, for Christ's Sake, that all Malice, Obstinacy and Carnal Respect set apart, ye will Friendly and Lovingly dispute among your selves of the Controversies moved in the Church, and that ye will Conclude all things by the Word of God. --- Ye know well enough that ye be bound to shew this Service to Christ, and to his Church ; and yet notwithstanding, his Majesty will give you high Thanks, if ye will set and Conclude a Godly and Perfect Unitie : Whereunto this is the only Way and Means, if ye will determine all things by the Scripture, as God commandeth You in Deuteronomie, which thing His Majestie exhorteth and desireth you to Do.

<sup>4</sup> Rights &c.

Thus did Cromwel, in the King's Name, and by the King's Command, Open this Assembly: An Assembly of the Archbishops and Bishops of both Provinces, with other Select Prelates and Divines, called together purposely for this End ; and effectually empower'd, both by their Writ of Assembly, and by the Vicar General's Commission, thus solemnly deliver'd in the King's Name to them. <sup>1</sup> What Dr. A. means by Observing, that these Bishops and Prelates had not any Commission, I cannot well imagine. A Commission in Writing, under the Great Seal of England, they had not ; nor did they need any such License. But the King's Assent, and Authority to Dispute and Conclude, they evidently had ; and that is all that I insist upon. They neither Met without his Command, nor Attempted any thing without his Order, and Direction. The other Reflection of Dr. A. is more just, and is that which I am now particularly to take notice of: ' That " the Practice then, and long afterwards, was only for the President to declare to them by Word of Mouth, the King's Pleasure ; for what Ends he had Called them together, and what Business He would have them proceed upon. And this Verbal Intimation, was all the previous Leave that was either Askt, or Given, in that, or several other succeeding Reigns. This He confirms by some other Authorities, and then Concludes again: " I have laid these Instances together, that we may see clearly what the Custom then was ; and how a Message from the King, by the President, supplied the place of a Commission under the Broad Seal, which was afterwards practis'd. Dr. A. repeats this Remark several Times over: And from it, I conceive, I may have his Consent to Conclude, that tho' in the Reigns of King Henry the VIIIth, and his Successors, King Edward the VIth, and Queen Elizabeth, there was no Commission in Writing, under the Broad Seal, sent to our Convocations to Empower them to Treat, yet it was the Custom even then for the King to send them Messages by the President, who declared to them by Word of Mouth the King's Pleasure ; for what Ends he had Called them together, and what Business he would have them proceed upon: Which Message, so deliver'd, supplied the Place of a Commission under the Broad Seal, which was afterwards practis'd.

Now this, I have before said, Answers my Purpose to the full as well as any Written Commission could do: Whose Business is not to determine what kind of License the Clergy ought to have, to warrant them to Treat, and Confer, about Canons and Constitutions ; but whether, by the 25th of H. 8. c. 19. they do not need some License or Other for Both. And even here, in these Reigns, will Dr. A. please to tell us ; Had they a Verbal Authority to Treat, and after that, a formal License in Writing, under the Broad Seal, to Enact? Or did they, by the Vertue of the same Declaration of the King's Pleasure to them, Do both? In the Assembly of 1537, before mentioned, they not only Disputed, but Concluded too.

too. They drew up a Book of Doctrine, and presented it to the King as their Sense and Judgment, in the several Points which were therein Considered and Expounded. Had they any Other Authority for their final Conclusion upon these Doctrines, than they had for their previous Debating concerning Them? If not, then seeing Dr. A. allows the King's License, and Authority, to be requisite for the latter; he will give me leave to conclude, that what was thought an Effectual License, according to this Statute, for That, must needs have been accounted as effectual a License for the Other also. The manner of Authorizing the Convocations may in time have been changed; but the Sense of the Act was always held to be the same; viz. That the Clergy in Convocation needed the King's License to Confer, as well as to Establish; and were to be Empower'd by him for the One, no less than for the Other.

Against this Dr. A. has made an Exception, and it is indeed the only Ex-<sup>1 Rights, &c. p. 375, 376.</sup>ception that can reasonably be made against it: That when the first Convocation of Queen Elizabeth Assembled, whilst this Statute lay under a Repeal; the President demanding of the Clergy of the Lower House whether they had thought of any thing to Offer that day; They answer'd, That they knew not for what Cause they were Assembled, or of what Things they were to Treat? The Inference which he draws from their Answer is this; "That it was Customary for the Convocation to be directed to the Subject of their Debate by the Crown, even when the 25th of H. 8. lay under a Repeal: And such Directions therefore given at Other Times, when the Statute was in force, must not be supposed to spring from this Act, so much as from the King's known Prerogative; by which he ever propos'd, both to Parliaments, and Convocations, at their first Opening, the Reasons which He, on his part, had to Assemble them. I do agree with Dr. A. The King did not derive his Prerogative of Directing the Convocation in what they should Debate upon, from that, or any Other Statute: It was always the Right of the Crown so to Do. But yet by that Statute the Clergy were Restrained, tho' not from all kind of Debates, yet from all such as were held in Order to make Canons, without the King's Direction; and therefore, tho' the King's Prerogative be not deriv'd from thence, yet the Clergy's Restraint is. And that Restraint I do affirm to reach as well to their Conferring to Constitute, as to their Constituting of Canons; so that without the Princes License and Authority (which he by his Own Prerogative, not by Vertue of that Statute, has the Power to Grant) they may no more Treat of, than they may Conclude upon, any such kind of Constitutions.

Here therefore it is, that Dr. A. and I seem still to differ, as to the proceedings of these first Reigns. He allows that the King both by his Own Prerogative, and by the Authority of Custom, has, and ever had, a Right to Declare to the Convocation, wherefore he called them; and what Business he would have them go upon? He affirms that such Directions, so given to them in the King's Name, were to all Intents and Purposes a sufficient Warrant for them to proceed upon the Business which the King commanded them to do. I will not dispute that Point with him: This only I would Ask; Could the Clergy without such a Message and Direction, after the passing of this Act, have Confer'd to Constitute any Canons, or not? If not, then it must be granted that by vertue of that Act they were Restrained from Debating, as well as from Acting; which is what I am Contending for? If they could; then Dr. A. must shew, That the Clergy heretofore did, in Fact, Confer concerning Canons and Constitutions, not only without any Commission in Writing under the Broad Seal; but without so much as any Message sent them by the King, or any Direction from the President in his Name, so to Do. This, I say, he must shew, or he must Confess the Practice, even of our antient Convocations, to have run on that side of the Question which I am pleading for; and to prove the Necessity of the King's Royal Assent to warrant them to Attempt, no less than to Enact, any such Canons and Constitutions. Let us see how he proceeds, upon this true State of the Matter, to make good his Assertion against Me.

He takes the Rise of his Enquiries from the "Convocation which SAT upon a Prorogation Nov. the 5th, 1532. before which the Submission of the Clergy was made to the King, but not yet Enacted. In a Diary of that Meeting; he says, he

Sect. 71.

p. 364.

H h h h

he finds no hint of a Commission, and therefore Concludes that they had none.

Dr. A. is certainly a very fortunate Man, to have a Diary of a Convocation that met but once in all; and then did no manner of Business, but was prorogued to the 5th of February following; as those very Minutes, whereof he speaks, would have told him had he thought fit to Attend to them. Indeed upon its Resumption in February after, it sate till the 8th of April. In this time some Ecclesiastical Affairs were mention'd: First, Mr. Latimer's Preaching contrary to his Promise in the Eleventh Session; but nothing was done upon it. Then the Opinions of the Universities, in the Business of the Divorce, were openly read in the same Session: And a doubt was raised, whether they might Dispute upon that Point, because the Matter still remained before the Pope Undecided. The next Session the same Debate was Resum'd; and then the Convocation agreed with the Universities in their Opinions. In the following Meetings they treated farther of the same Point; and finally drew up their Resolution upon it.

Of this Dr. A. takes Advantage: ' He observes how that the Clergy made a doubt in this Case, whether they might Lawfully Dispute upon a Matter which at the same time lay before the Pope; " They had no Doubt it seems about " the Lawfulness of Treating without a Royal License. Nor had they any Reason to make any Doubt of it. For, besides that they were directed by the express Command of the King, to discuss the Question relating to this Matter; Who ever thought that to dispute a Point of Conscience, from the Principles of Divinity, and Canon Law, and that only in Order to the Delivery of their Opinions concerning it; was, or could be construed, to make Canons? <sup>2</sup> The Universities of Oxford and Cambridge did the very same, and that by the same Authority: So did the foreign Universities too. Dr. A. therefore, could hardly have begun his History more unhappily than with a Convocation, which did nothing but dispute of, and determine two Questions, as far as concern'd their Own Judgment, and did that too by the King's Authority; as an <sup>3</sup> Author of good Credit, who had seen the Original Instrument of the whole Process, expressly assures us.

But to go on with this Affair: The Convocation having Disputed and Concluded of these Questions, were content barely to set down in their Own Acts, what their Opinion as to each of them was; till upon the 5th of April, They, at the King's Command, made a Publick Instrument of their Proceeding: Which, at last amounted to this only; 1st, That, in their Opinion, to Marry a Brother's Wife, being first known by him, is prohibited by the Law of God, and beyond the Power of the Pope to Dispense withal. And, 2<sup>dly</sup>, That this was sufficiently prov'd to be the Case in the Marriage of the King and the Princess Catherine, by the Evidences which had been laid before them to that purpose. For this I need offer no Proof to <sup>4</sup> Dr. A. who has himself not only seen, but published the Instrument, which by the King's express Command was made about it.

In the Convocation the next Year, another Question was propos'd by the Archbishop to be discussed by the Prelates and Clergy there Assembled; concerning the Authority and Jurisdiction of the Pope in this Realm of England. The Convocation agreed in the Negative; that the Bishop of Rome has no more, or greater, Power in this Realm, than any other foreign Bishop. The Archbishop approv'd of their Opinion, and profess'd himself to be of the same Judgment; and order'd a publick Instrument to be made of it. And all this, as <sup>5</sup> Dr. A. observes, without any License to Qualify them for such a Debate; of which some notice would have been taken, if by the Statute, then newly pass'd, such a License had been held necessary. To say nothing of a small Mistake of <sup>6</sup> Dr. A. in Point of Chronology, as to the Passing of the Act of Submission, which was upon Monday the 30th, not upon Sunday the 29th of March: He Affirms, that the Convocation Debated upon this Question without License. Will he please to tell us what License they had to Conclude, and Determine, upon it? They had None to Debate, (so he infers) because None is taken Notice of. I add, that by the same Reason, they had None to Conclude, because neither is there Any taken notice of for that, any more than for the Other. But the Truth is, there was no need of a License for Either. They only discuss'd a Theological Point, and so gave their Judgments upon it. <sup>6</sup> Retulerunt, Affirmarunt, atque ita se sentire

sentire expresse Declararunt, are the Words: And the Archbishop himself did no more, se idem sentire Affirmabat. Which can in no reasonable Construction be interpreted to Attempt, or Enact, a Provincial Canon or Constitution; the only thing which, by that Law, they were forbidden to do.

But why does Dr. A. dissemble his own Knowledge, of the King's Authority for the doing even of this. In the Instrument of Our Convocation it was not, indeed, expressly mention'd, and therefore of that he gives us a Copy at large. But in the Instrument of the Convocation of York, which he had seen in Archbishop Lee's Register, and I doubt not had Copied from thence, the King's Order is expressly Recorded; tho' he thought not fit either to Publish their Instrument, or to give the least hint of it. The Question was proposed to the Clergy, juxta Regie Majestatis Mandatum. The Clergy were Rogati & Requisite, to Declare their Opinions upon it: And all this the Archbishop, Regia Celsitudini tenore presentium intimated and signified. If this does not sufficiently bespeak the Authority on which the Convocation Debated, as well as Concluded; I cannot tell what could have been more plainly Recorded for the Affirmance of it.

Should I add, that Dr. A. knew not only that this was done in Convocation by the King's Authority, but that the same was follow'd by the Universities, by the Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and by the Religious Houses over all England, I should say no more than what he would be forced to Own to have been the Truth. And they All did it by the same Authority of the King, either expressly Demanding it of them, or letting them otherwise know, that it was Expected from them.

Were it needful to carry these Reflections any farther, I might put Dr. A. in mind of yet one thing more, which He himself was aware of; That all this was done, in both these Convocations, before the Act of Submission was made, or by Consequence, the Clergy under any Restraint in their Convocational Debates. To this He Replies, "that tho' the Submission did not yet bind the Clergy as a Law, yet as a Promise it did. But he will give me leave to tell him, that he regards not what he says, when he thus Argues. For the Upper House not only did not Promise not to Attempt, Allege, or Claim, a Power to Treat of New-Canons; but did expressly Remonstrate against it; and the King accepted the Submission without it. So that however they were indeed restrain'd by their Submission from Enacting, and putting in Ure, any Canons without the King's License; yet they were hitherto free as to their Debates: And neither by Promise, nor Statute, Restrain'd from Treating of, but only from Making of Provincial Constitutions, in their Convocation.

Dr. A's next step is to the Convocation, which began June the 9th, 1536: But before I follow him thither, he will give me leave to stop, and consider how things went in the last Session of the foregoing Convocation, Anno 1534. At their first Meeting upon Wednesday the 18th of November; the Archbishop had a Conference with the whole Convocation concerning certain English Books, which he committed to several of the Bishops to examine, and commanded them to Report their Opinions to him. This Debate was almost the only Business of that Convocation; and scarce a Session pass'd in which it was not Resumed. But what was the result of this Matter? Did they thus Confer in Order to the Passing of any Decree, or Constitution, Provincial or Synodal, against those Books, their Principles, or their Authors? This, indeed, might have brought their Conference within the Purport of the Act of Submission. But this, therefore, they presumed not to Attempt, or to Do. Their Debates ended in a Petition to the King, that he would Require his Subjects to deliver up all such Books within a certain time; that He would direct a Translation to be made of the Scriptures into the Vulgar Tongue; and lastly, that he would Command that none of his Lay Subjects should Dispute about the Catholick Faith. This was the Result of their Debates; and this confirms what I have before observed. The Clergy in Convocation may Treat about Ecclesiastical Matters: They may Come to fitting Resolutions upon them. But they must neither Treat, nor Resolve, to Make any Canons, Constitutions, or Ordinances Provincial, without the King's Authority; which is the only Conference or Conclusion forbidden to them by this Statute.

To proceed now with Dr. A. to the Convocation of 1536: In which Cromwell, as Vicar-General, demanded a Place, and sat under that Character, at the head of it. On Friday, June the 23d, the Prolocutor, with the Clergy of the Lower House, presented to the Archbishop a Book, containing Sixty seven Opinions, collected by them; which they Declared they did think in their Consciences to be Erroneous; to have given Occasion of Dissention within the Realm; and to be worthy of Special Reformation. These Articles they Exhibited with a Protestation, that they neither in Word, Deed, or Otherwise, directly or indirectly, intended any thing to Speak, ATTEMPT, or Do, which any manner of wise might be displeasing to the King's Highness. — But that they did sincerely addict themselves to Almighty God, and his Laws, and unto their said Sovereign Lord the King, &c. and his Laws, Statutes, Provisions, and Ordinances, made here within his Grace's Realm.

Such a Petition, drawn up by a part of the Convocation only, and so guarded; which pretended not to Enact any thing, but only to present to the Bishops such Abuses as they desired might be Reform'd; was, I conceive, far from coming within the Statute of the 25th of this Reign. And yet, from the very manner of their presenting of it, Dr. A. very artificially endeavours to prove somewhat to his purpose. <sup>1</sup>“ Had, says he, any General Commission been granted them, there had been no need of this Protestation, which was made to guard them against the 25th and 27th of Henry the 8th, and has therefore, we see, a plain reference to them. I do Agree with Dr. A. that their Protestation did refer to the Act of the Clergies Submission, and I will venture to make this use of it; that by declaring, they did not intend to ATTEMPT any more than to Do what might be displeasing to the King's Highness, but did sincerely addict themselves to Him, his Laws, and Statutes, they have given us a fair Intimation, with respect to their Proceedings in Convocation, that they supposed they might become Criminal by the One, as well as by the Other; and therefore equally guarded themselves by their Protestation against both. But still here was no Attempt to Make any Provincial Ordinance, or Constitution; nor therefore any thing that needed a Royal License to warrant their Debates. All that was done, was to suggest to the Prelates such Matters as they suppos'd might be fit to be Reform'd, and so leave it to them, to Consider what Method would be the most proper to take for the Reformation of them.

But there was another thing done in this Convocation, which, without the Royal Authority, they could not have Attempted, much less have Concluded upon, as yet the whole Body of the Clergy did, and Dr. A. therefore ought to have given some account by what Commission it was done. The thing I mean, is the Book of Articles both of Doctrine and Discipline, which was Agreed to in this Convocation, and Promulged by the King's Authority. Of this, all the Relation we have in the Extracts of this Synod, is this; that on the 11th of July, the Bishop of Hereford produced a certain Book, containing Articles of Faith and Ceremonies: Which being Read by the same Bishop, the Honourable Tho. Cromwel, the most Reverend, and the Other Prelates, the Prolocutor and Clergy of the Lower House, approving the said Book, Subscribed to it.

The manner of its Compilation, I conceive, was this: The King first caused it to be drawn up, by such Persons as he thought fit to employ about it; and then sent it by Bishop Fox to the CONVOCATION, there to be Debated upon, Approved, and Subscribed; as accordingly it was, by the Vicar General, the President, the Prelates, and the Clergy there.

Hist. Book V.
p. 214:

That this was the Method which the King took in this Case, the several Expressions of such Public Instruments as relate to it, prompt me to believe. In a Letter of the Kings to the Bishops, still remaining in the Cotton<sup>2</sup> Library, he thus speaks of these Articles; “ We were constrain'd to PUT OUR OWN PEN TO THE BOOK, and to Conceive certain Articles, which were by All You the Bishops, and Clergy of this our Realm, in Convocation Agreed on. This was dated November the 19th Regn. 28; about four Months after the Passing of these Articles. It was this, I conceive, gave Occasion to that Passage in the King's Letters of Confirmation prefix'd to them; <sup>3</sup>“ that he had not only in his Own Person, at many times, taken great Pains, Study, Labour, and Travail, but had also caused his Bishops, and other the most discreet, and best Learned Men, of his Clergy of the whole Realm, to be Assembled in Convocation, for the full DEBATEMENT and quiet Determination of the same. Where, after long and mature DELIBERATION had of, and upon, the Premises, they finally Concluded and Agreed, &c.

It is to the same Effect, that the King speaks in another Letter, which he dated the very next day July the 12th; for the Suspension of Preaching for some time; which Dr. A. not only saw, but Copied (tho' not with the Exactness he should have done) out of Bishop Fox's Register, and has publish'd in his second Appendix. "Forasmuch as we being, by the Ordinance of God, King of this Realm, and by vertue thereof Supreme Head of the Church of the same, it appertaineth to our Duty to provide and see that Unity, Concord, and Agreement, may Remain among our Subjects, Members of that Politic Body whereof we be the Head, specially in Opinion and Sentence of our Religion. Albeit considering that upon Contention arising among our People, in Diversity of certain Opinions, we have, conformably to our said Duty, for the Profit and Setting forth of the Truth of God's Word, the Suppression of Errors, and the Reducing of such Controversies to One Good and Catholick Conformity, CAUSED all you the Bishops, with the Clergy of our Realm, in solemn Convocation, deliberately DISPUTING and ADVISING the same, to AGREE to certain Articles most Catholick conceived.

And here then we may plainly see by what Authority the Convocation Debated of, Disputed about, and Advised; and finally Concluded upon, and Agreed to, these Articles. The King Caused the Prelates and Clergy to be Assembled for this Purpose. Being Assembled by his Writ, He Caused the same Prelates and Clergy deliberately Disputing and Advising, to Agree to them. How he executed these Commands, whether by his Vicar General, or by their President; by a Written License, or by a Verbal Direction; I enquire not: It is enough that they Debated and Advis'd, as well Concluded and Agreed, by the King's Authority, and that this we are so fully, and in so many different manners, told, that there can be no Doubt of it.

To the Evidences, before given, I might add those of the <sup>2</sup> Injunctions, which were set forth not long after these Articles; in which the Use of this Book is thus enforc'd: "Whereas certain Articles were lately Devised and Put forth by the King's Highness's Authority, and Condescended unto by the Prelates and Clergy of this his Realm in Convocation, &c. But instead of pursuing this Matter any farther, I shall rather beg leave to take notice of such a Piece of Misrepresentation, which Dr. A. has thought fit to make of my self upon this Occasion, as deserves a much harder Name than I am willing to give to it. He first speaks in a very severe Strain of King HENRY the 8th; and then thus proceeds with Me upon it. "And yet the Acts of this King, the most Exorbitant and Oppressive Acts of Power, which he Exercis'd towards the Clergy, are produc'd by Dr. W. as GOOD and LAWFUL PRECEDENTS, which All his Successors are ALLOW'D, and INCITED to follow: PARTICULARLY that Instance of his Correcting, and Amending, the Determinations of the Clergy in Synod, even upon Doctrines of Faith, is given us without any Intimation that such a Practice exceeded the Bounds of Kingly Power.

Now, not to dispute how far a Christian Prince, in a Corrupted State of the Church, may warrantably Correct the Later Determinations of his Own Synods, if he finds them to run apparently contrary to the Catholick Doctrine deliver'd in the Holy Scriptures, and establish'd by the Authority of more Ancient and Greater Councils; (which, with Dr. A's Favour, our most eminent Divines have not doubted to affirm every such Prince may not only Lawfully, but Commendably, Do) The Question is, Whether, in fact, Dr. W. did produce this as a Good and Lawful Precedent in this Case, without any Intimation, that herein that Prince Exceeded the Bounds of his Kingly Power; and Allow'd, and Incited, All his Successors to Do likewise. And for this, I appeal to my own Words, upon which he grounds this Charge against me; "Whether our Kings may not only Confirm such, and so many, of the Canons, &c. of their Convocations, as They shall judge Expedient, and Refuse and Reject the Rest; but may also, by their Supreme Authority in Ecclesiastical Matters, Correct and Amend, Those which they do Allow of, I SHALL NOT UNDERTAKE TO SAY. But so we are told Henry the 8th did, and that in a Case of the Strictest Nature, in framing the very Articles of Religion, which were afterwards Publish'd by his Authority, Anno 1536. THUS MUCH, I believe, may warrantably be ASSERTED, That as the King has Power, without a Convocation, to Make and Publish such Injunctions, as he shall think the Necessities of the Church to Require, and to Command

“ Command the Observance of them ; so may He, with the Advice and Consent of his PARLIAMENT, much more, not only Make what Ecclesiastical Laws He shall think fitting, for the DISCIPLINE OF THE CHURCH, but make such use of the Convocation, and the Resolutions Agreed to in it, in Order thereunto, as he shall think fit : And (as I have shewn the French Kings heretofore to have done ) may not only Confirm, or Disallow, but may sometimes even Alter, and Correct, what is done by them, according to his own Liking.

And here now, let Dr. A. say, Where do's Dr. W. Approve of King Henry the 8th's Correcting the Determinations of that Synod in Matters of Faith, and Allow and Incite All his Successors to follow his Example ? He suspends his Judgment, whether they may Do it, or no : He just mentions the Action of King Henry the 8th, without any Mark of Approbation, to Recommend it, much less to Incite all his Successors to Do likewise. And waving any Resolution in so nice a Case, Asserts nothing but what Dr. A. himself must confess to be true ; That Our Kings, as well as Other Christian Princes, may make Laws in Ecclesiastical Matters. That for the better, and more regular, doing of this, They may, and indeed, ordinarily, ought, to take the Advice and Consent of their Bishops, and Convocations. And that, having so done, they may, upon their Sense and Resolutions, frame any such Useful Law as they shall think fit, in their Own Words ; without being confined to the Terms and Expressions ; or perhaps (in every Circumstance) to the very Substance of their Synod's Determination. This was the Summ of what I Asserted : Let the Impartial Reader judge what there is fairly to be excepted against, in it.

Sect. 76.
1537.
Rights, &c.
p. 367.

How that Meeting<sup>1</sup> which Dr. A. calls the Convocation of 1537, was set to work, I have before shewn : It Assembled by the King's Command, and both Treated, and Concluded, by his Authority. In it was fram'd a Book of Doctrine, Intituled, The Institution of a Christian Man. This the Bishops submitted to the King's Judgment, in a Stile which Dr. A. can hardly with Patience hear of. “ We do most humbly submit it to the most Excellent Wisdom, and Exact Judgment of your Majesty, to be Recognized, Overseen, and Corrected, if your Grace shall think any Word or Sentence in it meet to be Changed, Qualified, or farther Expounded. He took the Liberty which they gave him, and Corrected it accordingly ; as by an<sup>2</sup> Original Letter of the Archbishop to Cromwell, still remaining, it appears. <sup>3</sup> Mr. Fox adds more ; That he not only Corrected, but Enlarg'd it too ; adding, with his own hand, the Article of Images. If I might be Allow'd to conjecture in this Case, I should think, that what the King did to this Book, may have given Occasion to the Mistake of some of our Learn'd Writers, of his Correcting the Articles publish'd by the Assent of the Convocation the Year before. It being plain, that the Articles of the Convocation of 1536, were first brought to the King's Liking before they pass'd that Synod ; as the Doctrine of this Assembly was Corrected by him, after they had Agreed to it, before it was Printed ; and yet was Publish'd in their Name. And that Dr. A. may take me right now, whatever he did before, I do Affirm it to be no undue Usurpation in any Prince, if a Church be generally Corrupted in its Doctrine, by the Advice of a few Orthodox and Sober Bishops, and Clergy-Men, to Correct the apparent Errors of a Provincial Synod ; and to Maintain or Set forth the Truth of those few, tho' contrary to the Sense and Determinations of a Greater, but Mistaken Assembly.

The next Convocations were held, both at London and York, on the 2d of May, 1539. In these, those Articles were propos'd, upon which the severe Statute soon after pass'd 31 H. 8. c. 14. By what Authority the Convocations Treated of these Articles, that Statute will tell us : “ The King's most Royal Majesty most prudently pondering and considering, that, by Occasion of variable and sundry Opinions and Judgments of the said Articles, great Discord and Variance hath arisen, as well amongst the Clergy of this his Realm, as amongst a great Number of the Vulgar People, his loving Subjects of the same ; and being in a full Hope and Trust, that a full and perfect Resolution of the said Articles should make a perfect Concord and Unity generally among his Loving and Obedient Subjects, of his most excellent Goodness, not only COMMANDED that the said Articles should DELIBERATELY and ADVISEDLY, by his said Archbishops, Bishops, and Other Learned Men of his Clergy, be DEBATED, ARGUED, and REASONED, and their Opinions therein to be UNDERSTOOD, DECLAR'D, and KNOWN, but also, &c. With

With the Parliament the Year following, the Convocation was summon'd; Sect. 78.
 But what it did, or whether it did any thing at all, I cannot tell. <sup>1540.</sup> The Business of Religion, both as to Doctrines and Ceremonies, was put into another Method, and two Committees were appointed by the King to Debate and Conclude of Journ. H. Lords, 12 April, 31 H. 8.
 Each. In the former, were the Two Archbishops, and Six Other Bishops, and Twelve of the Clergy: In the latter, were only Six Bishops, who were to Deliberate of the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church. What these should Conclude upon, and the King by his Letters Patents Confirm, <sup>32 Hen. viii.</sup> the Parliament decreed should be Obey'd and Observ'd; Provided nothing were Done, Ordain'd, or Defin'd, c. 25.
 contrary to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm.

But not to insist upon these Committees, with which our Argument is not 1541.
 concern'd; nor yet upon the Convocation of the Archbishops, Bishops, and Clergy of both Provinces, deputed by the King to determine the Business of his Marriage with Anne of Cleve. On the 20th of January, the next Year, the two Con- vocations met, four Days after the Parliament. Of that of our Province, <sup>3 Dr. A. 3 Rights, &c. p. 368.</sup> has observed, with Relation to our present Enquiry; That the Archbishop, at the Opening of it, declared to the Prelates and Clergy, in the King's Name, that it was his Intention they should DELIBERATE among themselves about the Reformation of Errors, and Make Laws for the Avoiding of Simony, &c. He might have taken notice of several other Particulars; but in the mean time, here is enough to shew, that this Convocation DELIBERATED upon all these things, at the King's Command, and therefore to be sure had his License and Assent for what it did. And in the following Sessions of the Convocation, as often as they came to any particular Propositions, or Conclusions, within this General Direction, still the Archbishop Decreed, that the King should be Consulted about it; so that nothing was here either Done, or Decreed, without his Knowledge and Con- sent.

In this first Convocation, it do's not appear that any thing was Establish'd: Sect. 79.
 In the next, upon the 16th of February, 1542, the Book of Homilies was deliver'd in by the Prelates, who had been deputed to compose it. This was One of the things which the Archbishop had directed to be done, in the King's Name, at the first Opening of this Convocation. At their next Meeting, the President told them, that it was the King's Pleasure that certain Ecclesiastical Books should be Examined, and Corrected. The Session following, the Clergy of the Lower House made four Petitions to the President and Prelates in the Upper. After this, some Debates were held concerning Doctrinal Points, pursuant to the King's Intention at first declared to them; but nothing, that I can observe, was either Attempted, or Done, but in vertue of it. Nor do I find that they had any Other Authority to Constitute, and Decree, than that upon which they Conferr'd and Debated. The King's Pleasure, declared to them by the Archbishop, was what they seem to have gone upon: Whether it were any otherwise Convey'd, either to him, or them, I cannot tell.

And here Dr. A. puts an End to the Proceedings of the Convocations during this Reign: And indeed, tho' some others met after this, yet either nothing at all was done in them; or, if there were, the accounts of what they did are utterly lost to us. Let us therefore now take a summary Review, how we have found the Matter of Fact to have stood during the latter Part of this Reign.

In 1532, the Clergy neither Made, nor Attempted, any Canons or Constituti- ons. They Debated only of two Questions concerning the King's Divorce; and even in that they proceeded, from the Beginning to the End, by the King's Authority. Sect. 80.

In 1534, Another Question was propos'd to them concerning the Authority of the Bishop of Rome. They only deliver'd their Judgment upon it; They
Command, and we have all the Reason in the world to believe, that so did the Other also.

In 1535, They Examined some Books, and gave their Opinions of them: But they Examined them not with any Design of Censuring either the Doctrines, or the Authors; but to Petition the King for the Suppression of them; and that the People might be, by him, forbidden the use of them.

In 1536, The Lower House of Convocation Collected, and Presented to the Vicar-General, the Archbishop, and Prelates, in the Upper, certain Articles of Doctrines

Doctrines which they thought worthy of Reformation. They guarded them with a Protestation, that they did not thereby intend to Attempt, or Do, any thing displeasing to the King, or contrary to his Laws. These Articles were read in the Upper House, and nothing more done with them. But in the same Convocation, a Book of Articles was Treated of, and Concluded upon; and both were expressly done by the King's Command and Authority.

In 1537, The Assembly, which Dr. A. calls a Convocation, proceeded intirely by the King's Order, and with his Authority.

In 1539. The Six Articles were Debated, Argued, Reason'd upon, in both the Convocations; and their Opinions thereupon Understood, Declar'd, and Known. But it was by the Kings Command, that they Debated, Argued, and Reason'd, as well as Agreed and Declar'd their Judgment upon such their Deliberation.

In 1540. Two Committees were Appointed, and Empowr'd by the King, to go to work on Matters of Religion. In the following Years the Convocation of this Province, sate three Times Successively, and did business every One of them. But they did it All at the King's direction, declared to them by the Archbishop; and therefore, to be sure, must have had his Assent and License for the doing of it. The Command given was to Deliberate among themselves about the Reformation of Errors; which accordingly they did: And still, whatsoever was Deliberated by them, was laid before the King for his Approbation. This was, in fact, the Ground upon which these Convocations, both Confer'd and Agreed: Let the Reader Judge, what Conclusion will the most naturally follow from it.

King EDWARD the VIth.

Sect. 81.
1547.

On the 5th of November 1547. the first Convocation of King Edward the 6th, began. The Prolocutor being Chosen, and presented in the Second Session, in the third Carried up the four following Petitions, in the Name of the Lower House, to the President, and Prelates of the Upper.

MS. D. Stilglinfleet.

" First that Ecclesiastical Laws may be Made and Establish'd in this Realm by " Thirty two persons, or so many as shall please the King's Majesty to Name
" and Appoint, according to the Effect of a late Statute made in the 35th Year " of the most Noble King, and of most famous Memory, King Henry the Eighth:
" So that all Judges Ecclesiastical proceeding after those Laws, may be without " danger and Peril

" Also: That according to the antient Custom of this Realm, and the tenor
" of the King's Writs, for the Summoning of the Parliament, which be now,
" and ever have been, directed to the Bishops of every Diocess, the Clergy of the " Lower house of the Convocation may be Adjoyn'd and Associate with the Lower " house of Parliament: Or else that all such Statutes and Ordinances as shall be " made concerning all matters of Religion, and Causes Ecclesiastical, may not " pass without the Sight and Assent of the said Clergy.

" Also: That whereas by the Commandment of King Henry, certain Prelates
" and other Learned Men, were appointed to Alter the Service in the Church, and " to devise other Convenient and Uniform Order therein, who according to " the same Appointment, did make certain Books, as they be Inform'd; Their " Request is, that the said Books may be seen and perused by them, for a better Ex" pedition of Divine Service to be set forth accordingly.

" Also: That Men being Call'd to Spiritual Promotions, or Benefices, may " have some Allowance for their necessary living, and other charges to be su" stain'd and born concerning the said Benefices, in the first Year wherein They " pay their first fruits.

In the Fifth and Sixth Sessions, the Prolocutor Exhibited in the Lower House the form of a Certain Order delivered to Him by the Archbishop, for Communicating in both Kinds; to which Himself, and some Others Subscribed, in the Fifth; and the whole House Agreed, in the Sixth Session. At the beginning of the Parliament, a Bill had been very early Introduced into the House of Lords, against Irreverent speaking of the Sacrament of the Altar. While this Bill was depending, another was brought in November the 26th for Receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in both Kinds. To Expedite this Second Bill, which would otherwise have gone gone on but heavily in the Upper House, it was thought adviseable not only to annex it to the other, concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, but to obtain the Approbation of the Clergy in Convocation to it. This the Archbishop therefore procured, in the Session of the last of November, (which he seems to have anticipated on purpose for this End) and in the next following, December the 2d. By this Management, the Bill pass'd both the Houses, and was made a Statute of the Realm.

At the Latter of these Sessions, a Committee of the Lower House was appointed to draw up a project for a Statute for Paying of Tythes in Cities; but what they did farther it in we are not told.

In the next Session, December the 9th, the Lower House chose four of their Body to solicit on their behalf, these two things: " That the Petition made to have " this house adjoyn'd to the Lower House of the Parliament may be obtain'd. " Item; That a Mitigation of the Sore penalty express'd in the Statute against " the Recusants for Non Payment of the Perpetual Tenths, may also be obtain'd.

The same day, were likewise appointed two Others to Associate with the Prolocutor to my Lord of Canterbury, to know a determinate Answer; what Indemnity and Immunity this House shall have to TREAT of Matters of Religion, in Cases forbidden by the Statutes of the Realm to TREAT in.

Sect. 82.

What this Petition referr'd to, is a Point that will much concern us to know. The Difficulty will not be great, if we consider that there was but One Statute that did forbid the Clergy to Treat in Matters of Religion; viz. the 25th of Henry the VIIIth. This was Renew'd in the 27th of the same King: And the very Original Petition, Presented to the Archbishop at this time, which still remains among some other Papers of that Great Prelate, shews Us at once, both that this was what they meant; and that they understood the Clause of the Statute under Consideration, in the same Sense that I have before given of it. Their Petition runs thus.

" Where in a Statute, Ordeyn'd and Establish'd by Authority of Parliament " at Westminster in the 25th Year of the Reigne of the most Excellent Prince " King Henry the VIIIth, the Clergie of this Realme submitting Themselfe to " the Kinges Highnesse did Knowledge and Confess, according to the Truth, " that the Convocations of the same Clergie hath ben, and ought to be Assembled " by the Kinges Writ; and did promise further in Verbo Sacerdotii that they " never from thenceforth wolde presume to Attempt, Allege, Claime, or Put in " Ure or Enact, Promulge or Execute any New-Canons Constitutions Ordi- " nances Provincial or Other or by whatsoever other Name they shall be called " in the Convocation onelesse the Kinges most Royall Assent and Lisenfse may to " Them be had to Make Promulge and Execute the same, and his Majeste to " give his most Royall Assent and Authoritie in that behalfe, upon Peyne of " every one of the Clergie Doeyng the Contrary and being thereof Convict " to suffre Emprisonment and Make Fine at the King's Will. And that no Ca- " nons, Constitutions, or Ordinances shall be made or put in Execution within " this Realme by Auctorite of the Convocation of the Clergie which shall be " repugnant to the Kinges Prerogative Royall, or to the Customes Lawes, or Sta- " tutes of this Realme; Which Statute is Eftsoons Renew'd and Establish'd in the " 27th Year of the Reigne of the saide most noble Kinge, as by the Tenor of " Both Statutes more at large will appere: The saide Clergie being presently " Assembled in Convocation by Auctorite of the Kinges Writ, do desire that the " Kinges Majesties Lisenfse in Writing may be for them Obtain'd and Granted, " according to the Effect of the said Statutes, Auctoriseing Them to ATTEMPT " ENTREAT and COMMUNE of such Matters, and therein freely to Give " their Consents, which Otherwise they may not do upon Peine and Peril " Premised.

Such was the Busines of that Session: The next, and last of which we have any Account, was held December the 17th. A Proposition was exhibited there- in to the Lower House, " That all such Canons, Laws, Statutes, Decrees, Usages, " and Customs heretofore Made, Had, or Used, that forbad any Person to " Contract Matrimony, or Condemn Matrimony Contracted by any Person, for " any Vow or Promise of Priesthood, Chastity, or Widowhood, shall from hence- " forth Cease, be utterly Void, and of none Effect. The Majority approving it, a Committee was chosen to draw up the Plan of a Statute, for the Marriage of

Priests,

Priests. Whether they drew up such a Statute or no, I cannot tell. But within three days after, a Bill for the Marriage of Priests pass'd the House of Commons, and was sent up to the Lords for their Concurrence. The Lords read it the next day, December the 21st. But the Parliament was so nigh rising that it fail'd this Session, and was not made into a Statute till the next following.

And thus have I given a full account of all the Proceedings that are Recorded of this Convocation: In which no Canons or Constitutions were either Made, or Attempted; only some Petitions were Agreed to by the Lower, and presented to the President, and Prelates of the Upper House; and their Opinions delivered in two Points, in Order to an Act of Parliament to be framed upon each of them; viz. of Communion in both Kinds; and of the Marriage of Priests. A Committee was indeed appointed for a third End, to draw the Project of a Statute for Tithes in Cities, but nothing, that appears, was done by it. For all this, as no License was necessary, so we do not find that any was Granted to them; tho' they expressly desir'd it, and declar'd their Opinion of the Incapacity they Lay under for want of it.

Sect. 83.
Rights, &c.
p. 368.

But against this account of that Convocation Dr. A. excepts: <sup>1</sup> For. 1st, He tells Us they had as much License to Treat as they needed, or as ever any Convocation before had had; Reverendissimus exposuit iis fuisse, &c. de mandato Regio & Procerum, quod Pralati & Clerus inter se consulerent, de vera Christi Religione probe instituenda: The Archbishop declared to them that it was the Command of the King and the Lords, that the Prelates and Clergy should Consult among themselves about Matters of Religion. Does Dr. A's Minutes say this? Nay, Or did he himself Understand them So?

Ibid. p. 70.

As for the Minutes of the Upper House, from whence he takes this Note; That which they say is plainly This: That at the Opening of this Convocation, the Archbishop in his Speech told them, among other things; That it was the Custom in this Realm to Summon a Parliament the first Year of every Prince, and also to Call a Synod of the Bishops and Clergy; and that so it was at present done by the Command of the King and his Nobles. That the Prelates and Clergy should Consult together about the true Religion of Christ, &c. And that they should withdraw to the Lower House, there to choose a Prolocutor to be presented to him the Fryday following. And that <sup>2</sup> Dr. A. himself understood this to be the Sense of them, we have his own right Construction of this very Passage, in another part of his Book, to Assure Us: Where he thus joyns the King's Command to what went before, not (as now) to what follows; and tells us, that Archbishop Cranmer affirm'd it to have been, "De more Regni Angliæ primo quoque Anno Regni cujuslibet Regis citare Parliamentum, nec non & Convocare Synodum Episcoporum & Cleri; sicq; fieri in presenti de mandato Regis, &c."

What therefore Dr. A. here Asserts, and again repeats p. 371, He must give me leave to say in this Instance is not yet shewn; "That the Custom still Continued, for the President to declare the King's Good Pleasure to the Houses Orally, without producing any License under the Broad Seal. How far this had been the Custom, upon Other the like Occasions, I shall not dispute; this I affirm, that it does not appear that the President Declared any such thing to the Convocation, in the King's Name, Now. Let me add, that it is not Probable he had any Authority to declare any such thing to them at the Opening of a Convocation, which, as the Event shew'd, was not designed to Deliberate upon, or Establish any thing, in Matters of Religion.

But the Great Point which Dr. A. is here concern'd to get off, is, 2<sup>dly</sup>, the Petition of the Clergy for a License; nay, and for a License in Writing: A thing so clear, in fact, that 'tis not easie to raise any Doubts against it; but withal so fatal in its Consequence, that he must say any thing rather than Allow of it. And accordingly, he do's say so many, and such Contradictory, things to it, that their very Number alone shews how little weight is to be laid upon any of them. For,

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. p. 399, 400. (1st.) 'Tis probable (he says) that the Petition is not <sup>3</sup> Authentick; Because (for that must be his Reason, or he gives none at all for it) it seems never to have been Approv'd or Presented by the Lower Clergy. Now that he thus shews:

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. p. 400, 401. "4 1. The short Acts of this Convocation, preserv'd in the Synodalia, short as they are, do yet mention the First Paper, (publish'd by Bishop Stillingfleet, from the same MS) and the four several Articles of it; but give not the least “least Hint of this Second. Nor do’s Archbishop Parker, in Antiquit. Brittanica, where he speaks largely of Matters agitated in this Convocation, say a Syllable of it.

To begin first with Archbishop Parker: Do’s he speak of those first four Petitions which Dr. A. himself allows to be Authentick? No, he mentions only One of them; that the Clergy might be United to the Lower House of Parliament, and consult of Ecclesiastical Matters together with it. In the 5th and 6th Sessions, they debated about the Communion in both kinds; and of paying of Tythes in Cities: In the 7th, of the Mitigation of the Statute of Non-Payment of Tenths: In the 9th, of the Marriage of the Clergy. All these are taken Notice of in the Minutes, once that great Prelates; and approv’d of by Dr. A. as giving a true, tho’ short Account, of the Acts of this Synod. Can he shew us where the Antiquitates make mention of Any of these Things? If not, then let him in Conscience consider what Prejudice can be justly derived against an Original Paper, still remaining, from the meer Silence of an History, in which so many Other Matters relating to the same Convocation, and of such considerable Moment, are plainly Omitted.

As for the Minutes, which Dr. A. is pleas’d to call the short Acts of this Convocation; I do affirm, that they have taken notice of this very Petition, in the 7th Session; and that Dr. A. perversly Applies what was plainly meant of this Matter, to another which had been long before both Considered and Answer’d. At the Opening of this Convocation, the Antiquities tells us, that Archbishop Cranmer exhorting the Clergy to a Reformation of Religion according to the Word of God; the Severity of the Law of the six Articles affrighted the most of them, that they durst not freely speak their Sense in such Matters. That the Archbishop thereupon obtain’d of the King, that in the mean time, till those Laws should be abrogated, the severe and rigid Penalties of them should be relax’d to the Clergy, as to their Debates in Convocation; which accordingly was done.

If I may be allow’d to conjecture when the Clergy applied to the Archbishop, to this Purpose, I should not doubt to fix it to the third Session of the Convocation; the very next after the Prolocutor was Presented. For so I understand that Question which was added to the four Petitions of that Day; “<sup>2</sup> Whether the Clergy of the Convocation may FREELY SPEAK THEIR MIND without Danger of Statute, or Law? This is evident, that it was done soon after the Opening of the Convocation; and the first Session after they were put into a Posture of Debate, and their first Address to the Archbishop, seems naturally to lead to such an Application.

per. And that this refers to the Law of the VI Articles, besides the Reason of the thing its self, the Words of the Ant. Brit. which are a plain Translation of this Question, shew: Sed legum — de VI Articulis Latarum Severitas plerosque terruit quo minus S U A S de Religione Reformanda SENTENTIAS LIBERE DICERENT.

But this Dr. A. will not allow of: He refers us to the 7th Session, Dec. 9th for this Address. Till which time, that is to say, for almost five Weeks after their Assembling, he leaves the Convocation under an utter Insensibility of their Danger; or I am sure, under an Unaccountable Negligence of their own Safety. To shew the Improbability of this, I shall need only to observe, that in the two foregoing Sessions, they had actually Incurr’d the Penalties of that Act; by Deliberating, and Concluding, in the Article of Communion in both kinds: Concerning which that Statute thus Enacts; “<sup>3</sup> That if any Person, or Persons, should by Word, Writing, Printing, Cyphering, &c. publish, declare, or hold Opinion, that the Communion of the Blessed Sacrament in both kinds is necessary for the Health of Mans Soul to be given or ministred in both kinds, or so ought or should be given and ministred, &c. He shall forfeit, &c. as in that Act is contain’d. And therefore supposing this Request not to have been made till after they had not only Agreed to, but Subscribed an Order for Communicating in both kinds, which they generally did in their fifth, and sixth Sessions, (as Dr. A. contends it was not) they ought to have Enlarged their Petition, and to have desir’d as well a Pardon for what they had already done contrary to that Act, as an Indemnity for the time to come, But Fear, especially where it is just and great, is a more cautious Principle, than to have suffer’d so wise a Body to Act after such a Dilatory Mannner, in an Affair of such mighty Importance to them. They were well aware of their Danger; and careful to be secured against it: And therefore we may be sure they Obtain'd the Suspension of the Penalties of this Act, before they adventur'd thus openly to Offend against it.

However, let us see how he endeavours to apply that Minute to this Purpose: The Clergy directed their Prolocutor, with two others of their Body, to the Archbishop, to know what Indemnities and Immunities they should have to Treat in Matters of Religion, in Cases forbidden by the Statutes of this Realm to Treat in. <sup>1</sup> "They are concern'd, says he, to be Indemnified to Treat of Matters of Religion in some Particular Cases forbidden by the Statutes of the Realm. He is in the Right, and I will tell him what those Cases were: They were forbidden to Treat of any Matters of Religion, in order to the Making of any Canons, Constitutions, or Ordinances Provincial or Synodal, without the King's Assent and License first granted to them to that Purpose; but were not forbidden to Treat of them in any other Way, or in Order to any other End; and for this therefore they desired to be Indemnified.

Would Dr. A. have some farther Reasons for this Conjecture; I will give him two, from the very Petition under Debate: In which first they take Notice, that their Restraint in this Case was lay'd upon them by two Statutes, of the 25th and 27th of Henry the 8th. And in the next Place, actually Put into their Petition the very Word of the Minutes, to Entreat, and Desire the King's License in Writing may be for them Obtain'd, and Granted, according to the Effect of the said Statutes, Authorizing them to Attempt, Entreat, and Commune of such Matters, which otherwise they may not do. The Petition, and the Minute agree so near, not only in Substance, but in Expression too, that I think even that alone might suffice to justify the Application which I have made of the One to the Other.

But can Dr. A. now tell us, where there is any thing in the Act of the six Articles, to Restrain the Clergy from Treating in Matters of Religion? Let us suppose them to have Deliberated on some One of those Articles; or, if he will, upon All of them; and either acknowledging, or at least not denying, the Truth of Them, yet to have Agreed, for some Other Reasons, (and Other Reasons enough they might have found out) to Petition the King for the Abrogation of that Act, or for the Mitigation of its Severity: I do not see wherein they would have fallen thereby under the Danger of it. To Treat even in those six Articles, was not forbidden, nor would it have been Criminal by that Statute. To have freely spoken their Sense upon them, as to the Truth of the Doctrine contained in them, might indeed have been so; and for that therefore we see they applied betimes to the King at their third Session; and by the Interest of the Archbishop obtain'd what they desir'd; "that they might freely speak their Mind without Danger of Statute, or Law. But as for Treating in Matters of Religion, there was no Statute that forbade that, but This only of the 25th, H. 8. c. 19: And to this therefore alone we can justly refer their Address for the King's License so to do.

There is nothing then in this first Exception of Dr. A. to overthrow the Authenticallness of a Paper, which so evidently speaks its self to be an Original, and will not be Cavill'd out of its Authority by such little Objections as these. <sup>2</sup> His next Pretence is yet weaker: That it ought to have been sooner presented; and lies much harder against his own Application of that Minute to the Act of the Six Articles, than against mine which refers it to this Statute. For against that Statute they had already Offended, in a very high degree; whereas against this, they had, as yet, committed no Fault.

His Third<sup>3</sup> Exception against the Draught of their Petition, is as frivolous. They Recite the Submission of the Clergy, as it lies in that Statute: They take notice of the Peynes by which their Submission was Confirm'd, and against which they desir'd to be Defended. They add the Limitations too with which they were to act, when a License should be Obtain'd: And this is All of that Act, which relates to Canons hereafter to be Made in Convocation. And having summarily put all this together, and refer'd themselves to the Statute its self for the more full Declaration of it; they pray for such a License as might secure them against the Danger of it. The Draught, I think, is Compleat enough to Answer their End; and to shew both what it was that they desir'd, and upon what Ground they suppos'd themselves to have need of what they Petition'd for.

In short, Here is an Original Paper, found among Others of the same Archbishop, with All the Marks of Authenticity that such a Writing can have. If this be not sufficient to Answer all such Doubts, as Dr. A. is pleas'd to raise against it, I much question whether any Evidence, that is not expressly upon Record, will be able to stand secure. For surely he must have a very slender Talent in this way of raising Dust, who cannot make as good Exceptions as these, against any Other Paper of the like Nature.

Dr. A. saw it was in vain to think to destroy the Credit of this Petition; and therefore, having try'd the utmost of his Skill on that side, he comes (2dly) to SUPPOSE (what he knew would be taken for Granted, whether he Suppos'd it or no) that the Paper was Authentic; and upon that Ground assures us, "that nothing can be more to the Advantage of the Clergies Freedom of Debate, than this Petition, supposing it Authentic. Do's Dr. A. indeed believe this? And was it the meer Love of Truth that prompted him, in Opposition to his own Interest, to endeavour so heartily, as he has before done, to destroy the Credit of it. — Sic Notus Ulysses? However, let us pursue this New Adventure, and see how expert a Man he is, that can take the Matter either way, and yet still be in the Right, still be Victorious: "For as the Preferring it (says he) shews that the Clergy doubted at first, whether a Commission might not be necessary to enable them to Attempt, Entreat, and Commune; so their Acting without such a Commission afterwards, (for Act they did) is a clear Evidence that those Doubts were over-ru'd as soon as started, and does in effect amount to a Determination of the Point in Question. For the Judges, to be sure, or King's Council, (and it may be Both) were consulted in the Case; and did therefore (as the Event shews) give their Opinion against the Necessity of such a License. Sect. 85.1 P. 405, 406.

How happy a thing is a good Invention, at a dead Lift! The Lower House of Convocation doubted indeed whether they might lawfully Treat without a License. But Treat they did, and that without One; and therefore we must conclude, that they were satisfied they needed none. May I ask Dr. A. in the first place; How does he know that they had no License? Why he Concludes it from the Silence of the short Minutes of the Lower House, and the yet Shorter Ones of the Upper: And how fallacious a way that is, I will leave him, upon this One Remark within the same Reign, to Consider.

In the Convocation of 1552, The Articles of Religion were pass'd; and for that he himself must Allow a License to have been necessary. Mr. Fuller saw the Acts of that Convocation, and found no Mention either of License, or Articles, in them; and from thence concluded, that no such Articles were pass'd by that Synod. To this Dr. Heylin replies, That he had seen those Acts too: That they were very short; and therefore it was no wonder, that they made no mention of these Things. But that however, the King putting forth those Articles, as pass'd in that Synod; we cannot doubt but that they were Agreed to there: And that Mr. Fuller might as well infer, that his Mother had no such Son as himself, because his Name was not enter'd upon the Parish Register; as that That Convocation made no such Articles, because there was no Notice taken of Them in those Acts.

But what if at last they did not Act; nor so much as Attempt to do any thing, for which any License at all was Needful? Act they Did, says Dr. A. with his usual Assurance. But how did they Act? They neither Conferr'd upon, nor Constituted, any Canons: And therefore Act they Did Not within the Purport of the 25th H. 8. c. 19. They sate but Once more, that we know of, to any Purpose after they made this Order: And then they only deliver'd their Opinion in the Case of Marriage; which, by the Liberty before obtain'd for them, they had Authority to Do, without Danger of the 31st H. 8: And of any other Statute they had no Cause to be Afraid.

And now what will become of all Dr. A's other Imaginary Suppositions, which are built upon this fundamental Error, or Equivocation? * They Acted: * They Acted without a License: * Therefore their Doubts were Over-ruled: * And this amounts to a Determination of the Point: * For, to be sure, the Judges, and the King's Council, were consulted in the Case; and we must suppose, that they gave their Opinion against the Necessity of such a License, because otherwise they would have had One. What a Glorious Scheme hath this new Historian Erected in the Air; without so much as a Probability of Truth to support it? But the best best of it is, such visionary Determinations will do us no Great Harm. I shall therefore leave Dr. A. to continue in his Dream of Judges, and Council, that were never advised with; and of Sentences and Opinions that were never given: And, in Reverse of his Assertions, take the Liberty to Conclude, that seeing they neither Attempted, nor Made, any Canons or Constitutions, therefore they had no need of any License; nor any Occasion either for Over-ruling their Doubts, or for Consulting of Judges, or Council, to determine any thing in this Particular.

But Dr. A. has not yet done with his Conjectures. He proceeds from the Circumstances of those times to shew why, Possibly, the Clergy might then have desir'd such a License, tho' it was not Necessary. But why then did not the Clergy frame their Petition accordingly? Why did they not desire it in Majorem Cautelam only; and not found their need of it upon the Authority of an Act of Parliament, which (according to their own Opinion) expressly Required such a License? This, 'tis plain, they ought to have done, had they proceeded upon these Principles. They should have ask'd the King's License only as a Matter of Countenance, and Security, to them in their Proceedings; but should by no means have Petitioned for it as a thing which they were oblig'd by Law to have, and which the King therefore, was to grant to them according to the effect of the said Statutes. But of this Reflection Dr. A. himself makes no great account; and therefore he will the more easily excuse me, if I insist not any longer upon it.

Sect. 86.

From this time forward we have so little knowledge of what was done in the following Sessions of this Convocation, that were it not for the Subsidy granted the next Year by the Clergy; and a Provision made by the Lords the Year following for Fryday to be allow'd to the Bishops for their Attendance at St. Pauls; we should hardly have known any thing at all of them, more than the days of their Assembly and Prorogation. Indeed in one of the following Sessions of this Convocation, a Debate was held in the Upper House, of certain Doubts which had been rais'd concerning some things contain'd in the Common Prayer Book: And more particular, touching such Feasts as were Retain'd, and such as had been Abrogated by the Rules thereof; concerning the Form of Words used at the giving of the Bread, and the different manner of Administring the Holy Sacrament. This was signified to the Prolocutor and the rest of the Clergy, who had Received somewhat in Charge about it the Day before. Their Answer was, that they had not yet sufficiently considered the Points propos'd, but would give their Lordships some Account thereof, in the following Session. But what Account was given, appear'd not upon the Acts of the Convocation; of which there was nothing left upon Record but this very Passage.

Sect. 87.

The first Parliament of this King being Dissolv'd, April the 15th; and the Convocation the Day after; Another was Called to Meet at Westminster the 18th of March following, and the Convocations order'd to sit at London and York the next Day. Great have been the Contests of our Learned Writers concerning the Proceedings of this Convocation; the Acts of which were either very carelessly taken, or They were soon destroy'd, by those who had no mind they should be known to Posterity. <sup>2</sup> Mr. Fuller thus spake of them in his Time: "The Records

"of this Convocation are but One Degree above Blanks, scarce affording the Names of the Clerks Assembled therein. They had no Commission from the King to meddle with Church-Business: However, this barren Convocation is intituled the Parent of those Articles of Religion, (Forty two in Number) which are printed with this Preface, Articuli, &c. With these was bound a Catechism, younger in Age, as bearing Date the next Year, but of the same Extraction, relating to this Convocation, as Author thereof. For this,

Dr. Heylin falls very severely upon him: <sup>3</sup> He charges him as "Guilty of a greater Crime than that of Scandalum Magnatum; making Edward the VIth, of Pious Memory, no better than an Impious and Lewd Impostor. For if the Convocation of this Year were barren (as he saith it was) it could neither be the Parent of those Articles, nor of the short Catechism which was printed with them. <sup>4</sup> Mr. Fuller rejoins in these Words: "The Journals of the Convoca-

<sup>4</sup> Ibid.

"tion, in this King's Reign, I have carefully perused, which are no better than Blank Paper; containing only the Names of the Members therein daily meeting, without any Matter of Moment (yea any Matter at all) Registered to be perform'd by them.

To

To this Dr. Heylin himself agrees; <sup>1</sup> He complains that the Acts of this Convocation were so ill kept, that there remain'd nothing upon Record touching their Proceedings, except it were the Names of such of the Bishops as came thither to Adjourn to the House. But how then shall we settle this Point of the Articles? <sup>2</sup> Dr. Heylin tells us that the Year before, Archbishop Cranmer, with the Assistance of other learned Men, Prepared them for the Convocation. <sup>3</sup> That being thus prepared, They were now presented to the "Consideration of the rest of the Clergy: Who devolved their Power on some Grand Committee, sufficiently Authorised, to Debate, Conclude, and Publish what they had Concluded, in the Name of the Rest. This he gathers from the Inscription of the Articles; wherein it is not said, as in the Articles published in Queen Elizabeth's time, Anno 1562, That they were Agreed upon by the Archbishops and Bishops of both Provinces, and the whole Clergy in the Convocation holden at London; but that they were Agreed upon in the Synod of London by the Bishops, and certain Other Learned Men, inter Episcopos & alios Eruditos Viros, as the Latin hath it. Which (says he) seems to make it plain enough, that the Debating and Concluding of the Articles contain'd in the said Book, was the Work only of some Bishops, and certain other Learned Men, sufficiently Empowered for that End and Purpose. And being so Empower'd to that End and Purpose, the Articles by Them Concluded, and Agreed upon, may warrantably be Affirm'd to be Acts and Products of that Convocation, Confirm'd, and Published for such, by the King's Authority.

Such was Dr. Heylin's Conjecture of this matter: But a late very diligent Writer of the Life of Archbishop Cranmer, will help us to a more Exact Account of it; and being carried a little farther, may, possibly, settle it upon its true bottom. <sup>4</sup> In 1551: The King and the Privy Council order'd the Archbishop to frame a Book of Articles of Religion, for preserving and maintaining Peace and Unity of Doctrine in the Church, to be set forth by Publick Authority. He drew them, and Committed them to certain Bishops to be inspected and approved of by them. By a Letter of Council, Dated May the 2d, 1552. the Archbishop was commanded to send them the Articles, delivered the last Year to the Bishops, and to signify whether the same were set forth by any Publick Authority, according to the Minutes. The Articles were accordingly sent by the Archbishop; and return'd again in a little time to him. For in September, they were again in his Hands; when being put into a better Order, and Titles added to each of the Articles, and a supply made of what was thought Defective; They were on the 19th of the same Month, remitted by the Archbishop, to Sir William Cecyl, and Sir Jo. Cheeke, for their Inspection and Advice upon them. They Agreed that the Archbishop should Offer them to the King; which, accordingly, he did, not long after. They were then Communicated to some Other Divines, by the King's Order, about the beginning of October; and upon the 20th of November, were sent back again, by the Council, to the Archbishop. The Archbishop made his last Remarks upon Them, and so return'd them again in three days, to the Council; beseeching them, to prevail with the King, to give Authority to the Bishops, to Cause their respective Clergy to Subscribe the same.

On the 2d of March following, the Convocation Met; and then this Book of Articles was finally laid before it. How the Convocation proceeded in the Discussion and Examination of them, I cannot tell. This I know, that the Result was, that the whole Body Agreed upon Them, and Subscribed to them. For at the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, when the London Ministers set out their Declaration against the Apparel prescribed; the Examiner of it pressed them with the Subscription which many of themselves had made to these very Articles in this Convocation: And having told them that they ought not to disturb Political Order lawfully taken, went on in these Words. "Which Disturbance of Publick Quiet in Rites and Ordinances (which may be for Variety of Places divers, and yet to be straitly Observ'd) what a great Offence it is, not only the Scriptures may teach You, and the Usage of Christ's True Church, but also the Determination of this Church in England, both Agreed upon in King Edwards Days, and also Testified and Subscribed by Themselves, who now would gainsay their Own Doings Then. The Words which the Whole Synod were well pleas'd withal, and wherunto All the Clergies hands are set to, be these (as in the 23d Article of that Book.) To this Charge, the Answerer of

<sup>1</sup> Ibid p. 153. of the Examination makes but a short Reply. ' He owns the Truth of the Allegation, that they had Subscribed that Article; but justifies it by the Qualification of that Clause in it, of such Traditions and Ceremonies as be not Repugnant to the Word of God; in which Case he owns it to be their Duty to Obey Orders. " The Articles of the Synod ( 1552 ) have such Considerations annexed to Them, " that we need not fear to Subscribe to them again, &c.

These Articles thus pass'd in Convocation, were soon set forth by the King's Authority. The Convocation Rose April the 1st, 1553: And the Printed Copy which was published, with the Catechism, by the Royal Command; was dated from Greenwich the very next Month after, May the 20th. From all which it is plain, that these Articles were not Compiled by any Grand Committee, Empowered by Convocation, either before or after, as Dr. Heylin suppos'd; but being prepar'd, as we have seen, by the Authority of the King and Council, were Agreed to in Convocation; and there Subscribed by both Houses; and so presently Promulg'd by the King's Authority, according to Law.

As for the Catechism, That was neither pass'd by the Synod, nor was it publish'd as theirs. The Title bears only Catechismus, &c. Omnibus Ludi Magistris Auctoritate Regia Commendatus. And All that the King says of it in his Confirmatory Patent, is but this; " That it being written by a certain pious and learned Man; ( Dr. A. says Bishop Poinet; but the Archbishop took it upon himself ) " He " had Committed the Examination, and diligent Inspection of it to certain Bishops and Other Learned Men, whose Judgment had great Authority with him; " and that being found to be Agreeable both to the Holy Scriptures, and to the " Laws of the Realm, he thought fit to Publish it, and to require such Use, as he " there directs, to be made of it.

Sect. 88.
Rights, &c.
p. 371, 372.

Having said thus much to give some little Light to this Obscure part of our Convocational History, let us now see what Use <sup>2</sup> Dr. A. makes of this Transaction, in the Case under Debate. " In the 6th ( he should have said the 7th ) " of the same Prince ( King Edward the VIth ) 1552, the Convocation Met, in " which the first forty two Articles pass'd; whose Title is, Articuli, &c. And " here again, the Omission of a License in Form ought to satisfy Us, that there " was no such thing; because, where we know it was Granted, as in 1603, " and 1640, there the Titles of the Canons then Fram'd, carry an Express " Mention of it. Does Dr. A. consider what he Writes? He Argues from the Title of these Articles, that the Convocation had no License to Treat, because it is not Mention'd there. Now the Title tells Us, that they were Articles Agreed upon by the Convocation. &c. Did that Convocation not only Treat about them, but Agree upon, and Pass All these Articles, without any License? Or does Dr. A. himself allow that they might have done so? But this is the Misfortune of a bad Cause: He cannot assert their Liberty of Debate without a License, by any Arguments but what will carry the matter farther than he himself would have it; as not only here, but in several other Instances before mentioned, he accordingly has done. In short therefore; Either let Dr. A. roundly affirm, that the Clergy in these Times, did not only Confer, but did Enact too, without any License; Or let him shew, that they had the King's Authority to Agree, but not to Debate; Or, by the Third Rule I at first laid down, he must allow me to Conclude, That tho' no License be Recorded ( as indeed, there was nothing at all Recorded of this Convocation ) yet they certainly had One to Enact; and together with that, what was by Law no less required, to Deliberate also in Order to their Enacting.

Queen M A R Y.

Sect. 89.
1553.
Rights &c.
p. 372.

It was not long after this, that that Pious Prince, King Edward the VIth died. Queen Mary succeeding, held her first Parliament at Westminster, October the 5th; and Assembled the two Convocations the day after. Of this Dr. A. writes thus: " <sup>3</sup> Primo Maria. " The Prolocutor certified the Lower House upon their First Meeting, ( or rather upon the First Day appointed for the Disputation, which was Order'd at the same time with the Convocation, ( for so it was ) October the " 18th, ) that it was the Queens Pleasure that the Company of the same House, being Learned Men, Assembled, should Debate of Matters of Religion, and Constitute Laws thereof, which her Grace and the Parliament would Ratifie.

" The

" The Business of this Convocation was very Extensive we see, and yet no Other License, but what was Verbal, was either Given or Requir'd. But still Dr. A. must permit me to observe, that here was both a License granted to them by the Queen, to Debate; and that the same License was given for That, which was given for them to Constitute too. So that either here was, at last, somewhat more than a Verbal License to Debate: Or if there was not, then we must conclude, (which to me is all One) that a Verbal License was, in those Days, thought sufficient to Answer All the Ends of the Act 25 H. 8. c. 19. and to Authorize the Clergy to proceed both to Attempt and Enact, according to the Purport of it.

It is to the same effect that Dr. Heylin reports this Matter in his History of this Convocation. " On Wednesday the 18th of October, it was signified by the Prolocutor, that it was the Queen's Pleasure, that They of the House should Debate of Matters of Religion, and proceed to the Making of such Constitutions, as should be found necessary in that Case. And Mr. Fuller relating Mr. Philpot's Defence of himself, for what he said in this Disputation, thus delivers the Prolocutor's Declaration to Them; " That Weston the Prolocutor, once and again, Assured them, that the Queen had given them Leave and Liberty fully and freely to Debate of Matters of Religion. And when they had Debated as much as they thought good; the Prolocutor clos'd all with this Remarkable Speech: " It is not the Queen's Pleasure that we should spend any longer time in these Debates, and yet we are well enough already; for (says he, applying himself to the Reformed there) You have the WORD, and we have the SWORD. From All which I may now presume to conclude, that the Clergy at this Time did not Debate without Authority from the Queen; but (as far as I can find) had the same License both to Confer about, and to Make Constitutions. Rights, &c. p. 377.

The beginning of the next Year, a Convocation was Summon'd to meet at Oxford, but sate at London. The great and only Business of it, was to Agree upon certain Points to be Disputed on at Oxford with Archbishop Cranmer, and his two Companions, Bishop Ridley, and Bishop Latimer; which they accordingly reduc'd to Three Conclusions. That this was entirely done by the Queen's Authority, the Removal of the Prisoners from the Tower thither, by her Majesty's Command, in order thereunto, shews; and the Professions made that this Disputation was held by her Order, will not suffer us to doubt of it. But not to insist upon this Assembly; let us go on with Dr. A. to the next, which met in November the same Year. And here again Dr. A. either means nothing at all, or he carries his Point a great deal too far. They " Debated, says he, and " Acted, tho' Unlicensed. If within the Purport of this Act, then his Assertion must be thus understood, that they Conferr'd and Made Canons without any Assent of, or License from, the Queen so to Do. But if their Debating and Acting were about some Other Matters, in which the Clergy have had no Restraint laid upon them by the Statute of Submission, 'tis a meer Fallacy, and imports no more than this, that they did such Business without a License, for which no body pretends that they needed any. Sect. 90.

But he proceeds: " Twenty eight Articles of Reformation the Lower House " preferr'd; and the Preface to those Articles Asserts the Power by which they did it: Accounting our selves (say they) to be Call'd hither to Treat with your Lordships, as well concerning the Restitution of this Noble Church of England to the Pristine State and Unity of Christ's Church, as of Other things touching the State and Quietness of the same Church in Doctrine and Manners; We have, for the Furtherance of your godly doing therein, Devis'd these Articles following. Do's Dr. A. know of any one who denies this Liberty to the Clergy? They are Called by their Mandate to Treat with the Bishops there: To Treat of Matters concerning the Church of England, and the State and Quietness of the same: And they may Devise what Articles they please, to be presented to their Lordships, for the Furtherance of all this. But were those Articles intended to be made Canons, Constitutions, Orders, or Ordinances Provincial or Synodal? Did the Clergy present them to the Bishops for this End, that being Assented to by them, they might thereby become Authoritative Acts of the Convocation? Let Dr. A's own Instance answer for it; " that among other things, which they desir'd, One was, the Repeal of this Statute Ibid. p. 373.

25 H. 8. c. 19. In which, as they bespoke their Lordships Interest with the King and Queen; so were the other Articles generally of the same kind. They contain'd a Representation of such Matters as they thought might properly be mov'd at this Juncture to the Queen, the Parliament, the Legate, or their Lordships; and either be Redress'd by their Own Authority, or be Obtain'd by their Mediation with Those who had Power to Redress the same. And what need there was of a License for this, or what this signifies to the Business of Conferring to Constitute Canons, (the only thing in which I affirm them to be restrain'd by that Statute) I shall leave it to Dr. A. himself, upon second Thoughts, to consider.

While this Convocation was sitting, the Act of Submission was Repeal'd, according to their Desire, and not Revived till the first of Queen Elizabeth. Let us see how the Convocations proceeded in her Reign, upon the Revival of it.

Queen ELIZABETH.

1562.
Right, &c.
p. 377.

The first Convocation that met after this, was that of 1562: "Where Matters of great moment were transacted; the Articles of the Church, and the Catechism, were Review'd; and several Canons relating to Discipline framed, tho' some of these were not at that time Publish'd. And the DEBATES on these Occasions (they are Dr. A's Words) were Entred upon, and Managed, without any Commission from the Queen; as is manifest, beyond a Doubt, from the Acts of that Synod, &c. These Acts are very particular and minute in giving an Account of the Proceedings of every Day, and do orderly specify All the Publick Instruments that any way concern the Synod: But as to a COMMISSION TO TREAT, they are perfectly silent. He is in the Right; the Acts of this Convocation are very particular: They mention the doing of all these things, and yet speak not of any Commission to Treat about them. But will Dr. A. be pleased to tell us; Can he find in those Acts (Particular, and Minute, as they are) any Commission to Conclude, Enact, or Make Articles, any more than to Treat and Confer upon them? If not, he must then allow me to Observe, that they had the same Authority to Debate of these Articles, that they had to Agree upon them. And therefore he must either resolve to go on, and Affirm that they had no need of a License for Either; Or he must shew that they had some Commission for the One, which they had not for the Other.

Hist. of the Reform.
p. 330, 331.
Rights, &c.
p. 380.

But by what Authority, then did they proceed in all this? Dr. Heylin gives a short Answer to it: "He tells us" it was thought Expedient that the Book of Articles, Agreed upon in Convocation Anno. 1552. should be Revis'd and Accommodated to the Use of the Church, the Queens Leave being first Obtained for their Warrant in it. "Dr. A. is positive that All this was done without any Previous License, except what was contain'd in that General Message which the Archbishop delivered in his Speech at the Opening of this Convocation. What that Message was, or in what Precise Terms the Archbishop did deliver it, we cannot certainly tell. The Acts give only this General Account of it; "That he declared to the Prelates and Clergy, that an Opportunity was now offer'd to them, to Reform things in the Church of England; and how the minds both of the Queen, and her Nobles, were favourably disposed to such a Reformation. Whether he said any thing more expressly, as to the Queen's Authorizing of them to Review the Articles of Religion; or to Make Canons for the Discipline of the Church; or to Do such other things as they should think necessary to be done for the Reformation of it, we can only Conjecture; and that is by no means sufficient to warrant any Conclusion in a Matter of such Moment as that which we are now upon. Be it how it will, this I conceive is plain; that either they had a Commission to Confer, or they had None at all to Agree: For it is certain these Acts mention no other License, or Authority, but what is contain'd in those General Words of the Archbishop, the Substance of which I have before given from thence.

How far such a Declaration of the Queen's Pleasure to the Convocation, will be allow'd by those who are the proper Judges of this Matter, to answer the Ends of the Statute under debate, I must submit it to their Lordships to consider. But I confess, I do incline thus far to Agree with Dr. A. that they had no Other Commission at this time; and were therefore doubtful Themselves how far they might securely venture to subscribe to the Articles which they had Agreed Agreed to. For in their Original Subscriptions, which still remain among the Archbishop's Papers in Bennet-College Library, we find this Note added at the bottom of them; That they made their Subscription, with this Protestation;

 " That they do not Establiſh any thing in Prejudice of any Statute, but only " humbly Offer therein a Supplicatory Book, containing their Petitions.

*Iſta Subſcrip-tio facta eſt ab
Omnibus ſub*

hac proteſtatione, quod nihil Statuunt in Præjudicium cujuſcunque Senatus-Conſultri; ſed tantum Supplicem Libellum, Petitiones ſuas continentem, humiliter Offerunt.

If the Statute to which they here refer, was that of the 25 H. 8. c. 19. as I conceive it was; then it is probable that they made this Proteſtation to ſecure themſelves in what they had done, in Conferring, and Agreeing upon the Articles which they had made, as well as in what they then did, in ſubſcribing to them. As for the Book of Diſcipline, of what Nature it was, or how far it came within the preſent Statute, it is not eaſie to determine. The Account which the Prolocutor gave of it in his firſt Report of that Matter to the Upper Houſe, was this: " That certain of the Lower Houſe had exhibited ſeveral diſtinct Schedules conceived by them, and put in writing, of ſuch things as " Needed to be Reform'd: Which ſeveral Papers had been delivered to ſome of " the more Grave and Learned Men of the ſaid Houſe, to be Examined, Con-
 " ſidered, and Reduced to proper Heads againſt the next Session. This they afterwards call a Book of Diſcipline; and on Friday, February the 26th, the Prolocutor coming up with ten others of the Houſe, delivered it to the Archbishops and Bishops in Paper, as a Book that had been unanimouſly Agreed to by Themſelves and the Whole Houſe. The next Session, the Prolocutor acquainting the Archbishop, " that they had thought of ſome farther Heads to be added to it. The " moſt Reverend gave it back to him for that purpoſe; and order'd the ſame
 " Book, with their Additional Chapters, to be again brought back to himſelf and
 " the other Bishops, the next Session. It was brought up accordingly, March the 5th, and lodg'd in their hands: But whether for their Examination, in order to give it a Synodical Sanction; Or whether it were for them to Communi- cate it to the Queen and her Council, for any Civil Laws to be made, or any other Remedy to be provided by them therein, we cannot tell; nor do we, after this, meet with any farther mention of it. If they Conferr'd of theſe things in Order to the Enacting of any Provincial Canons or Conſtitutions, their Conference was doubtleſs within the Statute 25 H. 8. c. 19; and if done without License, will therefore be an unqueſtionable Evidence on Dr. A's ſide. But if they Conferr'd of theſe things only to have them Examined by the Bishops, and for ſome Redreſs to be obtain'd otherwiſe therein; the Conference is nothing to the purpoſe; and how to determine in this Caſe, whether of the two it was, I cannot tell.

On Friday, February the 19th, the Archbishop delivered to the Prolocutor certain Articles in writing, and commanded that they of the Lower Houſe ſhould diligently enquire concerning the Contents of them, and put in writing what they ſhould diſcover thereupon, and preſent it to him. But yet their Treating on this Occaſion, as it was not with any Design to Make any Canons, or Conſtitutions, but for Other Ends, ſo neither did it come within the Statute 25 H. 8. c. 19. nor had the Clergy any need of a License from the Queen for it.

All that we can be ſure of therefore in this Convocation, are the Articles of Religion; which being not only Treated of, but Agreed to, Made, and Subſcribed by Them, either Dr. A. muſt ſhew that They had a License for the One, but not for the Other; Or he muſt give me leave to conclude, that they were Authorized alike for Both.

And now I have again mentioned the Subscription of this Synod to theſe Articles, I will beg Dr. A's Patience ſo far, as briefly to conſider the manner of it. He is pleas'd to fall with ſome Severity upon me, for alledging ſome of our Western Councils under the Character of Provincial Councils, which he will by no means allow to have been ſuch. The Ground on which he builds his Censure, is this; that more than One Metropolitan is found to have Subſcribed in ſeveral of them: " But the Doctor (he ſays) found them Stil'd Provincial in the Tomes of the Councils, and he look'd no farther. Were it now a time to diſpute this Matter with Dr. A. I could, I believe, give him ſome Reasons to ſhew, that neither Dr. W. nor his Guides, Loaiſa, Sirmond, Labbe, &c. the Editors of those Councils, (Men of no Common Learning and Judgment in such Matters) were so much mistaken in this Particular, as he thinks they were. Greater Writers than either Dr. A. or my self, and that in Disputes of the highest Moment, have Alledg'd them under the same Character; without the Offence of those who were no less concern'd, had they thought it proper, to have made the same Exception against them. I will trouble him with but one Instance hereof, and that in a Dispute concerning the Right of Princes to Sit by their Commissioners, and Vote in such Synods: A Privilege which the Court of Rome stily deny'd; and the Church of Spain no less stoutly Asserted, as the Right of their Kings. The Authorities alledged by the latter are, many of them, the very same that I have made use of. They are Alledg'd for the Right of the Prince in Provincial Councils; and the Roman Canonists, who replied to them, did not at all except against them upon this Ground, that they were not such Synods as those who insisted upon them pretended that they were. Dr. A. may, if he pleases, peruse their Letters in the Appendix, as not altogether foreign to the present Subject, and never publish'd, but in the last Edition of the Spanish Councils, which are not in every body's hand. But not to enlarge upon this Particular: The Articles of Religion being Agreed to by this Convocation, the Archbishop of York, with his Suffragans, subscribed to them on the behalf of that Province; and yet in that very Subscription, they nevertheless call, and account their Assembly a Provincial Synod, tho' more than One Metropolitan was present at it, and subscribed to it. The Words of their Subscription are these:

Ann. 1584.

" Hos Articulos fidei Christianæ, &c. Nos Archiepiscopi & Episcopi utriusque
" Provincia Regni Angliæ, in Sacra Synodo Provinciali legitime Congregati, Re-
" cipimus & Profitemur; & ut Veros atque Orthodoxos manuum nostrarum " Subscriptionibus Approbamus, &c.

After which follow the Subscriptions of the Two Archbishops, and Fifteen Bishops of the Province of Canterbury; and of the Bishops of Durham, and Chester, of York. How far Dr. A. will excuse the Impropriety of this Language in a Convocation, which appears so Ridiculous to him in a Private Writer, I cannot tell. This I will add, that it may well be accounted greater, where all the Metropolitans and Bishops of a whole Kingdom met together, and so, in effect, made it a National Synod; than where the Archbishops of some of the Provinces only of a Realm, by free Consent, join'd their respective Synods together; and to which I am yet to seek what more proper Character to give, than that of Provincial Synods; tho' they did consist of the Bishops of several Provinces, voluntarily Assembled together, under their respective Independent Metropolitans.

These Articles, thus Agreed to, and Subscribed by the Bishops and Clergy, in 1562, were again subscribed in Convocation, in the Year 1571. The Archbishop having Confirm'd the Prolocutor, gave express Command, " That all such of " the Lower House of Convocation, who had not formerly subscribed unto the Ar- " ticles of Religion Agreed on, Anno 1562, should subscribe them now, or upon " their absolute Refusal, or Procrastination, be Expell'd the House. Upon this, the Articles being publicly read, were Universally Approv'd, and Personally Sub-
" scrib'd, by every Member of both Houses: And it was farther Ordered, " That " the Book of Articles, so Approved, should be put in Print by the Right
" Reverend Dr. John Jewel, then Bishop of Sarum; and that every Bishop
" should take a Competent Number of them, to be dispersed in their Visita-
" tions, or Diocesan Synods, and to be Read four times every Year in All the " Parishes of their several and respective Diocesses. Besides which, it was farther Order'd, in the Canons of the same Convocation, " That no one should be " Admitted from thenceforth into Holy Orders, till he had first subscribed the " same, and solemnly Oblig'd himself to defend the things contain'd in them,
" as consonant, in all Points, to the Word of God.

This Second Subscription of these Articles is particularly taken notice of in the Close of them, as they were then publish'd: And because neither in that, nor yet in the Title of them, is there any hint of a License under the Broad Seal, tho' exprely mention'd afterwards where it was employ'd; <sup>4</sup> Dr. A. would from thence infer, that no such License at all was granted. We know what he means; the Canons of 1603: But then he must give me leave to observe, from his own Account

Account of the Case of those Canons, that neither is there any Mention of a License to Treat in the English Title of those Canons at all, nor in the Latin, otherwise than as Treating is join'd with Agreeing; and therefore, by the same Rule, I may conclude, that neither had that Convocation any License to Treat, but only to Agree. But the Matter is still plainer in the Canons of 1640, where there is evidently no mention in the Title of any License to Treat; and yet for all that, we know that That Convocation had such a License; and so, for ought can be gathered from these kind of Remarks, may the present Convocation have had also.

If in Answer to this, Dr. A. shall except, that here is no Hint of any License at all either for Treating, or Agreeing; he will give me leave to say, that this makes the Case more plainly against him. For since himself allows the Royal Authority to be needful for Agreeing, and yet there is no notice taken of any such Authority given to them; the Consequence will be, that I may as well, nay and more reasonably suppose, they had it for both, tho' neither be mention'd; than he can conclude that they had it for One, and not for the Other; seeing that where ever any such License is found for Agreeing, there a Liberty of Treating is constantly granted with it, as necessary, in order to their Agreeing. I know but One Instance that there ever was, of any other kind of License, Anno 1586, under this Queen. But besides that That License was granted on a particular Occasion, even That was founded upon a Petition of the Convocation, to Devise, as well as to Make Constitutions; and therefore being taken with relation thereunto, must be understood to have empower'd them to Confer, as well as to Conclude, and so will be no real Exception at all in this Case.

But to convince Dr. A. that this Convocation must have had some License, (of what kind I matter not) let me observe, that besides their New Approbation of, and Subscription to, the Articles of Religion; they pass'd a Book of Canons likewise. These were not only Treated of, but were fully Concluded upon, and Agreed to in this Synod, by the Archbishop and Bishops. And either he must confess, that for this they had the Queen's Authority, or he must Enlarge the Terms of his Affertion, and Affirm with the Writer who went before him, that the Clergy in Convocation have no need of any License to Enact, or Make, any more than to Deliberate of Canons, but only to Promulge and Execute them after they are made. In the mean time, <sup>1</sup> Dr. Heylin tells us, that they had the Queen's <sup>1</sup> Tracts. p. 198 Leave for what they did; and I make no doubt, but that the Leave which they had, extended to their Consulting of, no less than to their Concluding upon, the Canons which were pass'd by them.

Of the next Convocation we have no Remains, besides the Speech of the Archbishop at the Opening of it. <sup>2</sup> Dr. A. observes, that in that Speech there is no Expression, from whence we can suspect that that Meeting was to Treat by Commission from Her Majesty. He is in the Right: For, as yet, there was nothing begun, not so much as an Intimation given to the Clergy, by the Archbishop himself what they were Called for: Only they were Order'd to Choose a Prolocutor, and to present him on such a Day; Quo etiam tempore, says the Archbishop, in hujus Convocationis Negotio ulterius progrediemur, prout locus, & tempus, vetusque Consuetudo postulant. But what was farther done at that time, I cannot tell, having not met with any Printed, or MS Accounts, of the Acts of this Convocation. Sect. 94.

Dr. A. from hence makes a large Step of twelve Years forward; but before I proceed with him to that Synod, I shall take the Liberty to give some account of Another, but little known, which began at St. Pauls, February the 9th, 1575. Archbishop Parker dying the May before, Archbishop Grindall was, about a Week after the Opening of this Convocation, translated from York to Canterbury, February the 15th. In this Assembly, a Book of Articles was Agreed upon, chiefly touching the Admission of apt and fit Persons to the Ministry, and the Establishing of Good Orders in the Church. These were Publish'd by the Queen's Majesty's Authority; and no more being mention'd, Dr. A. may, if he pleases, conclude that they were Conferr'd upon without it. But then he must remember, that they were Concluded upon too; and therefore he must either Allow that, for all the Silence of the Title in this Particular, they had some License to do this, or he must roundly profess that none is needful; at least, that it was then thought that None was.

When these Articles were presented to the Queen for her Confirmation, she disliked the last of them, and would not suffer it to be Publish'd. She was the Daughter of King Henry the 8th, and may chance to fall under Dr. A's Censure for this her Arbitrary Procedure. The Book its self having never (that I know of) been printed since the Year that the Convocation sat, and the Copies of it being now grown very rare, I shall place it among the Other Records in my Appendix, and subjoin that Article which the Queen rejected, as <sup>2</sup> Dr. Heylin Copied it out of the Register of this Convocation; that so we may see what it was that she disliked, and therefore struck out, after the Synod had Agreed to it.

The next Session of our Convocation began January the 17th, 1580. Nothing was done in it, and therefore no License needed by it. The Bishops recommended Three Persons to the Clergy, to choose a Prolocutor out of One of them; which they accordingly did. A Motion was made for putting the late Articles in Execution; and, as <sup>3</sup> Mr. Fuller adds, Another to draw up some Articles against Those of the Family of Love: But it went no farther than a Motion; so that this, with the Subsidy, was the whole Business of that Meeting.

To proceed now to Dr. A's next Convocation: All that he observes concerning it, is, that in the Title of the Articles which were pass'd by it, they are said to have been Establish'd by the Archbishop, Bishops, and Clergy in Synod, and only to have been Approv'd and Confirm'd by the Queen's Authority. <sup>4</sup> Dr. A. here again falls into his usual Error: His eagerness to Assert the Clergies Freedom of Debate, without the Authority of the Crown, in their Convocations; makes him advance such Proofs, as either Conclude nothing at all, or else go too far; and argue a Right in them, not only to Conferr, but to Enact too, without a License: A thing which himself nevertheless will not Affirm that they have the Power to Do. However, since this is what he pursues, I will furnish him with an Instrument that shall make good all that the Title suggests. It is the Archbishop's Mandate for Publishing these very Articles; in which he takes notice of the Queen's Writ for their Sitting, and of her Patents for Confirmation of what they had done; but it is utterly silent, as to any Authority granted to them, either to Debate, or Agree. In the mean time, <sup>6</sup> Dr. Heylin here again tells us, that they had the Queen's Leave to Make these Articles: How far Dr. A. will be concluded by his Affertion, I cannot tell.

Seft. 97.

We are now come to a Convocation, upon which Dr. A. in the Review of his Book, very largely insists; with which (if we may believe him) the Use of Licenses under the Great Seal of England first began; and that not only to Decree, or Enact, but to TREAT too. Here therefore I must take the Liberty to be more particular, that so it may the better appear on which side the Force of this President will be found to lie.

Concerning the Circumstance of a License under the Great Seal of England, I have already declared, that I will not dispute with Dr. A. Whether the Royal Authority was convey'd to the Convocation, after that Manner, from the Beginning; or whether it was only taken up about this time, as Dr. A. supposes it to have been, to me it is Indifferent: The Act of Submission determines nothing in that Particular.

As for the other Matter which Dr. A. takes some pains to shew, that this Convocation did without any License; he again contends about that which nobody denies. The only Question between him and me is this; Whether the Clergy may, without the Authority of the Prince, TREAT and CONFER about such Canons, Constitutions, Orders, and Ordinances Provincial, as the Act of Submission speaks of; and as we are both of us, I conceive, Agreed, they cannot ENACT, PROMULGE, and EXECUTE, but by his License and Authority?

To proceed therefore with the Matter of Fact, as it stands in the Acts of both the Convocations of this Year; the Records of which, in each Province, do happily remain entire to us.

On Friday, February the 24th, the Archbishop first propos'd to the Prolocutor and Clergy, the Granting of a Subsidy to the Queen; and the Prolocutor agreed, with the Lower House, on the Persons who should be join'd with him to transact this Affair on their behalf.

The next Friday, March the 3<sup>d</sup>, the Prolocutor reported what they had concluded upon with the Archbishop, and Bishops, to which the House Assented. Then he farther signified to the Lower House, the Pleasure of the most Reverend, and the other Prelates, concerning a Benevolence of 3 s. in the Pound, to be granted to the Queen, beyond the Subsidy before mentioned; to which they likewise Agreed. After which, the Prolocutor, and the whole House, being sent for up to the Archbishop and Bishops, the Book of Subsidy was Read, Corrected, and Perfected there.

On the Day following, March the 4th, the Prolocutor being sent for up to the Upper House, presently return'd with a Book drawn for the Benevolence to the Queen; which being in some Places Amended and Perfected, was Approved by All that were present.

In the two next Sessions, of the 6th and 8th of March, nothing at all was done. The next following, March the 10th, the Prolocutor coming down from the Upper House, with the Consent of all that were present, <sup>Elegit venerabiles Vi-</sup> Chose the Dean of Eli, and the Archdeacons of Lincoln, and Taunton, to TREAT and COMMUNICATE, together with himself, with the Reverend Fathers, of Constitutions and Decrees, by the LICENSE and VIGOR of the Queen's Letters-Patents Granted in that behalf, to be Establish'd, for the Collection of the Benevolence Granted to Her Majesty. <sup>ros, &c. ad Transact. & Communi-</sup> cand. cum Reverendis Patribus de Constitutionibus & Decretis, LICENTIA & VIGORE Literarum Patentium per Dom. nostram Regiam in ea parte Concessarum STABILIENTIS, &c.

The two next Sessions nothing was done: The Session following, March the 15th, in the Afternoon, the Prolocutor being sent for up to the Upper House, brought down from thence certain Constitutions and Ordinances, put in writing, for the faithful and just Collection and Payment of the Benevolence, before Granted by the Synod to the Queen. Which being Openly Read, the Prolocutor demanded their Assent and Consent to them. They gave their Assent; only Mr. Gilpin desir'd that the Apparitors might have some Allowance made them for their Pains. After this, we hear no more of this Affair; so that we may Conclude, that the House Agreed to the Constitutions as they were drawn, and made no Alterations in them.

Such was the Matter of Fact, as it stands Recorded in the Acts of this Convocation. The Observations which naturally arise from it, are these: (1st) Of the Dispatch with which this Benevolence went on. Upon Friday, March the 3<sup>d</sup>, the Archbishop propos'd the Granting of it: It was Agreed to the same Day by Both Houses. The Book was drawn for it, Read, Corrected, and Pass'd the next Day, March the 4th: And the very same Day was Perfected for the Queen's Acceptance.

Señ. 98.

In this <sup>2</sup> Instrument of Grant, they desire first, "the Queen's Acceptance of it; and next, that by her Letters Patents under her Great Seal, she would Assent thereunto; and would also License and Authorize them in that their Convocation and Synod, to DEVISE, MAKE, and ORDAIN, such Orders, Decrees, and Constitutions Provincial and Synodal, as they should think most Expedient for the more speedy and sure Levying and Payment of the said Benevolence or Contribution: And thereby also to Give and Testifie her Royal Assent to such Orders, Decrees, and Constitutions, as in that their Synod or Convocation they should Make, Decree, and Ordain." <sup>2</sup>Addit. p. 107.

The Queen accordingly issued out her Letters-Patents, as they desired: In which, having declared her Gracious Acceptance of their Benevolence, and Confirm'd all the Clauses of it, she adds, that "of her special Grace, certain Knowledge, and meer Motion, she had Given, Granted, and Confirm'd, and by these Presents did Give, Grant, and Confirm, to the Prelates and Clergy in Synod Asssembled, License, Power, and Authority, to DECREE, ORDAIN, and CONSTITUTE, any Decrees, Ordinances, and Constitutions Synodical, which should seem Proper and Fitting to them, for the better true, and just Collection, and Payment of the said Benevolence, and every Parcel of the same, and to put in Execution, with Effect, the same Decrees, Ordinances, and Constitutions, &c."

The presenting of this Benevolence, and the Passing the Queen's Letters-Patents, before mention'd, took up five Days time; during which, the Convocation stood still; and tho' it was twice appointed to meet, yet separated without doing doing any thing. On the 10th of March, which is the next thing I would (2dly) observe, the Queen's Letters-Patents being now ready, the Prolocutor was sent for up to the Upper House, and made acquainted with it; and thereupon Agreed with the Clergy upon Three Persons, who, together with himself, might "Treat and Communicate with the Bishops about Making these Constitutions, and Decrees, with the Queen's License, which by her Letters-Patents she had Granted to them. What Minutes, or Draughts, the Archbishop himself, or any Others by his Order, might privately have prepared for their more speedy Conclusion when they should come together, I cannot tell. This is plain, from the Question which the Prolocutor put to the House, and their Resolution upon it, that they did not Treat, nor Confer Synodically upon this Matter, till the 10th of March, when they had the Queen's License and Authority so to Do.

That Day was spent in Treating, Conferring, and Concluding upon these Ordinances, which probably were not finish'd till some Sessions after: When the Convocation being again met in the Afternoon, March the 15th, they were finally Read in the Lower House, and Assented to by it. So that the plain Order of their Procedure, was, in the present Matter, this: The Benevolence was Voted, March the 3d; and Concluded in Convocation, March the 4th. The Queen's Patents of Ratification, with her License to Decree, Ordain, and Constitute such Orders and Constitutions as they should think needful for the Levying and Payment of it, pass'd March the 9th, and were brought to Convocation March the 10th. On that Day the Clergy, by vertue of this Commission, Treated and Communicated upon them: They spent some Days in settling of them; and so finally Agreed to them, March the 15th.

Sect. 100.

Now this suggests yet one Observation more: (3dly,) That the Convocation in their Instrument of Grant, not only ask'd the Queen's Leave to Devise, Make, and Ordain these Constitutions, March the 4th; but put a Stop to their Proceedings for Five Days, (tho' they were Order'd to Meet twice in the mean time in Expectation of it) till they had Received the Queen's Letters-Patents to this Purpose: And then they proceeded to Confer to Constitute; in their own Words, they Treated, and Communicated, to Establish their Decrees, according to the License Granted them by the Queen's Letters Patents so to Do.

If therefore this long Suspension of this Affair, for five Days, cannot be otherwise reasonably accounted for, than by acknowledging that they durst not Treat and Communicate about these Ordinances, till they had received the Queen's License so to Do: If in their Petition for her License, they desir'd leave to Devise, as well as to Make and Ordain them; I do not see what they could have done more plainly to shew, that they thought the Queen's Authority necessary for the One, as well as for the Other; and therefore, even in so favourable a Case, declin'd all Conferring and Communicating about these Decrees, till they were Empower'd by the Queen to Make them.

Sect. 101.

To pass now into the Other Province, and see how this Affair proceeded there. On Thursday, March the 9th, the Benevolence was Proposed by the Commissioners, and Agreed to by the Clergy. Before their next Session, March the 23d, the Queen's Letters-Patents were sent down to them, in the same Form that they had been Granted to our Convocation before. By the Tenor of these, She not only Accepted and Confirm'd their Benevolence, but Authorized them to proceed to Make such Decrees as they should think needful for the better Payment and Collection of it. On the Day of their Session, these Letters-Patents were publickly Read; and thereupon Constitutions were Made, Decreed, and Pronounc'd, according to the Tenor of them. The Cause of this Dispatch was plain: They had the Copies of what the other Convocation had done transmitted to them; and so had no more to do, but only to Read, Approve, and Conclude upon the same Decrees.

Sect. 102.

p. 110.

And here then let us stop and see what Dr. A. has to except against so plain and full an Evidence as these Convocations afford us, in Opposition to his Pretensions. First, <sup>1</sup> He observes, "that the Practise of that Time was, for the Clergy to Treat, Resolve, and Act Synodically, without any Antecedent Qualification, or License from the Crown: For thus they Treated of, and Concluded upon their Benevolence, and Reduced their Grant into Form, and Presented it to the Queen, before any such License was Ask'd, or Obtain'd. I do agree with Dr. A. as to the particular Ground of his Remark; I except only against the Generality of

of it. In the Concern of Money, whether they Treated, or Concluded, they did both meerly as a Convocation, not as a Synod; and in all such Matters, I have often said, they were not Restrain'd by the Act of Submission. The only Question is, Whether it was the Practice of those Times, for the Clergy either to Treat, Resolve, or Conclude upon any Canons, or Constitutions, Provincial or Synodal, without the Queen's Assent first had, and her License, some way or other, granted to them so to Treat and Conclude? Dr. A. himself will not adventure to say that it was.

He observes (2dly) "That their Request to the Queen, was, that she should in the same Instrument, whereby she was to License them to Decree Canons, give also and testifie her Royal Assent to those Orders, Decrees, and Constitutions. I will not quarrel with Dr. A. about Words, tho' otherwise there is not in all their Request any mention made of Decreeing Canons; no, nor yet in the Queen's Patents in answer to it. They call'd them by a more proper Term, Orders, Decrees, and Constitutions Provincial: And such only the Queen Authorized them to make; Decreta, Ordinationes, & Constitutiones Synodales. But why do's Dr. A. leave this Matter at so loose a rate, as if the Convocation had ask'd a General License to Make Canons, and the Queen had Consented to it, and Engaged, at all adventures, to Ratifie whatever Canons or Constitutions they should Make? The Case was truly this: They had Granted a Benevolence to Her Majesty; and because they would not have it pass into a President; and be Confirm'd by Authority of Parliament, they desir'd the Queen her self to Ratifie it by her Own Royal Authority; and by the same Authority to Empower them to enforce the Payment of it by Ecclesiastical Orders and Constitutions. These were the Decrees which alone either They desir'd, or the Queen gave them any Leave to Make: These only were the Orders and Constitutions which, for the better Dispatch of that Affair, they pray'd the Queen to Confirm; and the Queen was pleas'd by her Patents to Confirm accordingly. And what Impeachment it could be of her Princely Wisdom, to Do this, which is the Great Thing Dr. A. would have Observ'd in this Particular, I cannot tell.

And yet, upon this single Ground, he undertakes to argue away the plain Matter of Fact, as it stands clearly upon Record in the Acts of the Convocations of Both Provinces. The Records shew us, from Day to Day, how the Clergy proceeded: That they first Agreed to a Benevolence; then Presented it to the Queen for her Acceptance and Ratification; and at the same time, desired her License to Devise and Make such Orders and Constitutions, as should be necessary for the better levying and payment of it. That the Queen Accepted and Ratified their Gift accordingly; and Granted them the License which they Requested; and Confirm'd whatsoever Decrees they should Make for the Collection of their Benevolence. That the Convocation stopp'd their Proceedings while this License was preparing; and presumed not to propose the Consideration of any Order to this Purpose, or to Confer upon any, till such time as the Patent had pass'd the Great Seal, and was brought to them. That having Received the Queen's License, the Clergy went presently to work, and settled a Committee of both Houses, to TREAT and Communicate about such Orders, as should be thought fit for this Purpose, and to Conclude upon them. All this, and in this plain Order, the Records of that Convocation deliver to us. And yet, notwithstanding all this, Dr. A. roundly affirms that this could not be so. "That the Draught of these Orders must have been Made before. The Convocation could not be so Unreasonable, as to desire the Queen to give Authority to Orders which she had not seen; and the Queen was too Wise, and too Jealous of her Honour, to have comply'd with them, if they should. The Convocation, I suppose, would have done nothing Unreasonably, or to offend a Wise Queen, and One who was Jealous of her Honour, in presuming not only to Attempt, but to Conclude upon; nay, and to Draw up, and Present to her self, those very Decrees, Orders, and Constitutions, which yet at the same time, they pray'd her Royal License to Devise, Make, and Ordain; and (even by Dr. A's own allowance) could not have lawfully Made, and Ordain'd, without it. This was a Thing very Reasonable in its self, and very Dutiful to the Queen: But to desire her Majesty, not only to give them Leave to Make such Decrees, but, at all adventures, to Ratifie and Confirm them, was so Unreasonable a Request, that we must rather deny the Authority of the formal Acts of Both Convocations, than give Credit to it.

Let any impartial Person judge, whether of the two we ought to believe; The Acts of the two Convocations, which expressly tell us how this Matter pass'd; Or Dr. A's Reason, which he has here offer'd to shew, that it could not possibly have pass'd so as the Acts assure us that it did.

Had indeed the Convocation desired a General License to Make whatsoever Cannons they pleas'd, and that the Queen would engage her self, at all adventures, to Ratifie and Confirm them; this would have been truly, as Dr. A. says, an unreasonable Request, and such as so wise a Queen would hardly have comply'd with. But in a particular Case, in which the Clergy were not only Alone concern'd, but had always been wont to prescribe their own Terms; for the Convocation to desire the Queen to Ratifie such Orders as they should Agree to, for Collecting and Paying of their Own Benevolence; this was, in effect, no more than what both the Queen and Parliament did in the Case of their Subsidy, at the same time; in which they not only did not Alter the least Clause or Title of what the Convocation had Establish'd, but had no Power, or Authority at all to Alter it. The Clergy, as well as Laity, were Masters of their own Money, and gave it upon what Terms they pleas'd. The Queen might Accept of it, if she thought good, and Confirm it, as it was presented to her; but if that she did not like, or her Parliament would not do, the Grant was void; for there was no Change to be made in it.

† Addit.
p. 112.

When therefore Dr. A. urges the Licenses of our following Princes, in which a Reservation is expressly made for their Seeing and Approving of what the Clergy shall Decree, after they had done it, before they Promise to Ratifie the same; it is altogether besides the present Purpose: Which relates solely to a Money Case, in which as there was no such need of an after-View, so were the Clergy always used to prescribe their own Terms; and to make their own Conditions and Limitations, as well for the Collecting, and Paying, as for the Summe which they Granted, and the Persons or Corporations on whom they lay'd them. And all that was more to be done now, was only to enforce those terms by Spiritual Censures, which the Parliament used to Confirm by Civil Penalties.

Sect. 104.

But Dr. A. proceeds, and from Reasoning against Matter of Fact, which at the same time he knew would not be allow'd; comes to that, which is indeed to the Purpose, to Confront Matter of Fact against it. I have shewn from the Acts of this Convocation, and from the Date of the Constitutions which were pass'd in it, that the Clergy did not proceed to Debate Synodically upon them till the 10th of March; at which time they had the Queens License so to Do. Against this Dr. A. urges, that in his Extracts of the Proceedings of the Upper House (the Acts of which are hitherto not Recovered) these Constitutions are noted to have been entred in the Register immediatly after the Draught of the Grant, which the Clergy made of their Benevolence. Then the Queens Acceptance and Confirmation follows, with which the License was given: And from thence he Concludes, that the Constitutions were not only Debated of, but were absolutely Concluded upon, and Drawn into Form, before the Queens License was Granted for the Making of them.

Now to suppose that in the Transcript of the Acts of this Convocation (yet if Dr. A's Extracts were after all taken from thence) the Register when He drew it out fair, did chuse to enter the Ordinances, by which the Benevolence was to be collected, immediatly after the Instrument by which it was Granted; that so the whole might lie the more nearly together; how does this prove that they were pass'd by the Convocation in the same Order that the Register entred them? Or how will Dr. A. perswade any Reasonable Man that the Clergy not only Petitioned the Queen for Leave to Devise Ordinances, already not only Devis'd, but Drawn, Pass'd, and Agreed upon; but three Sessions after, Appointed a Committee of both Houses to TREAT and CONSULT about such Ordinances; which they knew had been actually made and pass'd by them three Sessions before?

In the same Acts, Dr. A's Extracts say that the Queens Letters Patents immediatly follow these Ordinances, before the next Session. Will Dr. A. from thence infer, that those too were pass'd in the same Order that they were Entred upon the Register? Let us see what strange Work such a Supposition will make of this Affair. On Saturday, March the 4th, the Convocation Met between 3 and 5 in the Afternoon: The Prolocutor was sent for up, and after some time brought down the Book for the Benevolence, which was Read, Corrected, and Agreed to by the Lower House; and return'd back to the Upper. In this Instrument the Queens Acceptance, and Ratification of their Subsidy is Desir'd; together with her Leave to Devise, and Ordain, Constitutions for the Collecting and Paying of it. At the same time, and in the same Session, these Orders and Constitutions were Devis'd and Drawn; and the Queens Letters Patents under the Great Seal were deliver'd to them according to their Request: For on Monday, the Convocation was Order'd to Meet again, and all this is Antecedent to that Session. Yet after all this Unconceivable Hurry, in one Evenings Session, the Archbishop, I know not why, Prorogues the Convocation twice together without doing of any thing; and five or six days after, the Prolocutor is Ordered to Move the Lower House for certain Persons to be appointed, to Treat and Communicate with the Lords about these same Ordinances which had been both Concluded upon, and Presented to the Queen, so long before. Dr. A. himself acknowledges these Ordinances to bear date the same day on which the Acts tells us they were begun to be Treated of, March 10, Six days after their Entry in his Extracts: And after that they took up five Days more before they were fully Perfected, and finally Pass'd in the Lower House.

But Dr. A. will confirm this same Order from the Acts of the Lower House: Addit. p. 115. On March the 10th it is said, that the Prolocutor chose three with him to "treat with the Bishops, de Constitutionibus & Decretis, Licentia & Vigore literarum patentium Stabiliendis, pro Concessione Benevolentiae. He reports it truly, what do's he infer from it? Why "the House is said to Treat, Not about Preparing, or Drawing up of Canons, BUT de Stabiliendis, about Establishing or Decreeing them. What, as Exclusive of Preparing, and Drawing them up? Let us put the Words of the Record into their proper English, and then Judge whether such an Inference can be drawn from them? "The Prolocutor returning to the House, with the Consent of all that were present, chose the Dean of Eli and the Archdeacons of Lincoln and Taunton, to TREAT and COMMUNICATE, together with himself, with the Reverend Fathers, about Constitutions and Decrees, by the License and Force of the Letters Patents Granted by the Queen in that behalf, to be Establish'd for the Collection of the Benevolence granted to our said Lady the Queen. These are the Words of the Record: The Committee was appointed to Treat and Consult of the Constitutions which, by the Authority of the Queens Patents, were to be Establish'd. And I think it is pretty plain, that if the Constitutions which were to be Establish'd for this Purpose, were to be Treated of, and Consulted about, March the 10th, we may venture to conclude, that they had not been Drawn up and Agreed to, six days before, March the 4th.

Dr. A. has not yet done; the Clergy had desir'd leave not only to Make and Ordain, but to Devise such Constitutions as they should think needful in order to this End: And Devise is a perverse Word, and carries along with it a Sense of Consulting, and Debating of something not yet form'd, but to be hereafter Invented and Fram'd. For this therefore, Dr. A. will help us to a New Notion that shall do the Business. He assures us that by Devising and Making, they could mean nothing more than putting the last hand, and Giving Synodical Authority to these Decrees. But how do's he prove this? The Notion is not only New, but altogether different from the Ordinary Signification of the word Devise. How do's it appear that the Convocation designed to use it in such a Sense? Sect. 105. Addit, &c. p. 116.

He tells us, first, that it appears, in some Measure, from those Words "Make, Decree, or Ordain, which occur in the Clergies Petition a few lines afterwards, and are used there as Expressive of those others Devise, Make, Ordain, and as Equivalent to them. That I deny: Before the Constitutions were drawn, they were to be first, Devis'd; then, Made, and Ordained. And for this therefore, they first of all desired the Queens Leave. But being once Drawn, the Business of Devising was at an End: And therefore in their next Request, when they came to desire the Queens Confirmation of them, it was more proper to lay aside that Word, and to speak of them now as Constitutions in being, and so in a Capacity of being Confirmed; and therefore they very properly Requested her Ratification of such Constitutions as they should, upon Consultation and Device, Make, Decree, or Ordain. In the former Case, they needed License to Devise, as well as to Make, and therefore they desired the Queens Authority for both. But in the Latter, they needed only the Confirmation of what they should, by her License, Make, Decree, and Ordain; and there as Devising had no place in the Intendment of their Petition, so neither did they give it any place in their Expression. But how these Later Words are thereby prov'd either to have been designed, or to be, fully and only, expressive of the former, Dr. A. must take some other Way to prove.

<sup>1</sup> Ibid. p. 116. This therefore shews us the great need there was of his Second Remark, which he thus delivers to us: "But it is more clearly made out by the Tenor of the " License it self which issued upon their Request, and which gave them power " only to Decree, Ordain, and Constitute, and yet we may presume, gave them " all the Power they ask'd. When they desire therefore Leave to Devise, Make, " and Ordain, they mean nothing more than to Decree, Ordain, and Constitute, " since no leave for any Synodical Acts antecedent to these, was given to them. I must be excus'd if I cannot agree with Dr. A. in this, any more than in his former Remark. The Clergy ask'd what was fit for them to ask; and the Queen Answered them in such a Way as was proper for her to Answer. The Statute concerning which we are now Debating says, that the Clergy should not Attempt, Alledge, Claim, or Put in Ure, or Enact, Promulge, or Execute any New Canons, unless they should have the King's License and Authority to Make, Promulge, or Execute the same. But in saying so, it plainly implies, that having obtained the King's License to Make, they might Attempt, &c. as well as Enact any such Canons. It is the very same Case here: The Clergy, in Pursuance of the whole Restraining Words of the Act, desir'd Leave to Devise, Make, and Ordain. The Queen gave them Leave, as the Enabling Word Requir'd to Decree, Ordain, and Constitute. The One Requested, and the Other Granted, exactly according to the Purport of the Statute. For since no Ordinances can be Decreed and Constituted, but what are Made; nor any Made, but what must be Devis'd; tho' the Clergy were to begin at the first Step in what they Desired, because Canons may be Devis'd and yet not be Enacted; and even that is contrary to the Statute; yet was it sufficient for the Queen to Mention the last only, which Included All the rest; and by Authorizing them to Decree, effectually to License them to Debate, and Conclude upon; to Devise as well as to Make, what she Ewpower'd them to Ordain and Constitute.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 117. But Dr. A. still insists; " that the Letter enter'd in the Convocation Book of " York shews, that by Devising and Making, they meant Ordaining and Constituting. " For in that, They take Notice how her Majesty had Licens'd, or Authorized " them, to Ordain, Devise, and Make Decrees, for the true Collection and Payment " of this Benevolence. So indeed that Letter is drawn; and supposing the Entry of it to have been exactly made, I think no body can doubt, but that whosoever drew it, He put these Words together in a very Improper and Unnatural Order. But for a Man to argue from the draught of a Letter, it may be not Exactly Copied, to be sure very unskilfully Indited, (which in the hurry of Business, and where an Actuary was probably employ'd to draw up the form, is no such wonderful thing) that Ordaining, Devising, and Making, are Equivalent Terms, and do all signifie the same thing, is so weak a Proof of an Extraordinary Assertion, as sufficiently shews there is nothing to be said for it. In the mean time Dr. A. should have observed, that in their Instrument of Grant, which they presented to the Queen as the Publick Act of the Convocation, they were more Exact; and observed the natural order of the words; and petition'd for Leave, to Devise, Make, and Ordain, as our Convocation had done before.

Addit. p. 118.

Dr. A. has got one Observation more, which may deserve to be consider'd. The Convocation having obtained the Queens License, as we have before seen, tells us in the Preface to their Constitutions which they establish'd thereupon, that she had given them thereby Leave to Make, Promulge, and Execute the Orders following: " Which (says he) are the very Words of the Submission Act; and are " used here to shew, the Restraints prescribed by that Act were strictly observ'd. I do Agree with him in this Remark; and from thence inferr, that since the same Convocation in their Instrument of Grant, Ask'd License of the Queen to Devise, Make, and Ordain first, and then to give her Royal Assent, to such Orders, Decrees, and Constitutions, as they should Make, Decree, and Ordain; and upon the Queens Authorizing them in both, express'd the whole in those words of the Act, Make, Promulge, and Execute; They did look upon the Word Make to Answer to all those Words of that Statute which are oppos'd to it; Attempt, Alledge, Claim, Put in Ure, Enact, and which themselves in other Terms, but to the very same Purpose, express'd, when they desir'd Leave of the Queen to De- vise, vise, Make, and Ordain. But for Dr. A. after they had expressly applied to her Majesty for Leave to do all this, to tell us, that in repeating these Words of the Statute, which belong to the Queen's License, they omitted All but Enacting; Or did not intend to include Devising, as well as Ordaining, (for which they had so distinctly Petitioned) under the General Word of Making, is to persuade us, that they knew as little of their Own Meaning, as he would have us, by his Good Will, to understand of that Act.

The Summ of all is this: The Clergy of this Convocation were desirous to Make such Provincial Constitutions as were requisite for the levying and paying of their Benevolence; but were sensible, that by the Act of Submission they could not Make them, without the Queen's License. Upon this, they Petition her for Leave to Devise, Make, and Ordain such Constitutions, and tarry six Days in Expectation of her License to that Effect. And having received it, they presently go to work, and the same Day Treated upon them. In five days more they are put into form, and pass both Houses; and so, by vertue of the Queen's Letters Patents, were Confirm'd, for Promulgation and Execution. In the Front of their Constitutions, they take notice of the Authority upon which they had proceeded; That they had obtain'd the Queen's License to Make, Promulge, and Execute them. And in all this, both by their Words, and Actions, they have evidently shewn, that by a License to Make, they understood a License to Devise, as well as to Ordain; and by Devising, Making, and Ordaining, plainly meant what the Act express'd in those other Words, but to the same effect, of Attempting, Alledging, Claiming, Putting in Ure, and Enacting: All which therefore they accounted, as we now do, to belong to such New Constitutions as were hereafter to be made by the Clergy in their Convocations.

From this Convocation, Dr. A. proceeds to that of 1597; and it is indeed the next in which any Provincial Canons, or Constitutions, were Made. That this Assembly Treated without any License, he concludes from the Title of their Canons, in which they are said to have been Treated of by the Archbishop and Bishops, and afterwards to have been Approv'd, and Confirm'd, by the Queen's Majesty: "Which Title (says he) if it may be depended on, evidently shews that their desire was for Leave not to Treat, but Enact only. How Dr. A. can possibly extract such a Consequence out of that Title, I confess I am not able to Conjecture, in which there is not one Word of Enacting, any otherwise than as it may be reasonably look'd upon to be comprehended under the General Term Treatate; which in that Title is set to express All that was done by the Bishops and Clergy, in Synod, about them. For so the Process there stands; Constitutions Treated of by the Archbishop, Bishops, and Clergy, in their Synod; and afterwards Approv'd and Confirm'd by the Queen. In the Synod they were Treated of, and Made; for, till that was done, the Queen could not Approve and Confirm them. If therefore there be any desire of the Clergy referr'd to in that Inscription, it must be for the Queen's Approbation and Confirmation, not for her License to Enact, as Dr. A. is pleas'd to represent it. And that alone may suffice to shew the weakness of his Argument in this Particular. For if the Silence of the Queen's License in that Title, be enough to prove that they Conferr'd without Any, it will also prove that they Enacted so too; for 'tis certain, that in that Title there is no more mention made of a License for the One, than there is for the Other.

But what then shall we say to the Queen's Letters of Confirmation of these very Canons, in which she recites, "How that the Archbishop, Bishops, and Clergy Assembled by her Writ, being met together according to the Tenor of the same Writ, at the Days and Places appointed by the said Writ, had Treated by her License, of Certain Canons and Constitutions; and had Agreed of, and upon Them; and had humbly Offer'd them to Her Majesty for Confirmation. This, I think, is a decisive Proof that they not only had her License, but had her License to Treat; and that as separate from, and antecedent to, their Agreeing of and upon them. And yet, as plain as this is, Dr. A. doubts not to elude the Force of it; nay, and to turn it to his Advantage. So happy a thing it is to have a Nice Head! and to be able to draw any Conclusions from any Premises. Let us see how he proceeds on this new Adventure.

1st. He observes, That this Word License do's not necessarily imply a License in Writing: "All it can fairly be pretended to imply, is, that there was a “ Verbal Leave, or Message, from the Queen to ’em, importing her Consent to what they were about to Do.

I have often declar’d, that I will not dispute this Circumstance with Dr. A. Let it be as it will, it is enough for me, that whatever License they had to Treat, the same License they had to Agree: And I do not pretend that the Clergy, by the Act of Submission, do stand in need of any greater or more solemn Authority for the One, than they do for the Other.

<sup>1</sup> Addit, &c.

But Dr. A. goes on: ‘He tells us, “that the Method, now pitch’d upon by the Clergy, was first to consider among themselves what was fit to be Offer’d to the Queen, in order to have Power from Her to Enact, or Pass it: Which was strictly according to the Statute that forbade them to Enact, Promulge, or Execute, unless they might have the Royal Assent, and License, to Make, Promulge, and Execute the same: The Royal Assent to what they Propos’d; and the Royal License for their Enacting, or Making a Canon, upon it. <sup>2</sup> So that in the Course now taken, there were, on the part of the Convocation, two distinct Actions, or Steps of Proceeding. The first, that of Deliberating and Resolving upon what should be propos’d for the Royal Assent and License: The second, that of Resuming the Deliberation, concerning what had been Propos’d, and of Constituting, Enacting, or Passing it. And to these, there Answer’d, on the part of the Crown, the Royal Assent to their Proposal; together with Leave to Constitute; and the Royal Ratification and Promulgation of it afterwards, when Constituted.

If I take Dr. A. aright, we are now come so near to one another in our stating of this Matter, that our greatest Difference seems to consist in this; that he derives his Hypothesis from One part of the Statute, and I from Another. I do humbly conceive that the Clergy may, without any License from the Crown, Confer and Treat about such Matters as may be fit to be Enacted by them, provided that they do so Confer and Treat, not in order to Constitute any Canons, &c. but merely to Apply to the Prince, if they shall think fit to proceed, for License to Attempt and Enact thereupon. Dr. A. allows, that the Clergy were now wont, in the first place, to Deliberate and Resolve upon what should be propos’d for the Royal Assent and License: And that Assent and License being obtain’d, to Resume the Deliberation of what had been so propos’d; and so to Constitute, and Enact, thereupon. According to this Method therefore, there was first a Proposal to be made to the Prince for his Assent to what they desir’d to Deliberate upon, in order to Enact; and, upon this Proposal, the Royal Assent and License was to be Obtain’d, before they proceeded to Deliberate, with a Design of Enacting or Passing it.

But will Dr. A. therefore tell us from what part of that Act (as by him Expounded) he derives the Necessity of this Double Assent and License, of which he speaks? The Royal Assent to what the Clergy propose to Proceed upon; and the Royal License to Deliberate and Enact upon it.

The Words of the Statute, himself again tells us, are only these; That the Clergy should not Enact, Promulge, or Execute any Canons, &c. unless they might have the Royal Assent and License to Make, Promulge, and Execute the same. Where is there any thing in these Words that Obliges them first to Consider of what shall be Propos’d to the Prince for his Royal Assent; and afterwards, (the Royal Assent being Obtain’d) to have his Royal License to Resume their Debates, and upon their further Deliberation, to Enact, or Make a Canon of it? This is more than I can find to be contain’d in these Words, as separated from the Others, which he Applies to another Purpose; which evidently require the Royal Assent and License for One and the same End; to Make, that is, (as he has more than Once told us) to Enact Canons and Constitutions, and for nothing more.

57. Append.

But it may be what we cannot find in the Act, may be discovered in the <sup>3</sup> Letters Patents by which the Canons of this Convocation were Confirm’d. “They Recite, first of all, how the Queen had Granted her Writ, and thereby Licensed the Archbishop to Summon his Convocation to Appear before him, at certain Times and Places, in the said Writ express’d; To Treat, Consent, and Conclude of certain Great and Urgent Affairs, mentioned in the said Writ. How the Archbishop, Bishops, and Clergy, having Assembled accordingly, and Treated by the Queen’s License, of certain Constitutions, and Agreed upon the same, had humbly Offer’d them to Her Majesty, desiring her Assent to them, according “ cording to the Statute 25 H. viii. The Tenor of which Constitutions follow in these Words, &c. And lastly, having made this Recital, they add; “ That the Queen having Heard, Read, and Diligently Consider’d their Constitutions, &c. had Given, and by these Presents did Give, her Royal Assent to them; and by her Letters-Patents, did Ratifie, Confirm, and Establish them; and Promulge them to be diligently observed, &c. This is the Sum of those Letters; and according to them, the Process was plain and natural: * The Clergy were Authorized to Meet in Convocation by the Queen’s Writ. * They Treated and Agreed upon certain Constitutions by her License. Having so done, they presented them to Her Majesty for Confirmation, which by these Letters-Patents she gave to them. But where to find any Ground for Dr. A’s two distinct Actions of the Convocation; first of Deliberating and Resolving what should be propos’d for the Royal Assent and License; and then of Resuming the Deliberation, concerning what had been Propos’d, and of Constituting, Enacting, or Passing of it; and both these, as previous to the Queen’s Confirmation and Promulgation of their Constitutions, I am not Clear-sighted enough to discern: Let him find it out that can, either in the Statute, or in the Patents.

Sect. 109.

And thus are we come to the End of that Period which Dr. A. insists upon as most favourable to his Pretensions: In which, he tells us, the Clergy Treated without any License from the Crown to Authorize them so to do; and from which he would infer, that notwithstanding the latter Practice, they may now again adventure to do likewise. But in the Examination of his own Allegations, there has appear’d One of these Defects in every Instance; That * either They have Prov’d nothing at all; * Or they have Proved too much; * Or, which has been the Case more than Once, they have proved the direct Contrary to what he Asserts.

The first Convocation of King Edward the 6th, neither Treated about, nor Enacted any Canons or Constitutions; and therefore, by the first Rule laid down, is (so far) no President on either side. But the Clergy were willing to have Treated: In order thereunto they Petition’d for a License to Attempt, as well as to Enact; and that a License in Writing, (a Circumstance which I may be allow’d to observe, tho’ I do not insist upon it) and this makes it a direct Proof on my side of the Question; and shews at once, both that the Clergy in Convocation ought to have a License to Treat, as well as to Ordain; and both by virtue of the Act of Submission, which they understood in the very same Sense that I now give of it.

The Other Convocation of the same Prince pass’d the Articles of Religion; and, in the Reverse of what we are now chiefly considering, Agreed upon Them, tho’ they do not seem to have much Conserr’d about the Making of Them. They were Prepar’d before, but Pass’d and Subscribed there. By what Authority this was done, the Acts of that Synod could not inform those who saw them; much less can we determine it who know not where to Recurr to them. If no License was needful for this, by the Statute 25 H. 8. this Meeting again will be no President either Way. If there were; then, by our third Rule, we are to Conclude, that they were Empower’d as the Law required, and had a sufficient Authority to Attempt, as well to Agree to, them.

In the first of Queen Mary, the Clergy were confessedly Authorized both to Debate and to Constitute. The License, Dr. A. observes, was Verbal; but whether the Prolocutor had not some further Authority for what he declar’d to the Convocation, is more than we can either of us tell; or shall need to enquire. They had the same Authority to Debate, and to Enact; and what was sufficient for the One, must, I am sure, have been sufficient for the Other likewise.

The same was the Case of the next Convocation, which met the beginning of the next Year, Anno 1554. As for that Other which sate in November following, it neither Conserr’d upon, nor Constituted any Canons or Constitutions, Provincial, or Synodal; and therefore, by our first Rule, is of no Authority on either side.

In the Convocation of 1562; the first of Queen Elizabeth which sate after the Revival of the Act of Submission, the nine and thirty Articles of Religion were Debated, and Agreed upon. No License to Treat appears; nor any to Constitute. Dr. Heylin tells us, they had the Queen’s License for what they did; and by our third Rule we must Conclude that they had, unless it can be shewn that they were Authorized

Authorized to Enact, but not to Conferr; a thing not once thought of, I am sure not once endeavour'd by Dr. A. in all his long Induction upon this Occasion.

About Nine Years after, these same Articles were again Pas'd, and Subscrib'd in the Convocation of 1571; a Book of Canons was Made; but no Authority appears by which either of these was done. We must therefore Conclude again by the same Rule, that they had a License: And the rather, because Dr. Heylin again tells us that they were duly empower'd in what they did; which by our fourth Rule, must be look'd upon as a sufficient Evidence on this side, till it can be Refuted by some better Authority on the Other.

Anno. 1575. a Book of Articles was Treated of, and Concluded upon, in Convocation. No License to Treat appears, nor any to Conclude. We must therefore Resolve as before, by our third Rule, that They proceeded according to Law; and had such a License, as the Law required for both.

The same was the Case of the Convocation in 1584: Articles were Treated of and Enacted by it. Dr. Heylin says they were Empower'd by the Queen to Make Them. We have no Account of any Authority by which they Acted; yet being sure they could not Make such Articles without a License, we must, by our third and fourth Rules, conclude that they had One; and that it was a License to Conferr upon, as well as to Constitute, what they did there.

In 1586. the Clergy, besides their Subsidy, Gave a Benevolence to the Queen. They desired to Provide for the Collecting and Paying of it by Ecclesiastical Orders and Constitutions; and for the Doing of this, they requested the Queen's License to Devise, Make, and Ordain them. The Queen gave them Leave to Decree such Constitutions as they desir'd; and in that, according to the tenor of the Statute of Submission, Licens'd them to Attempt, (or as they phras'd it) to Devise, as well as to Enact.

As for the last Convocation alledged in 1597; the Queen her self Recites, that it had her License to Treat, and Agree; that is, in the Language of the Clergy upon these very Occasions, || to Conclude, and Establish; tho' Dr. A. to Obscure a plain Case would put another Notion upon it, and distinguish between their Agreeing, and Enacting; as if the One imported somewhat less than the Other, and which was to be done by them as Preparatory to it.

Seet. 110.

Having thus pas'd thro' that Period which Dr. A. insists upon as most Favourable to his Hypothesis, I might here put an End to these Remarks, without looking farther into the History of our Convocations during the last Century; in which it is not deny'd but that they had a License; and that in Writing under the Great Seal, to Treat, Conferr, and Consult, as well as to Conclude, and Establish. But because Dr. A. has endeavour'd to take off the force even of these Licenses, in the first Instance, as he conceives, that there ever was of any of Them; it will be needful for me briefly to consider his Exceptions, and thereby to Establish both the Meaning and Authority of All such Other Licenses as have since been Granted upon the Model of this.

1603, 1604.

The matter of Fact was plainly this: On the 20th of March, Anno 1603, the Convocation of this Province met, and was opened according to Custom. In the Vacancy of the See of Canterbury the Bishop of London, Presided by Authority of the King's Writ directed to him for that Purpose; bearing Date the 9th of March before. At the Second Session, March the 23d: The Prolocutor, Dr. Ravis, Dean of Christ Church, Oxon, was presented by Dr. Overal Dean of St. Pauls; the beginning of whose Speech still remaining among the MSS of the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Norwich, may be worthy our Notice.

“ Præsento hic Vobis, pro more hujusmodi temporis & Locis, Gravissimum Doctissimumque hunc Virum, Communibus inferioris Domus suffragijs ad Officium Prolocutoris, & Communis Interpretis delectum; qui vestra ad Nos Mandata, Nostras ad Vos Petitiones, ceterasque Consultationes & Actus Synodicos, fideliter Referat, Exponat, Explicitque. Being

' Being thus put in a Posture of doing Business ( to use Dr. A's Expression ) the Clergy met twice without entring upon any Synodical Debates. On the 13th of April the Bishop of London brought to the Convocation the King's License to Make Canons, dated April the 12th 1604.

In that the King " gave Leave to the President, and Convocation to Confer, " Treat, Debate, Consider, Consult, and Agree of, and upon, such Canons, Or- " ders, Ordinances and Constitutions as they should think fit, By vertue thereof they did accordingly Confer, and Agree upon such Canons; which being afterwards Confirm'd by the King's Authority, have made up the great Body of Canons, by which our Church is Govern'd at this Day.

This is the Matter of Fact; and our Argument from it lies thus: That the King granted to this Convocation his Royal License to Confer, as well as to Constitute. That not only this Convocation did proceed in vertue of it to Do both, but all our Other Convocations, ever since, have done likewise. That in these Licenses the Statute of Submission has constantly been Recited, to shew that the Clergy are thereby tied up from Making any Canons, or Constitutions, without such a License; which Making we look upon to Refer to the whole Process of what is done by the Clergy in their Convocations, from their first Treating to their final Enacting; and to Include the One, as well as the Other. And therefore, we do suppose that by the Tenor of that Statute, the Clergy in Convocation are restrain'd from Attempting, and Enacting, any Canons without the King's Assent and License first obtain'd; and that of right they ought not, (as we are sure in fact they have not, for these last hundred Years, presumed) either to Confer or Agree upon any Provincial Canons, or Constitutions, till they are Authorized by the King's License so to do.

Against this Dr. A. is pleas'd to Offer several Exceptions; none of which, in my apprehension, do at all weaken the Force of that Deduction which I have before made of our Argument from this, and the like Licenses; which have, confessedly, been granted by our Kings, and accepted of by our Convocations, for these hundred Years past. Sect. 111.

" First, he observes, that this License was not Granted to the Clergy imme- Rights, &c. p. 389, 390.
diately upon their first coming together: That the Convocation had sate three p. 389, 390.
Weeks without a Commission; and To BE SURE had, in that time, TREA-TED without One; and did not therefore think themselves unqualified for ALL MANNER of Synodical DEBATES, till they were so Commissioned. Shall I, in answer to this, tell Dr. A. that in all that time they Met but twice, after the Choice of their Prolocutor, and then contrary to his confident Assertion, (founded upon meer Conjecture, and a Secret <sup>2</sup> Presumption that all the Acts of that Synod were utterly lost) did not TREAT of any thing within the Statute of Submission? Or shall I, rather, appeal to himself, now better inform'd, to confute his own Supposition, which he made without any knowledge of the Matter? Let us then take his Own Correction of this very Remark: <sup>3</sup> " 'Tis true but little in relation to the DEBATES of this Meeting is entred antecedently to their License, Ibid. p. (276.) and they Seem to have Adjourn'd for the greatest part of the time, in Expectation of it. However that Something was Treated of, and Done by them, even before their License came, the particular I have mentioned manifestly proves. Addit. &c. p. 128.
" It is but a Single Instance indeed, but it makes good their Right of Treating, as well as if there were more of them. But what was this Something that was Treated of, and Done by them? Was it Something in which our Present Argument is concerned? Did they Treat, tho' but in a Single Instance, without License, of any Other Matters than what they might have Done; nay, and, as Dr. A. himself states it, did Do, that is Conclude upon, without One? The Minute which he gives us of what he refers to shews the Impertinence of his Allegation: March 20th, 1604. The King's Letter to the Convocation to hasten a Collection for the Town of Geneva. This is that Single Instance of what Dr. A. tells us the Convocation did without a License. By the King's Command, and that press'd upon them with some kind of Importunity, they Made a Collection for the Town of Geneva, without any License under the Great Seal: Therefore they might have Treated of Canons and Constitutions Provincial if they had Pleas'd; and any Other Convocation may Treat of them, without any License from the Prince so to Do.

But Dr. A. will give us another Instance, from the same Convocation: " From the minutes of whose Acts it appears (AND IT IS EXTREAMLY REMARKABLE) That the Sect. 112. Ibid. p. 129.

" Copy of Dr. Overall's Convocation Book was brought in, and proposed to the " Consideration of the Clergy, SOME DAYS before their License came to them.
 Since Dr. A. thinks this Case so EXTREAMLY REMARKABLE; he will not be Offended if I give the Reader a more clear Account than it was for his Interest to give him of it: And then I am content that the Question between us be Determined by the Authority of this Remarkable Instance.

" On the 24th of January, the Archbishop deliver'd a Book, concerning the " State of the Church, and desir'd both Houses to take Copies, and Consult about it.
 The Book had been drawn up upon the Occasion of the Gun-Powder Conspiracy; and seems to have been design'd to be publish'd as the General Sense of the Church of England in the Points contain'd in it. That they might have time to take these Copies, and to Consider of the Book as they were directed (which I suppose did then consist only of the first Part of what has since been Published) he Prorogued the Convocation till the 29th of January; and then (to warrant their Debating about it, and Concluding upon the Matters contain'd in it) brought in the King's License to Make Canons. In the fourth Session, he deliver'd the Book, and Directed the Clergy to take Copies of it, and Consult about it: In the very next, before any manner of Debate was had in Convocation thereupon, He brought them the King's License; and then they proceeded solemnly to Read it, and to give their Assent to it.

But however, let us suppose that the Clergy had heard that Book quite read out in Convocation, before any License had been granted or brought to them: Is there any Clause in the Act of Submission that forbids the Archbishop to bring a Book into the Convocation, drawn up by a Private Hand; or the Convocation to hear such a Book Read; or to be desir'd to take Copies of it, and Consider of the Matters Contain'd in it? Have not the Clergy, within our Own Memories, done a great deal more than this; and yet never thought that thereby they were either Attempting or Enacting any Canons, or Constitutions Provincial? But did they before they Received the King's Commission, Read, Hear, or Consult of this Book, in Order to Make the Canons which were drawn up upon the several Sections of it their Own Synodical Acts; and to pass them into Provincial Decrees and Constitutions? The Procedure of the Archbishop renders such a Supposition utterly unconceivable; Who in One Session brought in this Book, and Order'd the Bishops and Clergy to take Copies of it; and the very next brought in the King's License, to Authorize them to Treat and Conclude upon it.

Sect. 113.
 Addit. &c.
 p. 66, 130.

As for what Dr. A. adds, " Of the Doctrine which makes the Clergy unca" pable of ALL SORT OF BUSINESS, till they are thus Licensed; and in Opposition to which, he elsewhere observes, that " If we consider All the Convo" cations since the 1st of K. James I. we shall find that None of them took out " Licenses but when they had this very Business to do; i. e. when they were to " Make Canons; He knows I am clearly of the same Opinion with himself in it. I do humbly insist upon it, that no Restraint has been laid upon the Clergy in Convocation, but only in the point of Attempting and Enacting, or to express All in one Word, of Making Canons, Constitutions, Orders, and Ordinances Provincial. In all other Matters, I account them still at Liberty, not only to Treat, but to Resolve too, as they did before. This I Affirm, and here it is that Dr. A. must Answer, if he means to oppose my Notion; that in All such Cases wherein the Clergy are Restrain'd, by the Act of Submission, from Enacting, Promulging, and Executing, without the King's License; in the same they are also Restrain'd from Attempting, that is from Treating, and Conferring, in order to Enact. What those Cases are the Statute, I think, plainly enough speaks; and from thence I have sufficiently before declar'd my Opinion of it.

Sect. 114.
 Rights &c. p.
 390.
 See above.
 Sect 42.

For what concerns Dr. A's Second Remark, of the Difference which is made in the King's Letters-Patents, by which he Confirm'd the Canons of this Convocation, between the Power which he has in this Case by vertue of his Prerogative Royal, and the Particular Powers lodged in him by the 25th H. 8; I have already given a full and express Answer to it. The Sum of it is this; That Dr. A. either grossly mistakes, or I am sure greatly misrepresents, the Design of that Statute: Which was not to Grant any Power to the King which he had not before; but to Restrain the Clergy from doing some things before which they were wont to do. The King always had, by his Prerogative Royal, a Right to Authorize the Clergy to Confer, and Conclude; and by both, to Make any Provincial Ca-

Canons and Constitutions, that were not contrary either to the Laws of God, or the Realm; or to his own Prerogative Royal. On this side therefore no New Power was Given to the Crown: But the Clergy did before do this without Asking the King's Assent, or taking his License for it. They Made Canons and Constitutions, not by his Authority, but in vertue of their Own Spiritual Jurisdiction: And this that Act has Restrain'd them from doing; so that from thenceforth they might not presume to Attempt any such thing, on pain of the Dangers mentioned in that Statute.

Whether therefore the King Licenses the Clergy to Confer, and Enact Canons; or whether he Confirms them being Enacted, and Authorizes the Clergy to Promulge, and Execute them; He do's All by his Own Royal Prerogative. The Statute only ties up the Clergy, that they shall neither Attempt, Enact, Promulge, nor Execute any Canons, without his Assent, on pain of such Forfeitures as are therein determin'd against them if they do.

His Third Observation, <sup>4</sup> That the License here Granted was not a bare License to Treat, but to Treat and Agree, I have also already Consider'd, and Answer'd. The License is Granted for All; to Treat, Confer, and Consult, as well as to Agree; and refers indifferently to the One, and to the Other. 'Tis true, the Treating which is meant by it, is such a Treating as is design'd in order to Agreeing, or Enacting: Nor is any Other, as I conceive, forbidden by the Statute of Submission. But whether the Convocation do Agree, or not, if they Confer with a Design to Constitute, the License plainly extends to such a Conference; and Authorizes them no less in their Previous Debates, than in their final Resolutions. Sect. 115. Rights &c. p. 391.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. A. was sensible that these Exceptions would signifie but little, to take off from the plain Authority of the King's Letters-Patents, and the Custom of a Hundred Years Practise, confessedly consequent upon them: And therefore he advances another Exception against the plain Tenor of these Licenses. He tells us, that in those Commissions there was more Granted than the Clergy needed; and they accepted them for the sake of what they did want them for, and not for what they did not. But how do's Dr. A. prove this? Did the Clergy ever make any Protestation of their Right in One Case, tho' not in the Other? That they had Power of Themselves, without a License, to Treat, tho' not to Enact; and therefore Accepted the King's Patent for This, but in no wise for That. Sect. 117. Rights &c. p. 394-395.

No; that Dr. A. do's not pretend to: <sup>1</sup> But he will "shew, by some parallel Instances, that in such Commissions the Powers granted do not always imply that the Persons Commissioned could not have done such or such a thing, without they had been so empower'd. And what will he infer when he has done this? The most he can conclude, is, that possibly so it may be in this Case: But I hope he will not argue at so wild a rate, as to conclude, that because in some Commissions such Powers have sometimes been Granted, as the Persons to whom they were given needed no Commission to Exercise; therefore the same is done in All Commissions; Or not Concluding thus Universally, will yet at a venture, infer, that so it is in the Commissions before us. Ib. p. 395.

However let us see how he makes good his Proposition, as little as it is to the Purpose, should it be true. <sup>2</sup> "In Queen Elizabeth's Patents to her first Bishops, a Clause was inserted, by which the Queen, by her Supreme Authority in Matters Ecclesiastical, supplied, If ANY thing were wanting which the Statutes of the Realm, or the Ecclesiastical Laws Requir'd. I do allow it; and the Statute of the 8th of that Queen, Chap. 1. abundantly shews the Reason of it. But what do's Dr. A. argue from this? Why he infers, That it cannot from hence be Collected that there were any such Defects to be supply'd: And for this he refers us to Mr. Mason's Authority. He needed not any Voucher for so Obvious an Inference. The Queen, for the better securing of her Bishops against any danger of Law, added this Clause to defend them at once both against the Fear of That, and against the Malice of their Enemies; that If ANY thing were wanting which the Laws requir'd, she supply'd it by her Royal Authority. The Patent expounds it self: It is so far from Actually Supplying, or Granting any thing, that it leaves the Matter in suspence whether there were any thing wanting that needed to be supplied. If any thing were wanting, the Queen supplied it: If there were not, there was then nothing done; because there was no need of doing any thing. Ibid.

This

sect. 118.
Rights &c. P
395, 396.

This Instance therefore is as little to the Purpose as any could well have been; let us see whether his next be any better. In K. Charles the First's Commission for the Repair of St. Paul's Cathedral, the King "Gives full Power and Authority to the Persons named in it, to Consult, Advise, and Consider of Meet Orders, Ordinances, and Constitutions, for the better Preservation of that Church, and for preventing Annoyances; and the same Orders, Ordinances, and Constitutions, being Reduced into Writing, to present unto Himself for his Royal Approbation and Allowance. The Powers here Granted (continues he) are much the same, and in much the same Words with those in the Commission to the Convocation: But no body can be silly enough to think that Private Persons might not of their own Accord have DONE ALL THIS; have entred into such Considerations, and made such Proposals to the King, without a Commission.

Let us take a farther View of the Commission, and then we shall be able the better to judge whether a Man may not, without Hazard of his Reputation, be SILLY enough (in Dr. A's modest Phrase) to think that a Power was hereby convey'd to those Commissioners to Do that, which they could not, in the same Manner, and with the same Authority, have done of their Own Accord without it. The Cathedral Church of St. Paul's London being greatly decay'd, this Pious King, following the Example of his Royal Father, and at the Encouragement of the Generous Bishop of that See, issued out a Commission to several Persons of Honour, and Others, for the Repair of it. In that he Authorized them, among other things, to take an Exact Survey of the Particular Decays of that Church, and to Calculate the Charge of it; to Advise and Agree upon the Forms of Letters-Patents for Publick Collections, to be made for it, throughout England and Wales; To make meet Orders and Constitutions for the Preservation of that Cathedral, and the suppressing and preventing of all present and future Annoyances, Purprestures, and Encroachments, which tend to the Damage or Disgrace thereof: And farther gave them full Power and Authority, to cause All, and Every Person, whom they should think good, to bring and shew before them, either upon Oath, or without Oath, all and singular such Records, Books, Evidences, Accounts, &c. as they should think fit to be produced, for the better Execution of their Commission: And also to Charge and Command all such Surveyors, Actuaries, Registers, Officers, and Ministers whatsoever, as they should think fit and requisite, to be Attendant upon them.

This was their Commission: And the Question is, Whether any Other Persons, besides those who were thus Commissioned by the King, could of their Own Accord have lawfully done what these Persons were Empower'd to Do? I freely own I am SILLY enough to think that they could not, but would have been guilty of a great Presumption in pretending to have done it; and might have been called to account by a Quo Warranto for it. For indeed let Dr. A. say, Could any Others (the Bishop, Dean, and Chapter excepted, who by the Statutes of the Church, as well as by the King's Commission, were particularly concern'd in this Case) have legally survey'd the Decays of that Cathedral, and estimated the Charges of it? Could any Private Persons, of their Own Accord, have Consider'd of, and Drawn up the Form of Letters-Patents for a Collection to be made over all England for the Repairing of it? Or, lastly, to come to Dr. A's own Instance; Could they have Made such Meet Orders, and Constitutions for the Preservation of that Cathedral, and the suppressing and preventing of all Annoyances to it, as being tendred to the King for his Approbation, should have had the Stamp of Authority set to them, without being Guilty of a very Great Crime, in meddling with a Matter which did not belong to them, nor had they any Right, or Authority by Law, to interpose in it? I do again repeat it; I must freely own my self to be One of those SILLY Men of whom Dr. A. speaks, who think that Those who should have done this without the King's Commission would have been Guilty of a High Misdemeanour, and might have been punished by Law for such their Presumption.

In these and the like Cases, we are not to consider what Men have a Natural Ability to do, but what may Lawfully and Orderly be done by Them. If Twenty or Thirty Clergy-men should meet together, and Treat of some Rules, or Orders, that might be fit to be set forth as the Queen's Injunctions; and having without any Authority Agreed upon them, should present them to Her Majesty for Confirmation, tho' the Orders should be never so wisely Drawn, yet the Method of doing it would be Irregular; and they might justly expect to be be Call'd to Account to shew by what Authority they presumed to Do this? But should the Queen think fit to Commission the same Persons, or any Others, whom she should please to intrust in such a Case, to Consider of, and Conclude upon, the like Rules, and present them to her for her Approbation; that so being Confirm'd by her Authority, they may be set forth as Her Royal Injunctions, the Procedure would be Regular; and the same thing done by such a Commission be Lawful and Warrantable, which being done without it, would be Criminal and Unjustifiable.

But of all Dr. A's Instances, that of his Court Barber is not only most light and unseemly, in so weighty a Case, but is withal the most contrary to his Pre- tences; and had not the Ridiculousness of the Subject too much possess'd his mind to leave his Judgment any Freedom of serious Consideration, he would never have made the use that he does of it. The King was offended with some of his Chaplains for wearing their Hair so long, and for taking so much Care to Curle it, as it seems they did. To Cure this Vanity in Men whose Profession should have taught them Greater Gravity, he issued out his Letters Patents to W. de Perecat, commanding him with some Severity to cut their Hair shorter, and to Snip off those Curles which they were so ridiculously fond of. I do not doubt but that, as Dr. A. very gravely Remarks, if the Court Chaplains, and the Court Barber had Agreed upon it, he might have done them this Piece of (real) Service without any License from the King to that Effect. But let Dr. A. tell us (for he is a nice Judge in these Matters) should the Barber have come to him without his Commission, and have made an Attempt upon his Locks, and Cut off one half of his Hair; would he not have taken it very much amiss of him; and have been apt to enquire by what Authority he made so bold with his Favourees? Here therefore it was that the King's Patents were necessary; to warrant this little Officer, whether his Chaplains agreed to it or no, to Cut off their Hair which gave him so much offence; to oblige him to do it, and to indemnifie him when he had done it, against any trouble that some of the Beaux's of that Order might otherwise have given him, for the Freedom he took with their Reverend Heads, in so tender a Circumstance as that might probably have been to some of them.

Sect. 119.
Rights &c. p.
396, 397.

The Consequence of these Remarks is briefly this, that it do's not yet appear that our Princes have in their Commissions ordinarily granted any Powers, which those to whom they were given might as well, as lawfully, and as fully to all intents and purposes, have exercised without any such Commission. But should this have sometimes been in some Commissions of a Private Nature, as for the Repair of a Church, or the Encouragement of a Court Officer; yet cannot Dr. A. from thence infer that it is so done in these Licenses, which must nevertheless be understood to Conferr a Legal Right to Treat, as well as to Agree, till it can be shewn by some plain and evident Proof of Law, that notwithstanding any Restraint laid upon them by the Act of Submission, the Clergy have a Right to Conferr without any Leave of the Crown, and therefore need not any Royal License or Commission to enable them so to do.

Such then was the Case of this Convocation: It had a Commission to Treat, "We Own, says Dr. A, it had. And in another Place he tells us that "It "Treated and Acted Originally by a License; the very thing which I affirm to be the Duty of all Other Convocations to Do. To pursue the History of all our following Synods is as Needless, as it would be Tedious. Dr. A. himself do's not pretend that any One Convocation, for the last hundred Years, either Attempted, or Enacted, any Canons, Constitutions, Ordinances, or Orders Provincial or Synodal, without being Authorized by the like previous License to do both: And for Other matters, I do readily allow, that they may both Conferr, and Agree, without any.

Sect. 120.
Addit. &c. p.
65. 112.

To Conclude therefore this whole Argument: * If the Natural Construction of the Statute of the 25th of H. 8. supported with the concurrent Verdict both of the Form of Submission upon which it was drawn; the Notions of those Times, concerning the Dependence of the Spiritual Jurisdiction upon the Crown; and the Scheme and Model of Church-Government which was then in hand, when that Act was passed: * If the Express Opinions of our most Learned Writers, concerning the Incapacity under which the Clergy were brought by that Statute: * If, lastly, the Practice of our Convocations consequent thereupon, which (as far as we can discover from the short Remains we have of them, and the best Accounts that have been given by our Church-Historians of their Proceedings) from thenceforth never entred upon any Debates, in order to Make any Canons or Constitutions, without the Prince's Assent first had, and declared to them, to Warrant them in their Proceedings; may suffice to shew what our LAW in this Case is; I may then adventure, with some degree of Assurance, to Conclude, That the Bishops and Clergy must not only be ASSEMBLED in Convocation by the Authority of the Queen's Writ; but being Come together there, must have Her Majesty's Assent and LICENSE before they can warrantably ENACT any Ecclesiastical Canons, or Constitutions; Or, without incurring the Penalty of the Statute in that Case, ATTEMPT to MAKE them; Or ALLEDGE, CLAIM, or PUT IN URE any Power of their Own to that Purpose.

THIS MS. is written both in Latin and Saxon, but the Saxon Paragraph is not near so large as the Latin; as may be seen in the Chron. Sax. printed at Oxford from this MS. After the Story was thus inserted into this Copy (for the Rasures and Writing shew that it was not intended to have been at first set down as it now stands, there:) the many Words put in, and again rased out, declare, that the Monks who contrived it, were not yet satisfied with their Own Forgery, but alter'd the parts of it, as it seemed requisite to serve their Designs in it.

One Use which they had to make of it, appears a little after in the same MS. fol. 48. b. Here again they scratched, or rased out, many more Lines of the Text; and instead of what had been before written, inserted this Story of the Council of Cloveshou, which follows:

Dccxlii. Her was mycel sinoth gegaderod at Cloveshou, and thar was Athelbald Myrcna Cing, and Cutbert Arcebisceop, and fela oðre wise Menn.] Hic congregatum est magnum Concilium apud Cloveshou, præsidente Adelbaldo Rege Merciorum, cum Cuthberto Archiepiscopo Cantuariensi, cæterisque Episcopis simul assidentibus diligenter examinantes circa necessaria de statu totius Religionis, & de Simbolo ex antiquis sanctorum Patrum institutionibus tradito, vel qualiter in primordio nascentis Ecclesiæ jubebatur habere, aut ubi honor Cænobiorum secundum normam equitatis servaretur. Hæc & his similia anxie inquirentes, & undique Privilegia antiqua requirentes & recitantes, tandem pervenit ad manus libertas Ecclesiarum, & Institutio vel Præceptum Wihtredi gloriosi Regis de electione Cænobiorum in Regno Cantix; quomodo vel qualiter secundum imperium & electionem Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis fieri stare præcipitur. Ex præcepto itaque Regis Adelbaldi lectum est hoc Privilegium, & hæc Libertas coram omnibus, & placuit cunctis, pariterq; condixerunt nullam aliam tam nobilem, tamque prudenter constitutam invenire potuisse secundum Ecclesiasticam disciplinam. Et hoc annuentes stare, ab omnibus firmare sanxerunt. Ego igitur Adelbaldus Rex Merciorum pro salute animæ meæ, & pro stabilitate Regni mei, necnon ex persona Ædelberhti Regis Cant. seu etiam pro reverentia Cutberhti Archiepiscopi hoc idem munifica mea propria manu subscribo; ut per omnia honor, authoritas, & securitas Christi Ecclesiæ à nulla persona denegetur; necnon omnium Cænobiorum infra Cantiam constitutis tam in libertate secularium servitiis, quamq; etiam in omnibus causis majoribus minoribusve secuta permaneat, sicut Wihtredus Rex pro se suisque constituit servandum & optinendum, ita per omnia irrefragabiliter & immutabiliter usque in finem seculi perdurare præcipimus. Si quis autem Regum successorum nostrorum, seu Episcoporum, vel Principum, hoc salubre decretum infringere temptaverit, reddet rationem Deo Omnipotenti in die tremendo. Si autem Comes, Presbyter, Diaconus, Clericus, aut Monachus, huic institutioni restiterit, sit suo gradu privatus, & à participatione Corporis & Sanguinis separatus, & alienus a Regno Dei, si ante ea satisfactione emendaverit, quod malo superbix inique gessit; quia scriptum est, Quæcunq; ligaveris super terram, erunt ligata & in cælo; & quæcunq; solveris, erunt soluta & in cælo. Ego Adelbaldus Rex divino suffragio fultus, gentis Merciorum imperium regens, signum sanctæ Crucis subscribo. Ego Cutberhtus Archiepiscopus, propria manu subscribo. Cum his etiam quatuordecim Episcopi subscripserunt, & multæ aliæ personæ diversorum ordinum.

Gravata præteritis temporibus extitit Ecclesia Anglicana, 1°. per xlm. xxxm. xxm. xvm. x<sup>m</sup>. ante tempus Guerræ Domino Regi à Clero collatam. 2°. Per Depredationes tempore Guerræ factas. 3°. Per Dominum Legatum nuper in Anglia. 4°. Intolerabiliter per decimam triennalem Domino Regi concessam tam in Capitibus quam in Membris.

Gravati sunt etiam tam Archiepiscopi, quam Episcopi, Abbates, & Priores, per hoc, quod eorum Maneria, & cætera eorum temporalia, per Laicos sunt taxata, contra formam Juris Canonici. Constat enim quod aut indebite Maneria Eorum sunt taxata per Laicos; aut indebite Decimæ ab eis sunt exactæ; quia Dominus Papa solummodo de Proventibus & Redditibus Ecclesiasticis, Domino Regi Decimam concessit, & non de Laico tenemento, ut apparet in litera concessionis Sedis Apostolicæ, in literis & aliis <sup>1</sup> ostensa: Si vero dicta Maneria inter Proventus & Redditus Ecclesiasticos debeant connumerari, tunc indebite per Laicos sunt taxata; quia Laicis disponendi de Rebus Ecclesiasticis, nulla est attributa facultas. Et alio vero modo Archiepiscopi, Episcopi, Abbates & Priores sunt gravati, quia non solummodo de fructibus Prædiorum & <sup>2</sup> Incrementis <sup>2</sup> nutrimentis Animalium, & aliis consuetis, Decimas Domino Regi dare sunt compulsi, sed etiam de suis Redditibus annuis, & Perquisitis qualitercunque in Curiis eorundem, & aliis Commoditatibus omnibus, de quibus Dominus Rex, & cæteri Magnates Angliæ Decimas Deo dare non consueverunt.

Gravati sunt Ecclesiarum Rectores & Vicarii intolerabiliter, & modo hactenus inaudito; Ecclesiæ <sup>3</sup> Enim etiam eorum quæ taxatæ fuerunt per Episcopum Norwycensem ad X. Marc. (Decima ad tunc Domino Regi pro suo Voto Crucis consimili concessa) modo sunt taxatæ ad xxvi. Marc. & sic supra & infra, secundum Qualitates & Quantitates Ecclesiarum.

Compellebantur etiam pro duobus annis similiter Decimas exsolvere; & quod auditui est horridum, cum Dominus Rex Decimam cum Gratia Sedis Apostolicæ eidem concessam humiliter & devotè, & [cum] Gratiarum Actione secundum Statuta Laterani Concilii deberet recipere, Exactores Regii Gratiam in Ingratitudinem, & in Novum genus Excoriationis convertentes; si Rectores & cæteri Viri Ecclesiastici propter paupertatem, vel alio modo, primo die solutionis pecuniam paratam non habent, dicti Exactores iv. denarios non solum de qualibet Marca quæ fuerat Domino Regi nomine Decimæ de Gratia solvendâ, sed etiam de singulis Marcis ad Rectores & Viros Ecclesiasticos pertinentibus, juxta ultimam taxationem quatuor denarios extorserunt, quod antea sub Nube Dei nunquam fuit auditum, quod aliquis pro Re sua propria pecuniam alii solvere compellaretur, aut usuram; cum unusquisque suæ Rei moderator debeat esse & Arbiter.

Gravantur etiam alio modo per Magistrum Sevitiū qui semper sedens Londoniis, non solum à locis Collegiatis per Angliam, sed etiam à Rectoribus Procuraciones nititur extorquere, quanquam eadem Procuraciones, præterquam in <sup>4</sup> Deest aliquid Casu nunquam debeantur, nisi personaliter Visitanti: Minus attendens quam deberet sc. quod numerus Procuracionum, numerum dierum nullatenus debet excedere: Quod si à Rectoribus posset Procuraciones exigere, numerus Procuracionum, numerum dierum in tantum excederet, quod importabilem Thesaurum ab Anglicis extorqueret.

Gravantur etiam per subsidium exhæredatis concessum.

Hæc omnia proponimus, ut per Onera supradicta hiis temporibus deterioris conditionis manifeste Sacerdotium videatur, quam sub Pharaone fuerat, qui Legis divinæ Notitiam non habuit. Ille quidem Omnibus Aliis servitutibus subiectis, Sacerdotes & Possessiones eorum in pristina libertate demisit, & de Publico eis Annonam ministravit. Hiis vero temporibus Regii Exactores tot Onera & Exactiones Ecclesiis & Ecclesiasticis Viris imponunt, ut eis quod Jeremias deplorat competere videatur, Princeps Provinciarum, sc. Sacrosancta Ecclesia, facta est sub Tributo hiis diebus.

Propter prædictas Exactiones & Gravamina, vix sunt aliqui qui habent, multi vero qui non habent, unde sibi et suis necessariis Personis valeant circa Vitæ necessaria subvenire: Et <sup>5</sup> Ideo inde à Nobis petito subsidio ad præsens adquiescere non possumus, nec etiam de jure debemus; <sup>6</sup> Quoniam quam licet Voluntas nostra, Patres Reverendi, & consensus Clericorum in concedendo concurrant, tamen ne libertatis Ecclesiasticæ violetur immunitas concedendi talia subsidia, Romano Pontifice prius non consulto, Jus Canonicum (ad Cujus Observationem Venerabiles Patres Domini Episcopi specialiter Vos tenemini) Vobis & Nobis adimit facultatem; in quoscunque, qui potestatem habere videntur, Viros Ecclesiasticos ad subsidia conferenda compellentes, Excommunicationis <sup>7</sup> Sententia sententiam in Laterano Concilio promulgata.

THIS MS. is written both in Latin and Saxon, but the Saxon Paragraph is not near so large as the Latin; as may be seen in the Chron. Sax. printed at Oxford from this MS. After the Story was thus inserted into this Copy (for the Rasures and Writing shew that it was not intended to have been at first set down as it now stands, there:) the many Words put in, and again rased out, declare, that the Monks who contrived it, were not yet satisfied with their Own Forgery, but alter'd the parts of it, as it seemed requisite to serve their Designs in it.

One Use which they had to make of it, appears a little after in the same MS. fol. 48. b. Here again they scratched, or rased out, many more Lines of the Text; and instead of what had been before written, inserted this Story of the Council of Cloveshou, which follows:

Dccxlii. Her was mycel sinoth gegaderod at Cloveshou, and thar was Athelbald Myrcna Cing, and Cutbert Archebiscop, and fela othre wise Menn.] Hic congregatum est magnum Concilium apud Cloveshou, præsidente Adelbaldo Rege Merciorum, cum Cuthberto Archiepiscopo Cantuariensi, cæterisque Episcopis simul assidentibus diligenter examinantes circa necessaria de statu totius Religionis, & de Simbolo ex antiquis sanctorum Patrum institutionibus tradito, vel qualiter in primordio nascentis Ecclesiæ jubebatur habere, aut ubi honor Cænobiorum secundum normam equitatis servaretur. Hæc & his similia anxie inquirentes, & undique Privilegia antiqua requirentes & recitantes, tandem pervenit ad manus libertas Ecclesiarum, & Institutio vel Præceptum Wihtredi gloriosi Regis de electione Cænobiorum in Regno Cantia; quomodo vel qualiter secundum imperium & electionem Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis fieri stare præcipitur. Ex præcepto itaque Regis Adelbaldi lectum est hoc Privilegium, & hæc Libertas coram omnibus, & placuit cunctis, pariterq; condixerunt nullam aliam tam nobilem, tamque prudenter constitutam invenire potuisse secundum Ecclesiasticam disciplinam. Et hoc annuentes stare, ab omnibus firmare sanxerunt. Ego igitur Adelbaldus Rex Merciorum pro salute animæ meæ, & pro stabilitate Regni mei, necnon ex persona Ædelberhti Regis Cant. seu etiam pro reverentia Cutberhti Archiepiscopi hoc idem munifica mea propria manu subscribo; ut per omnia honor, autoritas, & securitas Christi Ecclesiæ à nulla persona denegetur; necnon omnium Cænobiorum infra Cantiam constitutis tam in libertate secularium servitiis, quamq; etiam in omnibus causis majoribus minoribusve secunda permaneat, sicut Wihtredus Rex pro se suisque constituit servandum & optinendum, ita per omnia irrefragabiliter & immutabiliter usque in finem seculi perdurare præcipimus. Si quis autem Regum successorum nostrorum, seu Episcoporum, vel Principum, hoc salubre decretum infringere temptaverit, reddet rationem Deo Omnipotenti in die tremendo. Si autem Comes, Presbyter, Diaconus, Clericus, aut Monachus, huic institutioni resisterit, sit suo gradu privatus, & à participatione Corporis & Sanguinis separatus, & alienus a Regno Dei, si ante ea satisfactione emendaverit, quod malo superbiæ iniquè gessit; quia scriptum est, Quæcunq; ligaveris super terram, erunt ligata & in cælo; & quæcunq; solveris, erunt soluta & in cælo. Ego Adelbaldus Rex divino suffragio fultus, gentis Merciorum imperium regens, signum sanctæ Crucis subscribo. Ego Cutberhtus Archiepiscopus, propria manu subscribo. Cum his etiam quatuordecim Episcopi subscripserunt, & multæ aliæ personæ diversorum ordinum.

COram vobis, Venerandi Patres, & Episcopi Provinciæ Cantuar. Gravati sunt etiam tam Archiepiscopi, quam Episcopi, Abbates, & Priores, per hoc, quod eorum Maneria, & cætera eorum temporalia, per Laicos sunt taxata, contra formam Juris Canonici. Constat enim quod aut indebite Maneria Eorum sunt taxata per Laicos; aut indebite Decimæ ab eis sunt exactæ; quia Dominus Papa solummodo de Proventibus & Redditibus Ecclesiasticis, Domino Regi Decimam concessit, & non de Laico tenemento, ut apparet in litera concessionis Sedis Apostolicæ, in literis & aliis <sup>1</sup> offensa: Si vero dicta Maneria inter Proventus & Redditus Ecclesiasticos debeant connumerari, tunc indebite per Laicos sunt taxata; quia Laicis disponendi de Rebus Ecclesiasticis nulla est attributa facultas. Et alio vero modo Archiepiscopi, Episcopi, Abbates & Priores sunt gravati, quia non solummodo de fructibus Prædiorum & <sup>2</sup> nutrimentis Animalium, & aliis consuetis, Decimas Domino Regi dare sunt compulsi, sed etiam de suis Redditibus annuis, & Perquisitis qualitercunque in Curiis eorundem, & aliis Commoditatibus omnibus, de quibus Dominus Rex, & cæteri Magnates Angliæ Decimas Deo dare non consueverunt.

Gravati sunt Ecclesiarum Rectores & Vicarii intolerabiliter, & modo hætenus inaudito; Ecclesiæ <sup>3</sup> enim etiam eorum quæ taxatæ fuerunt per Episcopum Norwycensem ad X. Marc. (Decima ad tunc Domino Regi pro suo Voto Crucis consimili concessa) modo sunt taxatæ ad xxvi. Marc. & sic supra & infra, secundum Qualitates & Quantitates Ecclesiarum.

Compellebantur etiam pro duobus annis similiter Decimas exsolvere; & quod auditui est horridum, cum Dominus Rex Decimam cum Gratia Sedis Apostolicæ eidem concessam humiliter & devotè, & [cum] Gratiarum Actione secundum Statuta Laterani Concilii deberet recipere, Exactores Regii Gratiam in Ingratitudinem, & in Novum genus Excoriationis convertentes; si Rectores & cæteri Viri Ecclesiastici propter paupertatem, vel alio modo, primo die solutionis pecuniam paratam non habent, dicti Exactores iv. denarios non solum de qualibet Marca quæ fuerat Domino Regi nomine Decimæ de Gratia solvendâ, sed etiam de singulis Marcis ad Rectores & Viros Ecclesiasticos pertinentibus, juxta ultimam taxationem quatuor denarios extorserunt, quod antea sub Nube Dei nunquam fuit auditum, quod aliquis pro Re sua propria pecuniam alii solvere compellaretur, aut usuram; cum unusquisque suæ Rei moderator debeat esse & Arbiter.

Gravantur etiam alio modo per Magistrum Sevitiū qui semper sedens Londoniis, non solum à locis Collegiatis per Angliam, sed etiam à Rectoribus Procurationes nititur extorquere, quanquam eadem Procurationes, præterquam in <sup>4</sup> casu nunquam debeantur, nisi personaliter Visitanti: Minus attendens quam deberet sc. quod numerus Procurationum, numerum dierum nullatenus debet excedere: Quod si à Rectoribus posset Procurationes exigere, numerus Procurationum, numerum dierum in tantum excederet, quod importabilem Thesaurum ab Anglicis extorqueret.

Gravantur etiam per subsidium exhæredatis concessum.

Hæc omnia proponimus, ut per Onera supradicta hiis temporibus deterioris conditionis manifeste Sacerdotium videatur, quam sub Pharaone fuerat, qui Legis divinæ Notitiam non habuit. Ille quidem Omnibus Aliis servitutibus subiectis, Sacerdotes & Possessiones eorum in pristina libertate demisit, & de Publico eis Annonam ministravit. Hiis vero temporibus Regii Exactores tot Onera & Exactiones Ecclesiis & Ecclesiasticis Viris imponunt, ut eis quod Jeremias deplorat competere videatur, Princeps Provinciarum, sc. Sacrosancta Ecclesia, facta est sub Tributo hiis diebus.

Propter prædictas Exactiones & Gravamina, vix sunt aliqui qui habent, multi vero qui non habent, unde sibi met & suis necessariis Personis valeant circa Vitæ necessaria subvenire: Et <sup>5</sup> ideo inde à Nobis petito subsidio ad præsens adquiescere non possumus, nec etiam de jure debemus; <sup>6</sup> quoniam quam licet Voluntas nostra, Patres Reverendi, & consensus Clericorum in concedendo concurrant, tamen ne libertatis Ecclesiasticæ violetur immunitas concedendi talia subsidia, Romano Pontifice prius non consulto, Jus Canonicum (ad Cujus Observationem Venerabiles Patres Domini Episcopi specialiter Vos tenemini) Vobis & Nobis adimit facultatem; in quoscunque, qui potestatem habere videntur, Viros Ecclesiasticos ad subsidia conferenda compellentes, Excommunicationis <sup>7</sup> sententiam in Laterano Concilio promulgata.

Venerabili in Christo Fratri— Episcopo Londin.— Frater J. &c. Salutem. Quam sit decens, quamque expediens, Clerum Nobis commissum Regiis favore & Gratiâ consolari docet experientia Contrarii nuper præteriti in Ecclesiarum spoliis, & Gravaminibus prophanis, quorum recens memoria perseverat. Docet idem Evidentia periculi in januis imminentis, si, quod avertat Deus, dissimularet Majestas Regia quorundam Laicorum proterviam in Bona Ecclesiastica manum mittere; quorum audaciam Illustrissimus, Dei Gratiâ, Rex Edwardus, Clementiæ suæ Legibus contra hujusmodi editis, refrænavit. Cujus circa Nos sollicitudini si ingrati fuerimus, non solum Ipsum ad Indignationem provocabimus, verum etiam Regem Regum pro Ingratitudinis Vitio offendemus. Sacro enim testante Eloquio, Majestatem Regiam tenentur Omnes Subditi gratâ Honorificentia prævenire; Et illi præcipuè qui Regali munificentia concessis olim Ecclesiæ Christi honoribus confoventur; Cum etiam Villissimi censeantur, qui cæteris honore præcellunt, nisi insuper Eosdem transcendant in Obsequiis Charitatis, ac per Nobiles & Plebeios Regni Angliæ dicto Domino Regi fuerit in quodam Temporalium Subsidio ministratum, sub cujus Regimine Nos Omnes vivere oportet, & Gratiâ communiri, expedit non solum per Orationum Suffragia dictum Dominum ad Protectionis jocundæ Beneficia excitare, verum etiam corporalibus impendiis & muneribus ejus sumptus immensos, quantum poterimus, relevare. Cujus liberalitatis Exemplum Archiepiscopos & Episcopos Angliæ recolitis cæteris in Clero Minoribus præstitisse: Et certè satis est Canonicum, Ecclesias dotatas Patronibus indigentibus subvenire. Quapropter vestram imploramus, & exhortamur in Domino Charitatem, in meritum Obedientiæ firmiter injungendo, quatenus Convocato quàm citius fieri poterit, per Vos, aut Vestros, Clero vestræ Diœceseos, eidem studeatis ad Dei Honorem, & Pacem Ecclesiæ, suadere, ut dicto Regi, hoc pro Gratitude indicio postulanti, studeant elapso tempore Decimæ sic affluenter pro viribus subvenire, ut ipse de devotione Clericali merito gaudeat, & ad Ipsos excitetur favorabilis in posterum gubernandos: Caventes insuper, ne Obsequii exilitas Indignationem magis provocet, quàm excitet Clementiæ lenitatem. Hujus autem servitii vel subsidii Quantitatem per Vos, aut Procuratores vestros, vel certe per Procuratores ipsos ad hoc, si expedire videritis, destinandos, Nobis intimare studeant in Congregatione nostrâ Londin. in Octav. Et quia modus iste in Congregatione istâ prævisus extitit prox. præteritâ, de Consilio Episcoporum ibidem præsentium, & Procuratorum Episcoporum absentium, Mandamus Vobis quatenus hanc deliberationem Paci Ecclesiæ, ut præfagimus non fallaciter, per-necessariam, studeatis cæteris Coepiscopis nostris cum celeritate debitâ punitiare. Quæ quidem Libertates sic concessæ vel permissæ ipsis Regibus Regnorum suorum Gubernationem ac Defensionem auferre non possunt; nec ea quæ dictæ Gubernationi & Defensioni necessaria seu expedientia, deliberato Bonorum ac Prudentium Consilio judicantur, dicente Domino Pontificibus Templi, Reddite ergo quæ sunt Cesaris, Cesari; & quæ sunt Dei, Deo. Et quia turpis est pars quæ suo non congruit Universo, & Membrum inutile, & quasi Paralyticum, quod Copori suo [B.] subsidium ferre recusat, quicumque sive Clerici, sive Laici, sive Nobiles, sive Ignobiles, qui Capiti suo vel Corpori, hoc est, Domino Regi & Regno, imò etiam sibimet Auxilium ferre recusant, semetipsos Partes incongruas, & Membra inutilia, & quasi Paralytica esse demonstrant: Unde si à talibus pro rata sua subventionum auxilia requiruntur, non Exactiones, vel Extorsiones, vel Gravamina dici debent; sed potius Capiti, & Corpori, & Membris, debita Subsidia; sed & pro Defensoribus & Pugilibus ipsorum quibus non licet, vel qui non possunt pugnare per seipsos, stipendia preparata. pendiis militare : Et quòd, si inimicorum rabies invalesceret contra Regnum, constet quòd Bona Clericorum penitus dissiparentur ; quare, multò plus aliis indigent ab hostili impugnatione defendi : Ideoque in Naturalis Juris injuriam esse videtur prohibere cuicunque Servo vel Libero, Clerico vel Laico, Nobili vel Ignobili, Clypeum defensionis objicere contra hostilem Gladium, aut stipendiaolvere Defensori. Nonne meritò Deus tales tradidit in reprobum sensum, qui Jus Naturale & Antiquum nituntur subvertere pro suæ libito Voluntatis ? Et quis sapiens & intelligens hæc non incidit in vehementem stuporem, audiens Vicarium Jesu Christi prohibentem Tributum dare Cæsari, & sub Anathemate fulminantem, ne Clerici contra iniquæ & injustæ Persecutionis Incursus, Domino Regi & Regno, imò sibi met ipsis pro Rata sua manum porrigant adjutricem ? Dare verò Histrionibus, & Amicis carnalibus, & neglectis pauperibus, expensas facere superfluas in Robis, Equitativis, Comitativis, Comestationibus, & aliis Pompis sæcularibus permittitur eisdem, imò conceditur, ad perniciosæ imitationis Exemplum. Hoc enim Natura & Ratio, Jus divinum & humanum, pariter detestantur, ad illicita fræna laxare, & licita imò necessaria cohibere. Quis enim sanæ mentis judicaret licitum & honestum, si Anathemate cohibere, ne Clerici, ex devotione Principum incrassati, impinguati, & dilatati, pro modulo suo eisdem Principibus assistant, contra ingresses injustarum Persecutionum adversitates, quocunque colore excogitate, doni, vel mutui, vel subventionis, pro seipsis, pro Rege, & Regno, pugnantibus, & resistentibus Inimicis vi armorum, alimenta præbendo, vel stipendia persolvendo ? Non enim prudenter attendunt, qui talia prohibent vel renuunt, quòd hoc nihil aliud est quam Inimicos juvare, & crimen læsæ Majestatis incurrere, & quasi velle prodere ipsum Reipublicæ Defensorem : Ad quod Crimen puniendum intendimus plus solito, volente Deo, Oculos aperire. Deum siquidem fide & devotione colimus, & Ecclesiam Catholicam, ac Ministros ejus, multipliciter veneramur in terris, sicut & omnes Patres nostri ; sed Hominum minas, minus rationabiles & injustas, minimè reformidamus.

W Thomas permissione divina, &c. Venerando Fratri Nostro Domino Ricardo, Dei gratia London Episcopo, Salutem & Fraternalam in Domino Charitatem. Vox in Excelso audita est lamentationis, fletus, & luctus Rachel, i. e. Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ plorantis filios suos Christiani nominis Athletas; sed lacrymæ suæ diuturnæ fletu siccantur in maxillis, quia non est qui consoletur eam ex omnibus Charis Ejus: Luget namque mortem millium dum unicæ Columbæ Dei militantis Ecclesiæ secundum caput monstruose appositum, membra quæq; alteræ parti adhærentia, etsi in se salva, aspersione sanguinis monstruosa, bona & utilia tanquam infructuosa suspendet, tanquam mala abscindit & putrida, ac tanquam maledicta Excommunicationis Censura percellit; interdicit Regna sibi adversantia; Ecclesiarum suspendit Organa; Reges & Prælatos discernit, Primates Officio, Clerum, populum, & vulgus Excommunicationis mucrone condemnat; Sic ut vix sciat Ovis Erronea ubi veri Pastoris caulas inveniet. Cujus quæso musica, his solide ponderatis, non vertetur in Luctum? Sed væ! væ! proch-proch dolor ! lacrymæ viduæ ascendunt in Excelsum, sed Dominus Exauditor non delectatur in illis. Quæsit Ecclesia cum lacrymis pœnitentiæ locum, sed jam per xxx annos & ultra clamans, non invenit eum, schismate perdurato, spesque pulcherrima de & super unione Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ per Dominum nostrum Papam & suos Cardinales in sua Creatione promissa, juramentisque, ac votis Eorundem firmata, jam redit ad frustra, posteriorque pestis supervenit priori deterior. Nam etsi omnes aquæ (Dominus scilicet noster Papa & Cardinales) congregatæ sint in locum unum, Civitatem Lucan. Terra tamen apparet arida, eo quod os putei aquas recipientis Lapide grandi, utinam non vanæ gloriæ cupidine, stat obstrusum ; nec supervenit Jacob, aut alius quisquam cœlesti dono imbutus, qui lapidem amoveat ab ore putei, ut fluminis impetus lætificet Civitatem Dei. Scribunt namque Cardinales Domino nostro Regi ac nobis & cæteris Confratribus nostris Suffraganeis, quod Dominus noster Papa contra formam in voto, juramento, ac diversis tractatibus expressam, & ipsis Cardinalibus inconsultis, quin verius expresse reclamantibus, novos creavit Cardinales, ipsisque antiquis Cardinalibus mandata & injunctiones tam importabilia indixit, ut ipsi omnes & singuli ab eisdem mandatis & injunctionibus ab ipsoque Papa irrationabiliter & secundum non rectam informationem decernente, ad ipsumet secundum rectam rationem, & melius informatum, decreturum ; Item ab ipso Papa Vicario Christi in terris, ad Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum, qui judicaturus est vivos & mortuos, & Seculum per ignem ; Item ad Generale Concilium, a quo, & in quo solent gesta summorum Pontificum quæcunque judicari possint, decerni & judicari ; Item ad Papam & Pontificem futurum, cuius est gesta inordinata sui prædecessoris in melius reformare, appellarunt, ac metu majoris mali quidam Eorum pedestres & rebus omnibus spoliati, quidam vero Equestres, Novem videlicet in numero, de Civitate Lucana, & a Præsentia Domini nostri Papæ usque in Civitatem Pisanam recesserunt, de unitate Ecclesiæ, nisi aut divinitus, aut sagacitate humana, gratiosius provideatur, diffisi. Supplicant igitur iidem Cardinales, Collegium videlicet antiquum, tam Domino nostro Regi, quam Nobis & Suffraganeis nostris, de bona assistentia in facto unionis, quia ipsi, Collegium Cardinalium, ad hoc effectualiter laborarunt juxta vires : Dominusque noster Rex per nos aditus & consultus tanquam Christianissimus Pugil & Athleta Ecclesiæ, suum ad hoc auxilium, consilium, & favorem, in omnibus pollicetur, in omnibus animo satis prompto, & ultra quam dicendum est ad præsens præparato. recedens vix in Natura aliquid reperiatur esse perfectum, quod & apes unum de

Christianissimo Principi, Catholicæque Fidei strenuissimo defensori, Henrico, divina magnificentia Regi Angliæ ac Franciæ, ac Domino Hiberniæ, &c. sui devotissimi Oratores Regiæ Majestatis literis ad subscriptum negotium nuper Oxoniæ convocati, subjectionem debitam, & suo temporali Regimine regni cœlestis solium fæliciter promereri. Rex Regum, & Dominus Dominantium, de excelso Cœlorum Throno prospiciens Almæ matris Ecclesiæ tunicam inconsutilem vesanis Hæreticorum latratu & morsibus lacerari: ut plane conspiciamus, sublimavit cornu Christi sui, & dedit imperium Regi suo: Dum Vestram, Serenissime Princeps, inclitam dignitatem in regalis eminentiæ solium sublimavit. Exsurrexit enim Deus, ut inimici ejus funditus dissipentur, dum orbi terrarum illuxit fælicissimus dies ille, quo perhennis Triumphator Imperii Regiæ Majestatis Gladium, velut redivivo nobili Machabæo vestræ celsitudini cœlitus condonavit; in quo, nedum sui populi, sed & summi sui muniminis adversarios dejici cœlesti favore concessit. Quot putamus hunc diem infæliciter prævenissent strages Principum, quot neces Nobilium, quot cum Deo regnantium Regum & Patrum Basilicæ dirutæ, quot Civitates everse; nisi nuper aspirante paracletovestra fortitudo, Sattelitum Antichristi proditoriam malitiam Christianissima victoria castigasset? Fecit enim magna in nobis qui potens est, ut auris audiens tanti beatificet celebritatem tituli triumphalis. Quod enim in oriente piissimi, & divinitus sublimati Constantinus, Marcianus, & Theodosius imperantes, hoc in occidenti pari victoria triumphans de complicibus Antichristi, ne totus vergetur occidens in occasum, vestra, gratiosissime Prin-

Articuli concernentes reformationem Universalis Ecclesiæ.

Articulus primus de Jure Pape.

Quamvis de pleno jure sanctissimi in Christo Patris & Domini nostri, Domini Joannis Papæ xxiii, non sit ullatenus diffidendum, sua tamen Cessio libera & ultronea, nec non cæterorum contententium de Papatu, foret opus alti meriti & mercedis, si per eam verisimiliter tanquam membra in uno vero capite possent cuncti Christicolæ || . . . . . unde pium videtur dictum Dominum nostrum & cæteros contententes ad hoc inducere mediis allectivis.

|| Uniri.

Secundus de Assumptione Cardinalium.

Quia in primitiva Ecclesia varias Synodos celebrari legimus, unam de substitutione Mathiæ, aliam de Electione vii Diaconorum, valde videtur consonum, summum Pontificem non debere quenquam in Cardinalem assumere nisi de majoris partis suorum Fratrum consilio & assensu: nec alio modo procedere ad provisionem Episcopatum juxta stylum, quo utitur, ita scribens, de consilio Fratrum nostrorum, &c.

Tertius de restitutione Patrimonii Crucifixi.

Vineam hæreditariam Sancti Naboth noluit Deus impune transferri, quanto magis nec Patrimonium Crucifixi, scriptum quippe est, Reddite quæ sunt Cæsaris Cæsari, & quæ sunt Dei Deo. Tributum Cæsaris, inquit Ambrosius, non negetur, & quod Ecclesiæ Dei est Cæsari, utique non debetur, quia jus Cæsaris esse non potest Templum Dei. A majori ergo ut credimus temporalibus Viris tradenda non est Christi hæreditas possidenda: Placeat igitur, ut in manus virorum, seu Dominorum temporalium Prioratus Alienigenarum non tradatur cum Ecclesiis Domino consecratis.

Quartus de promotione Universitatis.

Quia Studii Generalis Universitas diversis regnis statui & nutriri debuit, ut ipsorum Lampas illuminans, purgans, & proficiens, terras & patrias adjacentes illuminans per doctrinam difficilium dubiorum, purgans a tenebris hæresium & errorum, proficiens exemplis virtutum & morum. Ne igitur deficiente oleo lampadis lux & lumen simul deficiant, placeat virtuosus studentibus providere.

Quintus

Quia Sedes Apostolica antiquitus dicebatur . . . sancta, quod sanctum recepit, vel sanctum efficit, aut cito dejicit: Cujus tamen contrarium, quadam arte Magica jam molitur . . . . . conturbatorum Symon Magus hæresim ab eo dictam Symoniacam, tam Apostolica, quam Sanctorum Patrum antiquitas omnium hæresium errorumque Charibdin de Ecclesiæ finibus affugare satagit, placeat igitur ad Extirpationem hujus Hæreseos effectualiter laborare.

Sextus de Indulgentiis.

Sicut alias Angelorum Manna cibum dulcissimum Israeliticus populus quodam Consilio indemnitate fastidio in nauseam & horrorem vertebat, sic hodie indulgentiarum papalium tam larga, tam prodiga, & tam frequens concessio a plerisque venalis creditur, sicque populo quasi contemptibilis jam vilescit: quosdam vero procliviores efficit ad peccandum, & ad opera poenitentiae tardiores: Et ideo videtur expediens ordinare remedium in præmissis.

Septimus de creatione & translatione Episcoporum.

Quia nimium excessiva feoda, quæ in Episcoporum creationibus & translationibus eorundem Sedes precepit Apostolica, nec non primorum fructuum reservationes nullo juris scripto fulcitæ cedunt in nimis grave scandalum dictæ sedis, totiusque Ecclesiæ Christianæ, Quam electiones & translationes hujusmodi sunt dissimiles, & minus dissonæ prioribus in tempore Apostolorum, & longe post tempora eorundem! Placeat ordinare remedium in præmissis, ut domi dormiat avaritia, & ab Ecclesia sponsa Christi exulet Symonia, qua plures Ecclesiastici his diebus flebiliter polluantur.

Quia etiam ex mirabili gravitate excessum feodaliū, quos pro literis super indulgentiis, absolutionibus, gratiis, provisionibus & similibus percipiunt Officarii dictæ sedis, datur occasio inferioribus Prælati, Clericis & Laicis similia faciendi: sicque omnia judicantur venalia, & de Symoniaca pravitate suspecta, placeat ergo fælix remedium invenire & ut hujusmodi feoda rationabiliter restringantur.

Marcus Evangelicus, & B. Antonius, ut Episcopatu & Sacerdotio reputarentur indigni, suos pollicem & auriculam ressecabant antiquitus: Quibus aliqui jam succedunt tempore non virtute, moribus & scientia; sacris indigni; qui ad præfata omnia impudenter se ingerunt, & admissi cæci cæcos ducunt; & ambo in foveam simul cadunt, sicque laqueus ruinæ populi sacerdotes mali, & ideo videtur expediens pro communi utilitate Ecclesiæ, his malorum vitiis viriliter obviare.

Est & malum sequens ex priore pessimum inter alia, quæ videntur sub sole, quod Pontifices, & cæteri in dignitate positi, contra consilium circumscripti; idcirco tales sibi provident ac constituunt ministros & Judices super plebem, ante quorum oculos non est Dei timor, in quibus non est veritas, sed cupiditas radix omnium vitiorum; imo quamvis lex bona sit si quis ea legitime utatur; talium tamen ministrorum laquei & abusus illegitimi penes totum a lege Domini illegitimant Christianissimum: Placeat ergo remedium invenire.

Unde-

A. D. 1414.

Undecimus de commendis Episcoporum.

Quia contra consilium Elisei Prophetæ relictis vacuis vasa plena inutiliter super-impleri videntur, dum Episcopis conceduntur Beneficia alia in Commendam, quod tamen universalis Ecclesiæ non videntur cedere ad emendam, placeat hunc morbum curare congrua medicina, &c.

Duodecimus de carnalitate Prælatorum.

Quia cæca carnalitas Syon edificat in sanguinibus, & commutat Jerusalem in pomorum custodiam; dum suos consanguineos aut nepotulos & imberbes comatulos ad animarum curam assumere non verentur; Placeat ergo tales excessus restringere in futurum.

Quia a Propheta ad Sacerdotem omnes student avaritiæ, protendentes laqueos in capturam pecuniæ, in tantum, quod plerique Prælati quosdam sibi familiares promovent, ut de eorum beneficiis terram sibi detorqueant, & eorum beneficia pro minori ætate in manibus suis detineant. Placeat, &c.

Quartus Decimus de Religiosis Beneficiatis.

Quia præcordia fatuorum, sicut rota curri, & quasi axis versatilis cogitatus eorum, qui in Scandalum & Jacturam totius Religionis mittentes manum ad aratrum, & obliquo oculo respicientes retro pingues impetrant personatus. Placeat, &c.

Cum cedat ad subversionem & scandalum antiqui regiminis Ecclesiæ, . . . . juvenes tanquam armis insolentes, qui nec horas dicunt canonicas, nec habitu vel tonsura distinguunt. a Laicis Præbendas in Ecclesia occupant & Capellas; igitur ne deteriora contingant, deponant Prælati desidiam, & legis Edictum aspere exerceant contra tales, &c.

Sextus Decimus de Pastoribus revocandis ad curam.

Quia conqueritur Scriptura de Pastoribus pascentibus semetipsos; quales moribus se ostendunt, qui ut mercenarii a curis effugiunt, ut Lupi tamen rapaces gregem dilaniant, nec voces, sed vellera gregis agnoscunt. Diligentia studeat prælatorum tales specialiter ad sua beneficia revocare curatos, qui extra suam curam voluptatibus & marsupiis vacant implendis in Civitatibus in Dominorum Curiis & Officiis solliciti in compotis & coquinis. Ac pro cæteris placeat ordinare, qui in Cathedralibus, Universitate, & aliis Officiis occupari videntur honeste, ut limitandis temporibus sub pœna taxanda dispensatio non excuset, quin suas curas teneantur interim visitare.

Cum pauci valde curam unicam aut proprias animas vix sufficiant gubernare, ut post tubam sciatur novissimam mira doctis censetur præsumptio, quod his diebus tot inscii plus anhelantes rei mundanæ, cupidi, quam animarum saluti, tot sibi Beneficia audeant cumulare: quod sine causa purgandi non constat esse prohibitum a Canonicis institutis. Cui quidem præsumptuoso periculo vicinam esse sensimus præfatis a quam pluribus congeriem pinguum præbendarum. Tantæ igitur cupiditatis voragini apponat discretio moderamen.

Cum in quibusdam Cathedralibus, Collegiatisve Ecclesiis hujus regni tam grandia sunt statuta, ut quasi insanis Jeroboam illa ponantur venalia, quæ a benefactoribus fuerant gratis data; sicque pauperiores Canonici, si ad honorem Ecclesiæ & cultum divinum ampliandum personaliter residere voluerint, propter nimiam tamen exactionem pecuniarum, expensarum & sumptuum, quas dicta statuta requirunt effectualiter in dictis Ecclesiis residere non possunt. Unde fit quod pauci || . . . . . quarundam Ecclesiarum omnes possessiones & proventus earundem contra justam conscientiam nimis applicant sibi ipsis; sicque de multis personis idoneis Ecclesiæ sacro-sanctæ subtrahitur, & divinis obsequiis & fundatoribus multipliciter derogatur. Ipsis conveniens appareat nimis remedium, si sine talibus sumptibus & pomposis conviviiis Canonici ad deservendum altari participandi æque cum Residentibus in una saltem Ecclesia libere forent admissi. || f. flagitii.

Quia sub ficta veritatis imagine fraus vera coram Deo, uti credimus, proprium decipiens inventorem sub colore justitiæ glebas cum jure patronatus ultra omnes metas justii pretii sub spe beneficii in proximo vacaturi non sine intentione corrupta mercatur communiter his diebus; & quia expressius conscientiæ || corruptela ostendit viri religiosi perpetuo Dominis temporalibus suas alienant possessiones, hoc pacto præhabito, ut de proprio vel propriando beneficio sint securi; alii per alias . . . . . cas & Symoniæ cautelas inferni voragine se immergunt per medias mercandi personas & alia commercia fraudulenta. Ac si cuncta videntem Cautelarum velamine vitarentur cæcarum Compellantur igitur si placeat sine more dispendio tales Symoniaci sic adepta beneficia resignare, quia ab illo intoxicationis veneno aliter mundari non possunt, & provideatur artius de futuro pro Symoniacis celerius castigandis, ne promereantur vindictam Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ. || f. Corruptelam.

Quia ab ortu . . . . . Schismatis pestilentis per Suggestiones varias subdolas & Sinistras facta est multiplex Ecclesiarum appropriatio, & presertim mensis Episcopalibus ac etiam Monasteriis in bonis temporalibus sufficienter dotatis. Unde gravis suboritur parochianorum desolatio pauperum subducitur hospitalis recreatio, & quod his deterius est cura negligitur animarum, placeat igitur habita requisitione Debita Appropriationes hujusmodi revocare, & pro futuris provide obviare.

Quia plures nimis appropriantur Ecclesiæ, in quibus perpetui non subsistantur Vicarii, sed Sacerdotes ad nutum remotivi, qui cum vix annuales habeant minus curant. Ac ubi instituti sunt Vicarii assignatur eis portio tam exilis, quod se ipsos congrue sustentare nequeunt, neque suos recreare pauperes parochianos, ut tenentur. Placeat, &c.

Vicesimus Secundus de Exemptionibus Religiosorum.

Quia Viri Religiosi Exemptionum privilegia impetrantes, quod nullos de Gloriosa Christi familia fecisse legimus in Scripturis; delinquent enim frequenter tanto audacius quanto a jugo correctionis ordinariæ longius retraxere cervices; plurimum videtur expediens quod exceptiones hujusmodi cum discretione semper provida revocentur; eo quod inter religiosos exemptos Brigæ oriuntur detestabiles; quibus horribiliter scandalizantur, favor minuitur, ac possessiones ac prædia eis collata, unde Deo deserviant, in litibus consumuntur: prout in ordine Cisterciensi & Cluniacensi per Angliam satis patet.

A. D. 1414.

Vicesimus Tertius de punitione exemptorum.

Quia Religiosi exempti suadente Diabolo, frequenter carnalibus vitiis polluntur nec puniuntur a Prælatiis propriis, sed peccata continuant impunita. Videtur expediens statuere, ut locorum Ordinarii ad puniendos & reformandos omnes religiosos plenam habeant potestatem, & presertim pro crimine fornicationis, quod committitur extra Claustrum, &c.

Vicesimus Quartus de Excessibus Ordinariorum.

Episcopi quidam his diebus & eorum Archidiaconi recipiunt feoda excessiva pro institutionibus, permutationibus, confirmationibus Electionum, installationibus Prælatorum, & literis Ordinum & pro testamentorum probationibus summas recipiunt excessivas; acquietando finaliter executores illorum finale compoto non audito: jure tamen scripto in oppositum acclamante. Ideo videtur expediens ut ubi sunt feoda de jure solvenda limitentur ad certum. Dum tamen pro literis ordinum, institutionum, installationum, & presentationum nihil solvat penitus in futurum.

Quamvis cunctæ Visitationes juridice ad correctionem criminum ordinentur, & non propter pecunias congregandas; quidam tamen Ordinarii his diebus non solum ut defectus corrigant, sed ut colligant, suas Visitationes exercent: || dele. || contra intentionem juris scripti equitantes cum familia nimis magna, quod & illorum subditos gravat, & monet aliquos exemptionum privilegia impetrare. Et quidam Archidiaconorum recipiunt procuraciones a Clero ut visitationes omittant, quas ex Officio exercerent. Videtur ergo expediens in præmissis de remedio providere, &c.

Quoniam Abbates & Priores dignitatem Pontificii non attingunt, sed statum obtinent inferiorem, patens illorum præsumptio demonstratur, dum prece suorum ordinum bullas adquirunt ut possint uti mitra atque sandaliis cæterisque insigniis Episcoporum. Et ideo, ut unusquisque ea vocatione maneat, qua vocatus est, & alienentur a Religiosis hujusmodi signa superbia, videtur congruum atque expediens statuere in generali Concilio quod non liceat Religiosis utendo Episcoporum insigniis transgredi statum suum, sed ut cum devoto Vicario Eusebio & Benedicto, suisque Sociis Sanctis Patribus, de his que pertinent statui suo humiliter sint contenti; Tales || . . . . . mitrati, ut ait Bernardus, si eis nomen conferre privilegiorum posset || . . . . . multo auro redimerent, ut possent pontifices appellari.

Plerumque proclamatur a pluribus, quod si Pagani & || fideles suæ gentilitatis errore deposito, [* &] sacri Baptismatis fonte voluerint expurgari, bona illorum temporalia Ecclesiæ confiscantur, quod multos Judæorum, ut creditur, trahit a baptismo. Pium igitur esset & meritorium toti Concilio ordinare remedium in præmissis. Cum enim Philippus baptizavit Eunuchum, Currum suum ab eo non abstulit neque bona, quæ secum attulit ad baptizandum.

* dele.Vicesimus Octavus de Juramentis Extortis.

Quia non videtur consonum quempiam juramento constringi ne in causa justa || f. debeat. || . . . . . sui juris remedia postulare. Cumque Patroni varii pauperes promovendo Vicarios de non prosequenda augmentatione suæ portionis quantumlibet rationabiliter assignatæ juramentum ab eis exigunt & extorquent. Videtur expediens juramenti hujusmodi obviare, ac etiam remedium ordinare, ne Vicarii vel

vel Rectores ad solvendas pensiones ignotas juramentis similibus astringantur. A. D. 1414.

Vicesimus Nonus de Extraneis Beneficiatis.

Cum juxta Salvatoris sententiam singuli curam habentes animarum teneantur pascere gregem Christi pabulo doctrinæ Salvatoris, & Lupos effugare ab ovibus suis suæ prædicationis latratu: Quidam tamen || . . . . . promoventur in Regno Angliæ ipsius Regni idioma penitus ignorantes quique ad informandum subditos indisponuntur ut muti. Ideo videtur expediens ordinare, ut nullus ad beneficia Ecclesiastica promoveatur in aliquo regno, nisi idioma vulgare ejusdem Patriæ sufficienter intelligat, & . . . loquatur. || f. Extranei.

Quia nimium importunis literis Dominorum & precibus, quæ plerisque patronis sunt species violenta jubendi ad Beneficia Ecclesiæ plurimum promoventur indigni & quod magis detestabile & Deo displicens est quam plurimi temporales Patroni maledicto quodam commercio præsentationes Ecclesiarum, ac etiam licentias permutandi vendunt damnabiliter pacto publico vel fraudulentis cautelis. Vivax igitur istis vitiis remedium apponatur, &c.

Tricesimus Primus de Prærogativis Ecclesiarum Cantuariensis & Eboracensis.

Quoniam Prærogativa Ecclesiarum Cantuariensis & Eboracensis, quæ nunquam || determinatur in jure inferiores Episcopos, aliosque Ordinarios atque subditos visitando plurimum inquietavit. Ex qua eoque plena determinatione non agnoscitur, multa juri dissona consequuntur, & potestas ordinariis attributa ab executione debita impeditur & sæpius || . . . . . Utile, igitur videtur & expediens toti Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, quatenus ad quos & quot casus talis prærogativa extendi debeat, in generali consilio declaretur. || f. Determinantur. || f. Enervatur.

Cum nulla juris sanctio ad humani ingenii varietatem sufficiat, nec ad decisionem lucidam suæ nodosæ ambiguitatis attingat; quare vix aliquid adeo certum statuitur, || quoniam ex causis emergentibus revocari possit in dubium. Quia igitur inter Sæculares curatos & religiosos mendicantes gravis & continua est altercatio, utrum per statutum Domini Clementis Capitulo Dudum, vel Domini Johannis Cap. Vas Electionis, aut aliquid simile derogatum sit in toto vel in parte illi antiquo statuto concilii Generalis omnis utriusque sexus. Placeat ergo Prælati Ecclesiæ ambiguitatem tollere in præmissis. || f. Quod non.

Quia notabilitas gravioris culpæ videtur invita subtractio alieni parvuli vel infantis, quam equi vel bovis. Cumque Religiosi mendicantes, plerosque parvulos absque consensu suorum parentum claustris vel domibus intrando furripiant. Fiat ordinatio in Generali concilio, qua ætate hujusmodi juvenes debeant tam stricti Ordinis assumere habitum & tonsuram.

Tricesimus Quartus de Confessionibus.

Quoniam frequenter in vilibus & horrendis peccatis parochiani plurimi nobiles & ignobiles utriusque sexus nimio pudore ligati Curato proprio confiteri renuunt, eis datur absolutio talis qualis a Fratре incio & ignaro, expedit Prælati Ecclesiæ remedium apponere in præmissis.

Trice-

A. D. 1414.

Tricesimus Quintus de Prædicationibus eorundem.

Quia Verbum Domini ut venale contemnitur, dum plerique mendicantium sine mora & medio post Sermonem mendicant. Igitur ut vitetur Scandalum expedire videtur, ut a mendicatione in Ecclesiis Fratres abstineant in futuro.

Tricesimus Sextus de indigne Ordinatis.

Quia Regularium quorumcunque, sicut & Secularium turba multa insolens & indocta ad sacros ordines indies convolare non cessat. Placeat ordinare quod eorum singuli cujuscunque Religionis aut Conditionis extiterint a Ministris Episcopi ordinantis in receptione Ordinum, & præsertim Subdiaconi, strictam examinationem subeant in futurum.

Tricesimus Septimus de Ordinatis in Roma.

¶ f. Quos ad. Quia quosdam illad Ordinis Sacerdotalis fastigium Ecclesia Anglicana non admittit, sed tanquam inhabiles & indignos repulit Romana sæpe Curia, quantumlibet inscios & ignaros quasi idoneos ordinatos remittere consuevit. Fiat supplicatio summo Pontifici quatenus providere dignetur de remedio, ne tales illiterati simplices & ignari amodo in scandalum curiæ & totius Ecclesiæ ad sacros ordines promoveantur.

Tricesimus Octavus de Sacerdotibus Fornicariis.

Quia carnalis vita & lubrica Sacerdotum universam hodie scandalizans Ecclesiam & eorum publica fornicatio penitus impunita, nisi forte levi & latente pœna pecuniaria, perniciosis cæteris trahitur in Exemplum; Sanctum igitur videtur ad expurgationem Ecclesiæ, quod Sacerdos cujuscunque ordinis extiterit, si publicus fornicator, existat a Celebratione missarum abstinere per tempus limitatum in jure & pœnas in publico subeat corporales.

Tricesimus Nonus contra Falsas Prædicationes Quæstorum.

¶ f. deleantur. Quia inverecondi Quæstores turpissimos suos quæstus ad firmam sumunt cum Symone, indulgentias vendunt cum Gyese, & adquisita consumunt cum filio prodigo inhoneste, sed quod magis est detestabile, cum non sint sacris ordinibus constituti publice prædicant ac false prætendunt, quod absolvendi a pœna & a culpa tam superstites quam defunctos plenam habeant potestatem, cum aliis blasphemis quibus populum spoliant ac seducunt, & verisimiliter ad tartara secum trahunt, præstantes spem frivolam & audaciam ad Peccandum. Abusus igitur hujusmodi sectæ pestiferi ab Ecclesiæ Limitibus ¶ deleatur.

Quia dispensatio consueta plerisque realibus, sed suppressis Apostatis, ut nominales fiant Capellani honoris, notabilis est dispensatio Religionum; cederet ut videtur ad religionis commodum & honorem, si levis suggestio non moneret summum Pontificem cum Religiosis hujusmodi de cætero dispensari.

Quadragesimus Primus de Violatione Festivalium Dierum.

Cum, ut legitur in Scriptura, tam violatio Sabbati, quam inhonoratio templi ab ipso Domino graviter sint punitæ. Erat autem vir quidam lapidatus ad mortem, quia ligna collegit in Sabbato, & Christus dejecit præcipitanter vendentes & ementes in Templo. Sanctum opus esset Principibus & Prælatibus Ecclesiæ per statuta pœnalia & censuras Ecclesiasticas refrænare hujusmodi mala, quæ jam abundant in plebe, publicum forum & nundinas diebus Dominicis & Festis exercente etiam plus solito & in locis sacratis. Per hæc autem mala vehementer menter Deus offenditur, devotio contemplationis subtrahitur, & fides etiam A. D. 1414. Christiana non modicum vulneratur.

Quadragesimus Secundus de Reformatione Hospitalium.

Quia ad pauperum & debilium sustentationem fundantur hospitalia & dotantur, quibus ejectis Magistri hospitalium & custodes eorum bona convertunt in usus proprios & consumunt, & id malum accidit in non paucis Abbatibus, Prioratibus, & Ecclesiis Collegiatis, quibus multæ possessiones & prædia conferuntur, ut ex eis omni anno certa portio distribuatur pauperibus & egenis, in hoc casu causam . . . defendere, ut tenentur.

Quadragesimus Tertius de Extirpatione Hæreticorum.

Quia Christianæ Religionis fides solida radix est & basis, pro salute Ecclesiæ fiat juris executio de Episcopis, quorum si quis super expurgando de sua Diocesi hæreticæ pravitatis fermento negligens fuerit aut remissus, cum idem certis indiciis apparuit mox ab Episcopali Officio deponatur.

Quia maxima laus est Christiani Principis Christi Ecclesiam defendere ab infastis; Placeat Majestati Regiæ, quatenus sui Officarii publicis deputandi Officiis, Vicecomites scilicet, Majores, Ballivi, &c. quocunque nomine censeantur in suorum officiorum receptione juramentis specialibus astringantur, ut capiendo, tenendo, & puniendo hæreticos seu Lollardos Episcopis pro viribus favent & assistant.

Quia diversorum librorum & tractatum inepta translatio simplices idiotas doctrinis variis & peregrinis abducit, placeat Regiæ Majestati statuere, quod libri & tractatus novelli ab ortu Schismatis Anglicani confiscari valeant & eorum possessionibus subtrahi, donec per sciolos non suspectos ipsorum in linguam maternam translatio comprobetur.

Quadragesimus Quintus de nimio apparatu Clericorum.

Quia quidam solo nomine Clerici, habitu milites, actu neutri, & dum utriusque ordinis esse cupiunt utrumque deserunt & confundunt: Qui tot mortibus digni sunt quot ad suos subditos exempla perditionis transmutant. Placeat ergo ordinarius luxus vestium splendorum & ornatus superfluous a viris Ecclesiasticis & eorum vernaculis non tam per . . . dictatas, quam actu secutas sit effectualiter interdictus.

Quadragesimus Sextus de Oppressionibus Ecclesiasticorum.

Quoniam vera Charitas refrigescit, & crudelis iniquitas nunc abundat, jura & libertates Ecclesiæ per secularem potentiam impugnantur, decimæ retrahuntur, Vicarii simplices & Rectores per vim & violentiam opprimuntur, & de falsis criminibus . . . Duodenæ Conductæ per malitiam indictantur, & dum sanguis damnatur innoxius, non audet multorum simplicitas Sacerdotum legis procurare remedia, dum mortis periculum pertimescunt: sed vel redimunt injustas vexationes hujusmodi cum bonis Ecclesiæ, aut ne perdant vitam cum pecuniis dimissa cura Gregis Domini fugere ex patria astringuntur. His igitur malis crebrescentibus remedium dignetur apponere Regia Celsitudo, & quod magna Carta de foresta in defensione Ecclesiæ executioni debitæ demandetur cum statutis cæteris optimis.

ab Universitate Oxoniæ.

Ex MS. in Bibl. Colleg. Corp. Christi Oxon. Num. 183.

Christianissimo Principi, Catholicæque Fidei strenuissimo defensori, Henrico, divina magnificentia Regi Angliæ ac Franciæ, ac Domino Hiberniæ, &c. sui devotissimi Oratores Regiæ Majestatis literis ad subscriptum negotium nuper Oxoniæ convocati, subjectionem debitam, & suo temporali Regimine regni cœlestis solium fœliciter promereri. Rex Regum, & Dominus Dominantium, de excelso Cœlorum Throno prospiciens Almæ matris Ecclesiæ tunicam inconsutilem vesanis Hæreticorum latratu & moribus lacerari: ut plane conspiciamus, sublimavit cornu Christi sui, & dedit imperium Regi suo: Dum Vestram, Serenissime Princeps, inclitam dignitatem in regalis eminentiæ solium sublimavit. Exsurrexit enim Deus, ut inimici ejus funditus dissipentur, dum orbi terrarum illuxit fœlicissimus dies ille, quo perhennis Triumphator Imperii Regiæ Majestatis Gladium, velut redivivo nobili Machabæo vestræ celsitudini cœlitus condonavit; in quo, nedum sui populi, sed & summi sui muniminis adversarios dejici cœlesti favore concessit. Quot putamus hunc diem infœliciter prævenissent strages Principum, quot neces Nobilium, quot cum Deo regnantium Regum & Patrum Basilicæ dirutæ, quot Civitates everse; nisi nuper aspirante paracletovestra fortitudo, Sattelitem Antichristi proditoriam malitiam Christianissima victoria castigasset? Fecit enim magna in nobis qui potens est, ut auris audiens tanti beatificet celebritatem tituli triumphalis. Cum igitur, insignissime Princeps, in Ecclesiæ pullutantia perversa reprimitis, tantam rempublicam sublevatis, & de vestri Regni pacifica prolixitate tractatis. ## Articuli concernentes reformationem Universalis Ecclesiæ.

Articulus primus de Jure Papæ.

Quamvis de pleno jure sanctissimi in Christo Patris & Domini nostri, Domini Joannis Papæ xxiii, non sit ullatenus diffidendum, sua tamen Cessio libera & ultronea, nec non cæterorum contententium de Papatu, foret opus alti meriti & mercedis, si per eam verisimiliter tanquam membra in uno vero capite possent cuncti Christicolæ || . . . . . unde pium videtur dictum Dominum nostrum & cæteros contententes ad hoc inducere mediis allectivis.

Secundus de Assumptione Cardinalium.

Quia in primitiva Ecclesia varias Synodos celebrari legimus, unam de substitutione Mathiæ, aliam de Electione vii Diaconorum, valde videtur consonum, summum Pontificem non debere quenquam in Cardinalem assumere nisi de majoris partis suorum Fratrum consilio & assensu: nec alio modo procedere ad provisionem Episcopatum juxta stilum, quo utitur, ita scribens, de consilio Fratrum nostrorum, &c.

Tertius de restitutione Patrimonii Crucifixi.

Vineam hæreditariam Sancti Naboth noluit Deus impune transferri, quanto magis nec Patrimonium Crucifixi, scriptum quippe est, Reddite quæ sunt Cæsaris Cæsari, & quæ sunt Dei Deo. Tributum Cæsaris, inquit Ambrosius, non negetur, & quod Ecclesiæ Dei est Cæsari, utique non debetur, quia jus Cæsaris esse non potest Templum Dei. A majori ergo ut credimus temporalibus Viris tradenda non est Christi hæreditas possidenda: Placeat igitur, ut in manus virorum, seu Dominorum temporalium Prioratus Alienigenarum non tradatur cum Ecclesiis Domino consecratis.

Quartus de promotione Universitatis.

Quia Studii Generalis Universitas diversis regnis statui & nutrir debuit, ut ipsorum Lampas illuminans, purgans, & proficiens, terras & patrias adjacentes illuminans per doctrinam difficultum dubiorum, purgans a tenebris hæresium & errorum, proficiens exemplis virtutum & morum. Ne igitur deficiente oleo lampadis lux & lumen simul deficiant, placeat virtuosus studentibus providere.

Quia Sedes Apostolica antiquitus dicebatur . . . sancta, quod sanctum recepit, vel sanctum efficit, aut cito dejicit: Cujus tamen contrarium, quadam arte Magica jam molitur . . . . . conturbatorum Symon Magus hæresim ab eo dictam Symoniacam, tam Apostolica, quam Sanctorum Patrum antiquitas omnium hæresium errorumque Charibdin de Ecclesiæ finibus affugare satagit, placeat igitur ad Extirpationem hujus Hæreseos effectualiter laborare.

Sextus de Indulgentiis.

Sicut alias Angelorum Manna cibum dulcissimum Israeliticus populus quodam Consilio indemnitate fastidio in nauseam & horrorem vertebat, sic hodie indulgentiarum papalium tam larga, tam prodiga, & tam frequens concessio a plerisque venalis creditur, sicque populo quasi contemptibilis jam vilescit: quosdam vero procliviores efficit ad peccandum, & ad opera penitentiae tardiores: Et ideo videtur expediens ordinare remedium in præmissis.

Septimus de creatione & translatione Episcoporum.

Quia nimium excessiva feoda, quæ in Episcoporum creationibus & translationibus eorundem Sedes precepit Apostolica, nec non primorum fructuum reservationes nullo juris scripto fulcitæ cedunt in nimis grave scandalum dictæ sedis, totiusque Ecclesiæ Christianæ, Quam electiones & translationes hujusmodi sunt dissimiles, & minus dissonæ prioribus in tempore Apostolorum, & longe post tempora eorundem! Placeat ordinare remedium in præmissis, ut domi dormiat avaritia, & ab Ecclesia sponsa Christi exulet Symonia, qua plures Ecclesiastici his diebus flebiliter polluuntur.

Quia etiam ex mirabili gravitate excessum feodaliū, quos pro literis super indulgentiis, absolutionibus, gratiis, provisionibus & similibus percipiunt Officarii dictæ sedis, datur occasio inferioribus Prælatiis, Clericis & Laicis similia faciendi: sicque omnia judicantur venalia, & de Symoniaca pravitate suspecta, placeat ergo fælix remedium invenire & ut hujusmodi feoda rationabiliter restringantur.

Nonus de indignis Prælatiis & Curatis.

Marcus Evangelicus, & B. Antonius, ut Episcopatu & Sacerdotio reputarentur indigni, suos pollicem & auriculam ressecabant antiquitus: Quibus aliqui jam succedunt tempore non virtute, moribus & scientia; sacris indigni; qui ad præfata omnia impudenter se ingerunt, & admissi cæci cæcos ducunt; & ambo in foveam simul cadunt, sicque laqueus ruinæ populi sacerdotes mali, & ideo videtur expediens pro communi utilitate Ecclesiæ, his malorum vitiis viriliter obviare.

Est & malum sequens ex priore pessimum inter alia, quæ videntur sub sole, quod Pontifices, & cæteri in dignitate positi, contra consilium circumscripti; idcirco tales sibi provident ac constituunt ministros & Judices super plebem, ante quorum oculos non est Dei timor, in quibus non est veritas, sed cupiditas radix omnium vitiorum; imo quamvis lex bona sit si quis ea legitime utatur; talium tamen ministrorum laquei & abusus illegitimi penes totum a lege Domini illegitimant Christianissimum: Placeat ergo remedium invenire.

Unde-

A. D. 1414.

Undecimus de commendis Episcoporum.

Quia contra consilium Elisei Prophetæ relictis vacuis vasa plena inutiliter super-impleri videntur, dum Episcopis conceduntur Beneficia alia in Commendam, quod tamen universalis Ecclesiæ non videntur cedere ad emendam, placeat hunc morbum curare congrua medicina, &c.

Duodecimus de carnalitate Prælatorum.

Quia cæca carnalitas Syon edificat in sanguinibus, & commutat Jerusalem in pomorum custodiam; dum suos consanguineos aut nepotulos & imberbes comatulos ad animarum curam assumere non verentur; Placeat ergo tales excessus restringere in futurum.

Tertius Decimus de avaritia eorundem.

Quia a Propheta ad Sacerdotem omnes student avaritiæ, protendentes laqueos in capturam pecuniæ, in tantum, quod plerique Prælati quosdam sibi familiares promovent, ut de eorum beneficiis terram sibi detorqueant, & eorum beneficia pro minori ætate in manibus suis detineant. Placeat, &c.

Quartus Decimus de Religiosis Beneficiatis.

Quia præcordia fatuorum, sicut rota curri, & quasi axis versatilis cogitatus eorum, qui in Scandalum & Jacturam totius Religionis mittentes manum ad aratrum, & obliquo oculo respicientes retro pingues impetrant personatus. Placeat, &c.

Cum cedat ad subversionem & scandalum antiqui regiminis Ecclesiæ, . . . . juvenes tanquam armis insolentes, qui nec horas dicunt canonicas, nec habitu vel tonsura distinguunt. a Laicis Præbendas in Ecclesia occupant & Capellas; igitur ne deteriora contingant, deponant Prælati desidium, & legis Edictum aspere exerceant contra tales, &c.

Sextus Decimus de Pastoribus revocandis ad curam.

Quia conqueritur Scriptura de Pastoribus pascentibus semetipsos; quales moribus se ostendunt, qui ut mercenarii a curis effugiunt, ut Lupi tamen rapaces gregem dilaniant, nec voces, sed vellera gregis agnoscunt. Diligentia studeat prælatorum tales specialiter ad sua beneficia revocare curatos, qui extra suam curam voluptatibus & marsupiiis vacant implendis in Civitatibus in Dominorum Curiis & Officiis solliciti in compotis & coquinis. Ac pro cæteris placeat ordinare, qui in Cathedralibus, Universitate, & aliis Officiis occupari videntur honeste, ut limitandis temporibus sub pœna taxanda dispensatio non excuset, quin suas curas teneantur interim visitare.

Cum pauci valde curam unicam aut proprias animas vix sufficiant gubernare, ut post tubam scietur novissimam mira doctis censetur præsumptio, quod his diebus tot inscii plus anhelantes rei mundanæ, cupidi, quam animarum saluti, tot sibi Beneficia audeant cumulare: quod sine causa purgandi non constat esse prohibitum a Canonicis institutis. Cui quidem præsumptuoso periculo vicinam esse sensimus practisatam a quam pluribus congeriem pinguum præbendarum. Tantæ igitur cupiditatis voragini apponat discretio moderamen.

Cum in quibusdam Cathedralibus, Collegiatisve Ecclesiis hujus regni tam grandia sunt statuta, ut quasi insanis Jeroboam illa ponantur venalia, quæ a benefactoribus fuerant gratis data; sicque pauperiores Canonici, si ad honorem Ecclesiæ & cultum divinum ampliandum personaliter residere voluerint, propter nimiam tamen exactionem pecuniarum, expensarum & sumptuum, quas dicta statuta requirunt effectualiter in dictis Ecclesiis residere non possunt. Unde fit quod pauci || . . . . . quarundam Ecclesiarum omnes possessiones & proventus earundem contra justam conscientiam nimis applicant sibi ipsis; sicque de multis personis idoneis Ecclesiæ sacro-sanctæ subtrahitur, & divinis obsequiis & fundatoribus multipliciter derogatur. Ipsiis conveniens appareat nimis remedium, si sine talibus sumptibus & pomposis conviviis Canonici ad deservendum altari participandi æque cum Residentibus in una saltem Ecclesia libere forent admissi. || f. flagitii.

Quia sub ficta veritatis imagine fraus vera coram Deo, uti credimus, proprium decipiens inventorem sub colore justitiæ glebas cum jure patronatus ultra omnes metas justii pretii sub spe beneficii in proximo vacaturi non sine intentione corrupta mercatur communiter his diebus; & quia expressius conscientiæ || corruptela ostendit viri religiosi perpetuo Dominis temporalibus suas alienant possessiones, hoc pacto præhabito, ut de proprio vel propriando beneficio sint securi; alii per alias . . . . . cas & Symoniæ cautelas inferni voragine se immergunt per medias mercandi personas & alia commercia fraudulenta. Ac si cuncta videntem Cautelarum velamine vitarentur cæcarum Compellantur igitur si placeat sine more dispendio tales Symoniaci sic adepta beneficia resignare, quia ab illo intoxicationis veneno aliter mundari non possunt, & provideatur artius de futuro pro Symoniacis celerius castigandis, ne promereantur vindictam Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ. || f. Corruptelam.

Quia ab ortu . . . . . Schismatis pestilentis per Suggestiones varias subdolas & Sinistras facta est multiplex Ecclesiarum appropriatio, & presertim mensis Episcopalibus ac etiam Monasteriis in bonis temporalibus sufficienter dotatis. Unde gravis suboritur parochianorum desolatio pauperum subducitur hospitalis recreatio, & quod his deterius est cura negligitur animarum, placeat igitur habita requisitione Debita Appropriationes hujusmodi revocare, & pro futuris provide obviare.

Quia plures nimis appropriantur Ecclesiæ, in quibus perpetui non subsistantur Vicarii, sed Sacerdotes ad nutum remotivi, qui cum vix annuales habeant minus curant. Ac ubi instituti sunt Vicarii assignatur eis portio tam exilis, quod se ipsos congrue sustentare nequeunt, neque suos recreare pauperes parochianos, ut tenentur. Placeat, &c.

Vicesimus Secundus de Exemptionibus Religiosorum.

Quia Viri Religiosi Exemptionum privilegia impetrantes, quod nullos de Gloriosa Christi familia fecisse legimus in Scripturis; delinquant enim frequenter tanto audacius quanto a jugo correctionis ordinariæ longius retraxere cervices; plurimum videtur expediens quod exceptiones hujusmodi cum discretione semper provida revocentur; eo quod inter religiosos exemptos Brigæ oriuntur detestabiles; quibus horribiliter scandalizantur, favor minuitur, ac possessiones ac prædia eis collata, unde Deo deserviant, in litibus consumuntur: prout in ordine Cisterciensi & Cluniacensi per Angliam satis patet.

A. D. 1414.

Vicesimus Tertius de punitione exemptorum.

Quia Religiosi exempti suadente Diabolo, frequenter carnalibus vitiis polluntur nec puniuntur a Prælatiis propriis, sed peccata continuant impunita. Videtur expediens statuere, ut locorum Ordinarii ad puniendos & reformandos omnes religiosos plenam habeant potestatem, & prefertim pro crimine fornicationis, quod committitur extra Claustrum, &c.

Vicesimus Quartus de Excessibus Ordinariorum.

Episcopi quidam his diebus & eorum Archidiaconi recipiunt feoda excessiva pro institutionibus, permutationibus, confirmationibus Electionum, installationibus Prælatorum, & literis Ordinum & pro testamentorum probationibus summas recipiunt excessivas; acquietando finaliter executores illorum finale compoto non audito: jure tamen scripto in oppositum acclamante. Ideo videtur expediens ut ubi sunt feoda de jure solvenda limitentur ad certum. Dum tamen pro literis ordinum, institutionum, installationum, & presentationum nihil solvat penitus in futurum.

Quamvis cunctæ Visitationes juridice ad correctionem criminum ordinentur, & non propter pecunias congregandas; quidam tamen Ordinarii his diebus non solum ut defectus corrigant, sed ut colligant, suas Visitationes exercent: || dele. || contra intentionem juris scripti equitantes cum familia nimis magna, quod & illorum subditos gravat, & monet aliquos exemptionum privilegia impetrare. Et quidam Archidiaconorum recipiunt procuraciones a Clero ut visitationes omittant, quas ex Officio exercerent. Videtur ergo expediens in præmissis de remedio providere, &c.

Quoniam Abbates & Priores dignitatem Pontificii non attingunt, sed statum obtinent inferiorem, patens illorum præsumptio demonstratur, dum prece suorum ordinum bullas adquirunt ut possint uti mitra atque sandaliis cæterisque insigniis Episcoporum. Et ideo, ut unusquisque ea vocatione maneat, qua vocatus est, & alienentur a Religiosis hujusmodi signa superbia, videtur congruum atque expediens statuere in generali Concilio quod non liceat Religiosis utendo Episcoporum insigniis transgredi statum suum, sed ut cum devoto Vicario Eusebio & Benedicto, suisque Sociis Sanctis Patribus, de his que pertinent statui suo humiliter sint contenti; Tales || . . . . . mitrati, ut ait Bernardus, si eis nomen conferre privilegiorum posset || . . . . . multo auro redimerent, ut possent pontifices appellari.

Plerumque proclamatur a pluribus, quod si Pagani & || f. Infideles. dele. || fideles suæ gentilitatis errore deposito, [* &] sacri Baptismatis fonte voluerint expurgari, bona illorum temporalia Ecclesiæ confiscantur, quod multos Judæorum, ut creditur, trahit a baptismo. Pium igitur esset & meritorium toti Concilio ordinare remedium in præmissis. Cum enim Philippus baptizavit Eunuchum, Currum suum ab eo non abstulit neque bona, quæ secum attulit ad baptizandum.

Quia non videtur consonum quempiam juramento constringi ne in causa justa || f. debeat. || . . . . . sui juris remedia postulare. Cumque Patroni varii pauperes promovendo Vicarios de non prosequenda augmentatione suæ portionis quantumlibet rationabiliter assignatæ juramentum ab eis exigunt & extorquent. Videtur expediens juramenti hujusmodi obviare, ac etiam remedium ordinare, ne Vicarii vel

vel Rectores ad solvendas pensiones ignotas juramentis similibus astringantur. A. D. 1414.

Vicesimus Nonus de Extraneis Beneficiatis.

Cum juxta Salvatoris sententiam singuli curam habentes animarum teneantur pascere gregem Christi pabulo doctrinae Salvatoris, & Lupos effugare ab ovibus suis suae praedicationis latratu: Quidam tamen || . . . . . promoventur in Regno Angliae ipsius Regni idioma penitus ignorantes quique ad informandum subditos indisponuntur ut muti. Ideo videtur expediens ordinare, ut nullus ad beneficia Ecclesiastica promoveatur in aliquo regno, nisi idioma vulgare ejusdem Patriae sufficienter intelligat, & . . . loquatur. || f. Extranei.

Quia nimium importunis literis Dominorum & precibus, quae plerisque patronis sunt species violenta jubendi ad Beneficia Ecclesiae plurimum promoventur indigni & quod magis detestabile & Deo displicens est quam plurimi temporales Patroni maledicto quodam commercio praesentationes Ecclesiarum, ac etiam licentias permutandi vendunt damnabiliter pacto publico vel fraudulentis cautelis. Vivax igitur istis vitiis remedium apponatur, &c.

Tricesimus Primus de Prærogativis Ecclesiarum Cantuariensis & Eboracensis.

Quoniam Prærogativa Ecclesiarum Cantuariensis & Eboracensis, quae nunquam || determinatur in jure inferiores Episcopos, aliosque Ordinarios atque subditos visitando plurimum inquietavit. Ex qua eoque plena determinatione non agnoscitur, multa juri dissona consequuntur, & potestas ordinariis attributa ab executione debita impeditur & saepius || . . . . . Utile, igitur videtur & expediens toti Ecclesiae Anglicanae, quatenus ad quos & quot casus talis prerogativa extendi debeat, in generali consilio declaretur. || f. Determinantur. || f. Enervatur.

Cum nulla juris sanctio ad humani ingenii varietatem sufficiat, nec ad decisionem lucidam suae nodosae ambiguitatis attingat; quare vix aliquid adeo certum statuitur, || quoniam ex causis emergentibus revocari possit in dubium. Quia igitur inter Saeculares curatos & religiosos mendicantes gravis & continua est altercatio, utrum per statutum Domini Clementis Capitulo Dudum, vel Domini Johannis Cap. Vas Electionis, aut aliquid simile derogatum sit in toto vel in parte illi antiquo statuto concilii Generalis omnis utriusque sexus. Placeat ergo Praelatis Ecclesiae ambiguitatem tollere in praemissis. || f. Quod non.

Quia notabilitas gravioris culpae videtur invita subtractio alieni parvuli vel infantis, quam equi vel bovis. Cumque Religiosi mendicantes, plerosque parvulos absque consensu suorum parentum claustris vel domibus intrando surripiant. Fiat ordinatio in Generali concilio, qua aetate hujusmodi juvenes debeant tam stricti Ordinis assumere habitum & tonsuram.

Tricesimus Quartus de Confessionibus.

Quoniam frequenter in vilibus & horrendis peccatis parochiani plurimi nobiles & ignobiles utriusque sexus nimio pudore ligati Curato proprio confiteri renunt, eis datur absolutio talis qualis a Fratre inscio & ignaro, expedit Praelatis Ecclesiae remedium apponere in praemisso.

A. D. 1414.

Tricesimus Quintus de Predicationibus eorundem.

Quia Verbum Domini ut venale contemnitur, dum plerique mendicantium sine mora & medio post Sermonem mendicant. Igitur ut vitetur Scandalum expedire videtur, ut a mendicatione in Ecclesiis Fratres abstineant in futuro.

Tricesimus Sextus de indigne Ordinatis.

Quia Regularium quorumcunque, sicut & Secularium turba multa insolens & indocta ad sacros ordines indies convolare non cessat. Placeat ordinare quod eorum singuli cujuscunque Religionis aut Conditionis extiterint a Ministris Episcopi ordinantis in receptione Ordinum, & præsertim Subdiaconi, strictam examinationem subeant in futurum.

Tricesimus Septimus de Ordinatis in Roma.

¶ f. Quos ad. Quia quosdam illad Ordinis Sacerdotalis fastigium Ecclesia Anglicana non admittit, sed tanquam inhabiles & indignos repulit Romæ sæpe Curia, quantumlibet inscios & ignaros quasi idoneos ordinatos remittere consuevit. Fiat supplicatio summo Pontifici quatenus providere dignetur de remedio, ne tales illiterati simplices & ignari amodo in scandalum curiæ & totius Ecclesiæ ad sacros ordines promoveantur.

Tricesimus Octavus de Sacerdotibus Fornicariis.

Quia carnalis vita & lubrica Sacerdotum universam hodie scandalizans Ecclesiam & eorum publica fornicatio penitus impunita, nisi forte levi & latente pœna pecuniaria, perniciosæ cæteris trahitur in Exemplum; Sanctum igitur videtur ad expurgationem Ecclesiæ, quod Sacerdos cujuscunque ordinis extiterit, si publicus fornicator, existat a Celebratione missarum abstineat per tempus limitatum in jure & pœnas in publico subeat corporales.

Tricesimus Nonus contra Falsas Predicationes Quæstorum.

¶ f. deleantur. Quia inverecundi Quæstores turpissimos suos quæstus ad firmam sumunt cum Symone, indulgentias vendunt cum Gyese, & adquisita consumunt cum filio prodigo inhoneste, sed quod magis est detestabile, cum non sint sacris ordinibus constituti publice prædicant ac false prætendunt, quod absolvendi a pœna & a culpa tam superstites quam defunctos plenam habeant potestatem, cum aliis blasphemis quibus populum spoliant ac seducunt, & verisimiliter ad tartara secum trahunt, præstantes spem frivolam & audaciam ad Peccandum. Abusus igitur hujusmodi sectæ pestiferi ab Ecclesiæ Limitibus ¶ deleatur.

Quia dispensatio consueta plerisque realibus, sed suppressis Apostatis, ut nominales fiant Capellani honoris, notabilis est dispensatio Religionum; cederet ut videtur ad religionis commodum & honorem, si levis suggestio non moneret summum Pontificem cum Religiosis hujusmodi de cætero dispensari.

Quadragesimus Primus de Violatione Festivalium Dierum.

Cum, ut legitur in Scriptura, tam violatio Sabbati, quam inhonoratio templi ab ipso Domino graviter sint punitæ. Erat autem vir quidam lapidatus ad mortem, quia ligna collegit in Sabbato, & Christus deiecit præcipitanter vendentes & ementes in Templo. Sanctum opus esset Principibus & Prælatibus Ecclesiæ per statuta pœnalia & censuras Ecclesiasticas refrænare hujusmodi mala, quæ jam abundant in plebe, publicum forum & nundinas diebus Dominicis & Festis exercente etiam plus solito & in locis sacratis. Per hæc autem mala vehementer menter Deus offenditur, devotio contemplationis subtrahitur, & fides etiam A. D. 1414.

Christiana non modicum vulneratur.

Quadragesimus Secundus de Reformatione Hospitalium.

Quia ad pauperum & debiliū sustentationem fundantur hospitalia & dotantur, quibus ejectis Magistri hospitalium & custodes eorū bona convertunt in usus proprios & consumunt, & id malum accidit in non paucis Abbatiis, Prioratibus, & Ecclesiis Collegiatis, quibus multæ possessiones & prædia conferuntur, ut ex eis omni anno certa portio distribuatur pauperibus & egenis, in hoc casu causam . . . defendere, ut tenentur.

Quia Christianæ Religionis fides solida radix est & basis, pro salute Ecclesiæ fiat juris executio de Episcopis, quorum si quis super expurgando de sua Diocesi hæreticæ pravitatis fermento negligens fuerit aut remissus, cum idem certis indiciis apparuit mox ab Episcopali Officio deponatur.

Quia maxima laus est Christiani Principis Christi Ecclesiam defendere ab infastis; Placeat Majestati Regiæ, quatenus sui Officiarii publicis deputandi Officiis, Vicecomites scilicet, Majores, Ballivi, &c. quocunque nomine censeantur in suorum officiorum receptione juramentis specialibus astringantur, ut capiendo, tenendo, & puniendo hæreticos seu Lollardos Episcopis pro viribus favent & assistant.

Quia diversorum librorum & tractatum inepta translatio simplices idiotas doctrinis variis & peregrinis abducit, placeat Regiæ Majestati statuere, quod libri & tractatus novelli ab ortu Schismatis Anglicani confiscari valeant & eorum possessionibus subtrahi, donec per sciolos non suspectos ipsorum in linguam maternam translatio comprobetur.

Quadragesimus Quintus de nimio apparatu Clericorum.

Quia quidam solo nomine Clerici, habitu milites, actu neutri, & dum utriusque ordinis esse cupiunt utrumque deserunt & confundunt: Qui tot mortibus digni sunt quot ad suos subditos exempla perditionis transmutant. Placeat ergo ordinarius luxus vestium splendorum & ornatus superfluous a viris Ecclesiasticis & eorum vernaculis non tam per . . . dictatas, quam actu secutas sit effectualiter interdictus.

Quoniam vera Charitas refrigescit, & crudelis iniquitas nunc abundat, jura & libertates Ecclesiæ per secularem potentiam impugnantur, decimæ retrahuntur, Vicarii simplices & Rectores per vim & violentiam opprimuntur, & de falsis criminibus . . . Duodenæ Conductæ per malitiam indictantur, & dum sanguis damnatur innoxius, non audet multorum simplicitas Sacerdotum legis procurare remedia, dum mortis periculum pertimescunt: sed vel redimunt injustas vexationes hujusmodi cum bonis Ecclesiæ, aut ne perdant vitam cum pecuniis dimissa cura Gregis Domini fugere ex patria astringuntur. His igitur malis crebescens remedium dignetur apponere Regia Celsitudo, & quod magna Carta de foresta in defensione Ecclesiæ executioni debitæ demandetur cum statutis cæteris optimis.

T Thomas permissione divina, &c. Venerando Fratri Nostro Domino Ricardo, Dei gratia London Episcopo, Salutem & Fraternalam in Domino Charitatem. Vox in Excelso audita est lamentationis, fletus, & luctus Rachel, i. e. Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ plorantis filios suos Christiani nominis Athletas; sed lacrymæ suæ diuturnæ fletu siccantur in maxillis, quia non est qui consoletur eam ex omnibus Charis Ejus: Luget namque mortem millium dum unicæ Columbæ Dei militantis Ecclesiæ secundum caput monstruose appositum, membra quæq; alteræ parti adhærentia, etsi in se salva, aspersione sanguinis monstruosa, bona & utilia tanquam infructuosa suspendet, tanquam mala abscindit & putrida, ac tanquam maledicta Excommunicationis Censura percellit; interdicat Regna sibi adversantia; Ecclesiarum suspendit Organa; Reges & Prælatos discernit, Primates Officio, Clerum, populum, & vulgus Excommunicationis mucrone condemnat; Sic ut vix sciat Ovis Erronea ubi veri Pastoris caulas inveniet. Cujus quæso musica, his solide ponderatis, non vertetur in Luctum? Sed vae! vae! proch-

proch dolor ! lacrymæ viduæ ascendunt in Excelsum, sed Dominus Exauditor non delectatur in illis. Quæsit Ecclesia cum lacrymis pœnitentiæ locum, sed jam per xxx annos & ultra clamans, non invenit eum, schismate perdurato, spesque pulcherrima de & super unione Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ per Dominum nostrum Papam & suos Cardinales in sua Creatione promissa, juramentisque, ac votis Eorundem firmata, jam redit ad frustra, posteriorque pestis supervenit priori deterior. Nam etsi omnes aquæ (Dominus scilicet noster Papa & Cardinales) congregatæ sint in locum unum, Civitatem Lucan. Terra tamen apparet arida, eo quod os putei aquas recipientis Lapide grandi, utinam non vanæ gloriæ cupidine, stat obstruam; nec supervenit Jacob, aut alius quisquam cœlesti dono imbutus, qui lapidem amoveat ab ore putei, ut fluminis impetus lætificet Civitatem Dei. Scribunt namque Cardinales Domino nostro Regi ac nobis & cæteris Confratribus nostris Suffraganeis, quod Dominus noster Papa contra formam in voto, juramento, ac diversis tractatibus expressam, & ipsis Cardinalibus inconsultis, quin verius expresse reclamantibus, novos creavit Cardinales, ipsisque antiquis Cardinalibus mandata & injunctiones tam importabilia indixit, ut ipsi omnes & singuli ab eisdem mandatis & injunctionibus ab ipsoque Papa irrationabiliter & secundum non rectam informationem decernente, ad ipsumet secundum rectam rationem, & melius informatum, decreturum; Item ab ipso Papa Vicario Christi in terris, ad Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum, qui judicaturus est vivos & mortuos, & Seculum per ignem; Item ad Generale Concilium, a quo, & in quo solent gesta summorum Pontificum quæcunque judicari possint, decerni & judicari; Item ad Papam & Pontificem futurum, cuius est gesta inordinata sui prædecessoris in melius reformare, appellarunt, ac metu majoris mali quidam Eorum pedestres & rebus omnibus spoliati, quidam vero Equestres, Novem videlicet in numero, de Civitate Lucana, & a Præsentia Domini nostri Papæ usque in Civitatem Pisanam recesserunt, de unitate Ecclesiæ, nisi aut divinitus, aut sagacitate humana, gratiosius provideatur, diffisi. Supplicant igitur iidem Cardinales, Collegium videlicet antiquum, tam Domino nostro Regi, quam Nobis & Suffraganeis nostris, de bonâ assistentia in facto unionis, quia ipsi, Collegium Cardinalium, ad hoc effectualiter laborarunt juxta vires: Dominusque noster Rex per nos aditus & consultus tanquam Christianissimus Pugil & Athleta Ecclesiæ, suum ad hoc auxilium, consilium, & favorem, in omnibus pollicetur, in omnibus animo satis prompto, & ultra quam dicendum est ad præsens præparato. Nos igitur considerantes quod hoc maledictum Schisma ultra omnia anteriora diutius noscitur perdurasse, quodque mala infinita & notoria quæ hic causa brevitatis recitare non expedit exinde provenerunt, Nos tamen de Regno Angliæ, quod tamen dolenter referimus, modicum hucusque circa unionem laborare curavimus, cujus prætextu Anglicani nominis fama noscitur diminuta: Volenti igitur quod segniter egimus provida emendatione corrigere, & ut eo sagacius fiat, quo plurimorum firmetur discreto consilio, ob hanc causam tantum, & non aliam, Prælatos & Clerum nostræ Cantuariensis Provinciæ ad certos diem & locum infra scriptos duximus convocand. de & super hac sancta & salubri materia unionis Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ tractaturos, suaque sana consilia & assensum impensuros, ulteriusque factur. quod ipsius materiæ arduitas exigit & requirit. Copia Literæ missæ Regi Henrico Vto, ab Universitate Oxoniæ.

Ex MS. in Bibl. Colleg. Corp. Christi Oxon. Num. 183.

Christianissimo Principi, Catholicæque Fidei strenuissimo defensori, Henrico, divina magnificentia Regi Angliæ ac Franciæ, ac Domino Hiberniæ, &c. sui devotissimi Oratores Regiæ Majestatis literis ad subscriptum negotium nuper Oxoniæ convocati, subjectionem debitam, & suo temporali Regimine regni cœlestis solium fœliciter promereri. Rex Regum, & Dominus Dominantium, de excelso Cœlorum Throno prospiciens Almæ matris Ecclesiæ tunicam inconsutilem vesanis Hæreticorum latratu & morsibus lacerari: ut plane conspiciamus, sublimavit cornu Christi sui, & dedit imperium Regi suo: Dum Vestram, Serenissime Princeps, inclitam dignitatem in regalis eminentiæ solium sublimavit. Exsurrexit enim Deus, ut inimici ejus funditus dissipentur, dum orbi terrarum illuxit fœlicissimus dies ille, quo perhennis Triumphator Imperii Regiæ Majestatis Gladium, velut redivivo nobili Machabæo vestræ celsitudini cœlitus condonavit; in quo, nedum sui populi, sed & summi sui muniminis adversarios dejici cœlesti favore concessit. Quot putamus hunc diem infœliciter prævenissent strages Principum, quot neces Nobilium, quot cum Deo regnantium Regum & Patrum Basilicæ dirutæ, quot Civitates everse; nisi nuper aspirante paracletovestra fortitudo, Sattelitem Antichristi proditoriam malitiam Christianissima victoria castigasset? ## Articuli concernentes reformationem Universalis Ecclesiæ.

Articulus primus de Jure Papæ.

Quamvis de pleno jure sanctissimi in Christo Patris & Domini nostri, Domini Joannis Papæ xxiii, non sit ullatenus diffidendum, sua tamen Cessio libera & ultronea, nec non cæterorum contententium de Papatu, foret opus alti meriti & mercedis, si per eam verisimiliter tanquam membra in uno vero capite possent cuncti Christicolæ || . . . . . unde pium videtur dictum Dominum nostrum & cæteros contententes ad hoc inducere mediis allectivis.

Secundus de Assumptione Cardinalium.

Quia in primitiva Ecclesia varias Synodos celebrari legimus, unam de substitutione Mathiæ, aliam de Electione vii Diaconorum, valde videtur consonum, summum Pontificem non debere quenquam in Cardinalem assumere nisi de majoris partis suorum Fratrum consilio & assensu: nec alio modo procedere ad provisionem Episcopatum juxta stilum, quo utitur, ita scribens, de consilio Fratrum nostrorum, &c.

Tertius de restitutione Patrimonii Crucifixi.

Vineam hæreditariam Sancti Naboth noluit Deus impune transferri, quanto magis nec Patrimonium Crucifixi, scriptum quippe est, Reddite quæ sunt Cæsaris Cæsari, & quæ sunt Dei Deo. Tributum Cæsaris, inquit Ambrosius, non negetur, & quod Ecclesiæ Dei est Cæsari, utique non debetur, quia jus Cæsaris esse non potest Templum Dei. A majori ergo ut credimus temporalibus Viris tradenda non est Christi hæreditas possidenda: Placeat igitur, ut in manus virorum, seu Dominorum temporalium Prioratus Alienigenarum non tradatur cum Ecclesiis Domino consecratis.

Quartus de promotione Universitatis.

Quia Studii Generalis Universitas diversis regnis statui & nutrir debuit, ut ipsorum Lampas illuminans, purgans, & proficiens, terras & patrias adjacentes illuminans per doctrinam difficilium dubiorum, purgans a tenebris hæresium & errorum, proficiens exemplis virtutum & morum. Ne igitur deficiente oleo lampadis lux & lumen simul deficiant, placeat virtuosis studentibus providere.

Quia Sedes Apostolica antiquitus dicebatur . . . sancta, quod sanctum recepit, vel sanctum efficit, aut cito dejicit: Cujus tamen contrarium, quadam arte Magica jam molitur . . . . . conturbatorum Symon Magus hæresim ab eo dictam Symoniacam, tam Apostolica, quam Sanctorum Patrum antiquitas omnium hæresium errorumque Charibdin de Ecclesiæ finibus affugare satagit, placeat igitur ad Extirpationem hujus Hæreseos effectualiter laborare.

Sextus de Indulgentiis.

Sicut alias Angelorum Manna cibum dulcissimum Israeliticus populus quodam Consilio indemnitate fastidio in nauseam & horrorem vertebat, sic hodie indulgentiarum papalium tam larga, tam prodiga, & tam frequens concessio a plerisque venalis creditur, sicque populo quasi contemptibilis jam vilescit: quosdam vero procliviores efficit ad peccandum, & ad opera poenitentiae tardiores: Et ideo videtur expediens ordinare remedium in præmissis.

Septimus de creatione & translatione Episcoporum.

Quia nimium excessiva feoda, quæ in Episcoporum creationibus & translationibus eorundem Sedes precepit Apostolica, nec non primorum fructuum reservationes nullo juris scripto fulcitæ cedunt in nimis grave scandalum dictæ sedis, totiusque Ecclesiæ Christianæ, Quam electiones & translationes hujusmodi sunt dissimiles, & minus dissonæ prioribus in tempore Apostolorum, & longe post tempora eorundem! Placeat ordinare remedium in præmissis, ut domi dormiat avaritia, & ab Ecclesia sponsa Christi exulet Symonia, qua plures Ecclesiastici his diebus flebiliter polluantur.

Quia etiam ex mirabili gravitate excessum feodaliū, quos pro literis super indulgentiis, absolutionibus, gratiis, provisionibus & similibus percipiunt Officarii dictæ sedis, datur occasio inferioribus Prælati, Clericis & Laicis similia faciendi: sicque omnia judicantur venalia, & de Symoniaca pravitate suspecta, placeat ergo fælix remedium invenire & ut hujusmodi feoda rationabiliter restringantur.

Marcus Evangelicus, & B. Antonius, ut Episcopatu & Sacerdotio reputarentur indigni, suos pollicem & auriculam refecabant antiquitus: Quibus aliqui jam succedunt tempore non virtute, moribus & scientia; sacris indigni; qui ad præfata omnia impudenter se ingerunt, & admissi cæci cæcos ducunt; & ambo in foveam simul cadunt, sicque laqueus ruinæ populi sacerdotes mali, & ideo videtur expediens pro communi utilitate Ecclesiæ, his malorum vitiis viriliter obviare.

Est & malum sequens ex priore pessimum inter alia, quæ videntur sub sole, quod Pontifices, & cæteri in dignitate positi, contra consilium circumscripti; idcirco tales sibi provident ac constituunt ministros & Judices super plebem, ante quorum oculos non est Dei timor, in quibus non est veritas, sed cupiditas radix omnium vitiorum; imo quamvis lex bona sit si quis ea legitime utatur; tamen tamen ministrorum laquei & abusus illegitimi penes totum a lege Domini illegitimant Christianissimum: Placeat ergo remedium invenire.

Unde-

A. D. 1414.

Undecimus de commendis Episcoporum.

Quia contra consilium Elisei Prophetæ relictis vacuis vasa plena inutiliter super-impleri videntur, dum Episcopis conceduntur Beneficia alia in Commendam, quod tamen universalis Ecclesiæ non videntur cedere ad emendam, placeat hunc morbum curare congrua medicina, &c.

Duodecimus de carnalitate Prælatorum.

Quia cæca carnalitas Syon edificat in sanguinibus, & commutat Jerusalem in pomorum custodiam; dum suos consanguineos aut nepotulos & imberbes comatulos ad animarum curam assumere non verentur; Placeat ergo tales excessus restringere in futurum.

Tertius Decimus de avaritia eorundem.

Quia a Propheta ad Sacerdotem omnes student avaritiæ, protendentes laqueos in capturam pecuniæ, in tantum, quod plerique Prælati quosdam sibi familiares promovent, ut de eorum beneficiis terram sibi detorqueant, & eorum beneficia pro minori ætate in manibus suis detineant. Placeat, &c.

Quartus Decimus de Religiosis Beneficiatis.

Quia præcordia fatuorum, sicut rota curri, & quasi axis versatilis cogitatus eorum, qui in Scandalum & Jacturam totius Religionis mittentes manum ad aratrum, & obliquo oculo respicientes retro pingues impetrant personatus. Placeat, &c.

Cum cedat ad subversionem & scandalum antiqui regiminis Ecclesiæ, . . . . juvenes tanquam armis insolentes, qui nec horas dicunt canonicas, nec habitu vel tonsura distinguunt. a Laicis Præbendas in Ecclesia occupant & Capellas; igitur ne deteriora contingant, deponant Prælati desidium, & legis Edictum aspere exerceant contra tales, &c.

Sextus Decimus de Pastoribus revocandis ad curam.

Quia conqueritur Scriptura de Pastoribus pascentibus semetipsos; quales moribus se ostendunt, qui ut mercenarii a curis effugiunt, ut Lupi tamen rapaces gregem dilaniant, nec voces, sed vellera gregis agnoscunt. Diligentia studeat prælatorum tales specialiter ad sua beneficia revocare curatos, qui extra suam curam voluptatibus & marsupiis vacant implendis in Civitatibus in Dominorum Curiis & Officiis solliciti in compotis & coquinis. Ac pro cæteris placeat ordinare, qui in Cathedralibus, Universitate, & aliis Officiis occupari videntur honeste, ut limitandis temporibus sub pœna taxanda dispensatio non excuset, quin suas curas teneantur interim visitare.

Septimus Decimus de pluralitate beneficiorum.

Cum pauci valde curam unicam aut proprias animas vix sufficiant gubernare, ut post tubam scietur novissimam mira doctis censetur præsumptio, quod his diebus tot infcii plus anhelantes rei mundanæ, cupidi, quam animarum saluti, tot sibi Beneficia audeant cumulare: quod sine causa purgandi non constat esse prohibitum a Canonicis institutis. Cui quidem præsumptuoso periculo vicinam esse sensimus præfatis a quam pluribus congeriem pinguum præbendarum. Tantæ igitur cupiditatis voragini apponat discretio moderamen.

Cum in quibusdam Cathedralibus, Collegiatisve Ecclesiis hujus regni tam grandia sunt statuta, ut quasi insanis Jeroboam illa ponantur venalia, quæ a benefactoribus fuerant gratis data; sicque pauperiores Canonici, si ad honorem Ecclesiæ & cultum divinum ampliandum personaliter residere voluerint, propter nimiam tamen exactionem pecuniarum, expensarum & sumptuum, quas dicta statuta requirunt effectualiter in dictis Ecclesiis residere non possunt. Unde fit quod pauci || . . . . . quarundam Ecclesiarum omnes possessiones & proventus earundem contra justam conscientiam nimis applicant sibi ipsis; sicque de multis personis idoneis Ecclesiæ sacro-sanctæ subtrahitur, & divinis obsequiis & fundatoribus multipliciter derogatur. Iphis conveniens appareat nimis remedium, si sine talibus sumptibus & pomposis conviviis Canonici ad deservendum altari participandi æque cum Residentibus in una saltem Ecclesia libere forent admissi. || f. flagitii.

Quia sub ficta veritatis imagine fraus vera coram Deo, uti credimus, proprium decipiens inventorem sub colore justitiæ glebas cum jure patronatus ultra omnes metas justii pretii sub spe beneficii in proximo vacaturi non sine intentione corrupta mercatur communiter his diebus; & quia expressius conscientiæ || corruptela ostendit viri religiosi perpetuo Dominis temporalibus suas alienant possessiones, hoc pacto præhabito, ut de proprio vel propriando beneficio sint securi; alii per alias . . . . . cas & Symoniæ cautelas inferni voragine se immergunt per medias mercandi personas & alia commercia fraudulenta. Ac si cuncta videntem Cautelarum velamine vitarentur cæcarum Compellantur igitur si placeat sine more dispendio tales Symoniaci sic adepta beneficia resignare, quia ab illo intoxicationis veneno aliter mundari non possunt, & provideatur artius de futuro pro Symoniacis celerius castigandis, ne promereantur vindictam Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ. || f. Corruptelam.

Quia ab ortu . . . . . Schismatis pestilentis per Suggestiones varias subdolas & Sinistras facta est multiplex Ecclesiarum appropriatio, & presertim mensis Episcopalibus ac etiam Monasteriis in bonis temporalibus sufficienter dotatis. Unde gravis suboritur parochianorum desolatio pauperum subducitur hospitalis recreatio, & quod his deterius est cura negligitur animarum, placeat igitur habita requisitione Debita Appropriationes hujusmodi revocare, & pro futuris provide obviare.

Quia plures nimis appropriantur Ecclesiæ, in quibus perpetui non subsistantur Vicarii, sed Sacerdotes ad nutum remotivi, qui cum vix annuales habeant minus curant. Ac ubi instituti sunt Vicarii assignatur eis portio tam exilis, quod se ipsos congrue sustentare nequeunt, neque suos recreare pauperes parochianos, ut tenentur. Placeat, &c.

Vicesimus Secundus de Exemptionibus Religiosorum.

Quia Viri Religiosi Exemptionum privilegia impetrantes, quod nullos de Gloriosa Christi familia fecisse legimus in Scripturis; delinquant enim frequenter tanto audacius quanto a jugo correctionis ordinariæ longius retraxere cervices; plurimum videtur expediens quod exceptiones hujusmodi cum discretione semper provida revocentur; eo quod inter religiosos exemptos Brigæ oriuntur detestabiles; quibus horribiliter scandalizantur, favor minuitur, ac possessiones ac prædia eis collata, unde Deo deserviant, in litibus consumuntur: prout in ordine Cisterciensi & Cluniacensi per Angliam satis patet.

A. D. 1414.

A. D. 1414.

Vicesimus Tertius de punitione exemptorum.

Quia Religiosi exempti suadente Diabolo, frequenter carnalibus vitiis polluantur nec puniuntur a Prælatiis propriis, sed peccata continuant impunita. Videtur expediens statuere, ut locorum Ordinarii ad puniendos & reformandos omnes religiosos plenam habeant potestatem, & prefertim pro crimine fornicationis, quod committitur extra Claustum, &c.

Vicesimus Quartus de Excessibus Ordinariorum.

Episcopi quidam his diebus & eorum Archidiaconi recipiunt feoda excessiva pro institutionibus, permutationibus, confirmationibus Electionum, installationibus Prælatorum, & literis Ordinum & pro testamentorum probationibus summas recipiunt excessivas; acquietando finaliter executores illorum finale compoto non audito: jure tamen scripto in oppositum acclamante. Ideo videtur expediens ut ubi sunt feoda de jure solvenda limitentur ad certum. Dum tamen pro literis ordinum, institutionum, installationum, & presentationum nihil || solvat penitus in futurum.

Quamvis cunctæ Visitationes juridice ad correctionem criminum ordinentur, & non propter pecunias congregandas; quidam tamen Ordinarii his diebus non solum ut defectus corrigant, sed ut colligant, suas Visitationes exercent: || dele. [||&] contra intentionem juris scripti equitantes cum familia nimis magna, quod & illorum subditos gravat, & monet aliquos exemptionum privilegia impetrare. Et quidam Archidiaconorum recipiunt procuraciones a Clero ut visitationes omittant, quas ex Officio exercerent. Videtur ergo expediens in præmissis de remedio providere, &c.

Quoniam Abbates & Priores dignitatem Pontificii non attingunt, sed statum obtinent inferiorem, patens illorum præsumptio demonstratur, dum prece suorum ordinum bullas adquirunt ut possint uti mitra atque sandaliis cæterisque insigniis Episcoporum. Et ideo, ut unusquisque ea vocatione maneat, qua vocatus est, & alienentur a Religiosis hujusmodi signa superbia, videtur congruum atque expediens statuere in generali Concilio quod non liceat Religiosis utendo Episcoporum insigniis transgredi statum suum, sed ut cum devoto Vicario Eusebio & Benedicto, suisque Sociis Sanctis Patribus, de his que pertinent statui suo humiliter sint contenti; Tales || . . . . . mitrati, ut ait Bernardus, si eis nomen conferre privilegiorum posset || . . . . . multo auro redimerent, ut possent pontifices appellari.

|| f. Domini.
|| f. acquisitio.

Vicesimus Septimus de Infidelibus Baptizandis.

Plerumque proclamatur a pluribus, quod si Pagani & || fideles suæ gentilitatis errore deposito, [*&] sacri Baptismatis fonte voluerint expurgari, bona illorum temporalia Ecclesiæ confiscantur, quod multos Judæorum, ut creditur, trahit a baptismo. Pium igitur esset & meritorium toti Concilio ordinare remedium in præmissis. Cum enim Philippus baptizavit Eunuchum, Currum suum ab eo non abstulit neque bona, quæ secum attulit ad baptizandum.

* dele.

Vicesimus Octavus de Juramentis Extortis.

Quia non videtur consonum quempiam juramento constringi ne in causa justa || f. debeant. || . . . . . sui juris remedia postulare. Cumque Patroni varii pauperes promovendo Vicarios de non prosequenda augmentatione suæ portionis quantumlibet rationabiliter assignatæ juramentum ab eis exigunt & extorquent. Videtur expediens juramentis hujusmodi obviare, ac etiam remedium ordinare, ne Vicarii vel

vel Rectores ad solvendas pensiones ignotas juramentis similibus astringantur. A. D. 1414.

Vicesimus Nonus de Extraneis Beneficiatis.

Cum juxta Salvatoris sententiam singuli curam habentes animarum teneantur pascere gregem Christi pabulo doctrinae Salvatoris, & Lupos effugare ab ovibus suis suae praedicationis latratu: Quidam tamen || . . . . . promoventur in Regno Angliae ipsius Regni idioma penitus ignorantes quique ad informandum subditos indisponuntur ut muti. Ideo videtur expediens ordinare, ut nullus ad beneficia Ecclesiastica promoveatur in aliquo regno, nisi idioma vulgare ejusdem Patriae sufficienter intelligat, & . . . loquatur. || f. Extranei.

Quia nimium importunis literis Dominorum & precibus, quae plerisque patronis sunt species violenta jubendi ad Beneficia Ecclesiae plurimum promoventur indigni & quod magis detestabile & Deo displicens est quam plurimi temporales Patroni maledicto quodam commercio praesentationes Ecclesiarum, ac etiam licentias permutandi vendunt damnabiliter pacto publico vel fraudulentis cautelis. Vivax igitur istis vitiis remedium apponatur, &c.

Tricesimus Primus de Prærogativis Ecclesiarum Cantuariensis & Eboracensis.

Quoniam Prærogativa Ecclesiarum Cantuariensis & Eboracensis, quae nusquam || determinatur in jure inferiores Episcopos, aliosque Ordinarios atque subditos visitando plurimum inquietavit. Ex qua eoque plena determinatione non agnoscitur, multa juri dissona consequuntur, & potestas ordinariis attributa ab executione debita impeditur & saepius || . . . . . Utile, igitur videtur & expediens toti Ecclesiae Anglicanae, quatenus ad quos & quot casus talis prærogativa extendi debeat, in generali consilio declaretur. || f. Determinantur. || f. Enervatur.

Tricesimus Secundus de Confessionibus per Fratres audiendis.

Cum nulla juris sanctio ad humani ingenii varietatem sufficiat, nec ad decisionem lucidam suae nodosae ambiguitatis attingat; quare vix aliquid adeo certum statuitur, || quoniam ex causis emergentibus revocari possit in dubium. Quia igitur inter Sæculares curatos & religiosos mendicantes gravis & continua est altercatio, utrum per statutum Domini Clementis Capitulo Dudum, vel Domini Johannis Cap. Vas Electionis, aut aliquid simile derogatum sit in toto vel in parte illi antiquo statuto concilii Generalis omnis utriusque sexus. Placeat ergo Prælati Ecclesiae ambiguitatem tollere in præmissis. || f. Quod non.

Quia notabilitas gravioris culpæ videtur invita substractio alieni parvuli vel infantis, quam equi vel bovis. Cumque Religiosi mendicantes, plerosque parvulos absque consensu suorum parentum claustris vel domibus intrando surripiant. Fiat ordinatio in Generali concilio, qua ætate hujusmodi juvenes debeant tam stricti Ordinis assumere habitum & tonsuram.

Tricesimus Quartus de Confessionibus.

Quoniam frequenter in vilibus & horrendis peccatis parochiani plurimi nobiles & ignobiles utriusque sexus nimio pudore ligati Curato proprio confiteri renunt, eis datur absolutio talis qualis a Fratre incio & ignaro, expedit Prælati Ecclesiae remedium apponere in præmissis.

A. D. 1414.

Tricesimus Quintus de Prædicationibus eorundem.

Quia Verbum Domini ut venale contemnitur, dum plerique mendicantium sine mora & medio post Sermonem mendicant. Igitur ut vitetur Scandalum expedire videtur, ut a mendicatione in Ecclesiis Fratres abstineant in futuro.

Tricesimus Sextus de indigne Ordinatis.

Quia Regularium quorumcunque, sicut & Secularium turba multa insolens & indocta ad sacros ordines indies convolare non cessat. Placeat ordinare quod eorum singuli cujuscunque Religionis aut Conditionis extiterint a Ministris Episcopi ordinantis in receptione Ordinum, & præsertim Subdiaconi, strictam examinationem subeant in futurum.

Tricesimus Septimus de Ordinatis in Roma.

¶ f. Quos ad. Quia quosdam illad Ordinis Sacerdotalis fastigium Ecclesia Anglicana non admittit, sed tanquam inhabiles & indignos repulit Romæ sæpe Curia, quantumlibet inscios & ignaros quasi idoneos ordinatos remittere consuevit. Fiat supplicatio summo Pontifici quatenus providere dignetur de remedio, ne tales illiterati simplices & ignari amodo in scandalum curiæ & totius Ecclesiæ ad sacros ordines promoveantur.

Tricesimus Octavus de Sacerdotibus Fornicariis.

Quia carnalis vita & lubrica Sacerdotum universam hodie scandalizans Ecclesiam & eorum publica fornicatio penitus impunita, nisi forte levi & latente pœna pecuniaria, perniciosæ cæteris trahitur in Exemplum; Sanctum igitur videtur ad expurgationem Ecclesiæ, quod Sacerdos cujuscunque ordinis extiterit, si publicus fornicator, existat a Celebratione missarum abstineat per tempus limitatum in jure & pœnas in publico subeat corporales.

Tricesimus Nonus contra Falsas Prædicationes Quæstorum.

¶ f. deleantur. Quia inverecundi Quæstores turpissimos suos quæstus ad firmam sumunt cum Symone, indulgentias vendunt cum Gyese, & adquisita consumunt cum filio prodigo inhoneste, sed quod magis est detestabile, cum non sint sacris ordinibus constituti publice prædicant ac false prætendunt, quod absolvendi a pœna & a culpa tam superstites quam defunctos plenam habeant potestatem, cum aliis blasphemis quibus populum spoliant ac seducunt, & verisimiliter ad tartara secum trahunt, præstantes spem frivolam & audaciam ad Peccandum. Abusus igitur hujusmodi sectæ pestiferi ab Ecclesiæ Limitibus ¶ deleatur.

Quia dispensatio consueta plerisque realibus, sed suppressis Apostatis, ut nominales fiant Capellani honoris, notabilis est dispensatio Religionum; cederet ut videtur ad religionis commodum & honorem, si levis suggestio non moneret summum Pontificem cum Religiosis hujusmodi de cætero dispensari.

Quadragesimus Primus de Violatione Festivalium Dierum.

Cum, ut legitur in Scriptura, tam violatio Sabbati, quam inhonoratio templi ab ipso Domino graviter sint punitæ. Erat autem vir quidam lapidatus ad mortem, quia ligna collegit in Sabbato, & Christus deiecit præcipitanter vendentes & ementes in Templo. Sanctum opus esset Principibus & Prælati Ecclesiæ per statuta pœnalia & censuras Ecclesiasticas refrænare hujusmodi mala, quæ jam abundant in plebe, publicum forum & nundinas diebus Dominicis & Festis exercente etiam plus solito & in locis sacratis. Per hæc autem mala vehementer

menter Deus offenditur, devotio contemplationis subtrahitur, & fides etiam A. D. 1414. Christiana non modicum vulneratur.

Quia ad pauperum & debiliū sustentationem fundantur hospitalia & dotantur, quibus ejectis Magistri hospitalium & custodes eorum bona convertunt in usus proprios & consumunt, & id malum accidit in non paucis Abbatibus, Prioratibus, & Ecclesiis Collegiatis, quibus multæ possessiones & prædia conferuntur, ut ex eis omni anno certa portio distribuatur pauperibus & egenis, in hoc casu causam . . . defendere, ut tenentur.

Quia Christianæ Religionis fides solida radix est & basis, pro salute Ecclesiæ fiat juris executio de Episcopis, quorum si quis super expurgando de sua Diocesi hæreticæ pravitatis fermento negligens fuerit aut remissus, cum idem certis indiciis apparuit mox ab Episcopali Officio deponatur.

Quia maxima laus est Christiani Principis Christi Ecclesiam defendere ab infastis; Placeat Majestati Regiæ, quatenus sui Officarii publicis deputandi Officiis, Vicecomites scilicet, Majores, Ballivi, &c. quocunque nomine censeantur in suorum officiorum receptione juramentis specialibus astringantur, ut capiendo, tenendo, & puniendo hæreticos seu Lollardos Episcopis pro viribus favent & assistant.

Quia diversorum librorum & tractatum inepta translatio simplices idiotas doctrinis variis & peregrinis abducit, placeat Regiæ Majestati statuere, quod libri & tractatus novelli ab ortu Schismatis Anglicani confiscari valeant & eorum possessionibus subtrahi, donec per sciolos non suspectos ipsorum in linguam maternam translatio comprobetur.

Quadragesimus Quintus de nimio apparatu Clericorum.

Quia quidam solo nomine Clerici, habitu milites, actu neutri, & dum utriusque ordinis esse cupiunt utrumque deserunt & confundunt: Qui tot mortibus digni sunt quot ad suos subditos exempla perditionis transmutant. Placeat ergo ordinarius luxus vestium splendorum & ornatus superfluous a viris Ecclesiasticis & eorum vernaculis non tam per . . . dictatas, quam actu secutas sit effectualiter interdictus.

Quoniam vera Charitas refrigescit, & crudelis iniquitas nunc abundat, jura & libertates Ecclesiæ per secularem potentiam impugnantur, decimæ retrahuntur, Vicarii simplices & Rectores per vim & violentiam opprimuntur, & de falsis criminibus . . . Duodenæ Conductæ per malitiam indictantur, & dum sanguis damnatur innoxius, non audet multorum simplicitas Sacerdotum legis procurare remedia, dum mortis periculum pertimescunt: sed vel redimunt injustas vexationes hujusmodi cum bonis Ecclesiæ, aut ne perdant vitam cum pecuniis dimissa cura Gregis Domini fugere ex patria astringuntur. His igitur malis crebescuntibus remedium dignetur apponere Regia Celsitudo, & quod magna Carta de foresta in defensione Ecclesiæ executioni debitæ demandetur cum statutis cæteris optimis.

Cum itaque nos jure nostro universum Clerum totius Regni nostri Angliæ visitare intendentes, & visitationem inchoantes prout revera inchoavimus, per dilectum nobis Thomam Cromwell Secretarium nostrum Primarium, & Rotulorum sive Scriniorum nostrorum Magistrum sive Custodem, nostrum ad quasunque causas Ecclesiasticas nostra Autoritate uti supremi Capitis dictæ Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ quomodolibet tractand' sive ventiland' Vicegerentem Vicarium Generalem & Officiale principalem per alias literas patentes sigillo nostro majori communitas constituerimus & præfecerimus; Reverendissimoque Patri & prædilecto Consiliario nostro Thoma Cant' Archiepiscopo ac per eum Tibi, & aliis hujus Regni nostri Episcopis quibuscunque, ne pendente Visitatione nostra hujusmodi aliquas Ecclesias, aut Monasteria, sive loca alia Ecclesiastica quæcunque visitare, aut ea quæ sunt jurisdictionis exercere attentares sive attentarent, per alias literas inhibuerimus; Quia tamen ipse Thomas Cromwell nostris, & hujus Regni nostri Angliæ, tot & tam arduis negotiis adeo præpeditus existit quod ad omnem jurisdictionem nobis ut supremo Capiti hujusmodi Competentem ubique locorum

The Article struck out by the Queen.

That the Byshops should take order, that it be publish'd and declared in every Parish Church within their Diocesses, before the first day of May then next following, That Marriages might be solemnized at all times in the year; so that the Bannes on their severall Sundays or Holydays, in the Service-time, were openly asked in the Church, and no Impediment objected; and so that also the said Marriage be publickly solemnized in the face of the Church at the aforefaid time of Morning Prayer.

Papæ maximi specialibus mandatis providerant, ne aliqui nomine Regio in Concilio Provinciali superiori Toletano interesse deberent, sed Ejus Concilii absolutio Pontificum mandata prævenit, adeo ut effectum debitum sortiri tunc non potuerint. Nunc autem ne res transeat in Exemplum aliis Provinciis & Regnis, jubet Sanctissimus D. N. in publicatione facienda postremo hujus Concilii Toletani expungi, etiam in ipsomet Originali, mentionem Legati Regii qui præsentiam suam in Eo legitur exhibuisse p. 6. in 1. Act. ibi. " Et ipsius nomine presente admodum illustri Gomezio de Avila, Marchione de Velada, &c. atque Eadem ratione Omitti illa verba, p. 55. in Gratiarum Actionibus " Perillustri Marchioni Legato Regio. Hæc habui quæ sanctitatis suæ jussu & nomine D. V. Illustrissimæ significarem, Cui quod reliquum est bonam Opto valetudinem, meque Omni animi studio Commendo.

Roma die 10 Septembris. 1584.

D. V. Illustriss. ac Reverendiss. humillimus Servus Philippus Boncompagnus Card. S. Xysti.

Epistola D. Card' Quirogæ in qua respondet D. Cardinali S. Xysti, Circa Ea quæ objecta fuerunt: Et contendit exemplis Variis ex sacra antiquitate petitis, moris fuisse ut legati & ministri Regii in Actis Synodorum Nominarentur: Proindeque id licuisse ac licere modo Patribus Concilii Toletani.

Illustriss. & Reverendiss. Domine:

Literis amplitudinis V. Illustrissimæ quas ad me 10 Sept. Sanctissimi D. N. nomine dedit duo continentur. Unum est, Sæculares Principes Eorumve Nuncios nunquam interfuisse Conciliis nisi Universalibus. In Provincialibus enim non alia de Causa Reges adfuisse, quam ut reciperent fidem, & Patres ab Immanitate infidelium seu hæreticorum tuerentur; vel quod invitati venissent. Alterum vero est, legati Regii nomen de nostri Concilii Toletani initio fineque expungi Oportere. His literis ut qua decet veneratione respondeam, exponam prius Causas Cur legatus Regius in Concilio Provinciali sit a Nobis admissus: Deinde cur videatur Nomen ejus sine magnis incommodis deleri non posse. Illud tamen Præfabor, nihil me temere & præcipitanter in Eo tunc Gessisse; sed doctis viris in Consilium adhibitis, & re tota cum Reverendissimis Episcopis Comprovincialibus meis mature Communicata.

Missus est igitur ad nostrum Concilium perillustis Marchio Velada a Rege Catholico Domino nostro cum honorificentissimis & modestissimis literis, ut ejus Majestatis nomine nostris tractatibus interesset: Eumque admisimus his de Causis.

I. Quia in Ea possessione Reges Hispania fuisse videramus, ut Præsentes Conciliis Provincialibus sui Regni essent, non modo Ipsi, sed Eorum Nomine Illustres Comitibus Officii Palatini. Cujus consuetudinis frequentia Exemplum sunt in Omnibus prope Conciliis Toletanis Gotthorum Regum tempore habitis. Nam in iii<sup>o</sup> Toletano præsens est Reccaredus Rex, cum Optimatibus. In iv. Sisenandus Rex. In v. Chinthila Rex cum senioribus Palatii sui. In viii<sup>o</sup> Reccefvinthus Rex cum Comitibus. In xii<sup>o</sup> & xiii<sup>o</sup> Ervigius Rex cum Eisdem Comitibus. In xv. xvi. & xvii. quæ nondum sunt impressa, Egica Rex cum Illustribus Palatinis ibidem subscribentibus. Quibus Omnibus Conciliis vix ulla Quæstio fidei agitata, si iii<sup>m</sup> xiv<sup>m</sup> & xv<sup>m</sup> excipias; Reformationis tantum Capita tractata; Nullum ibidem ab Hæreticis aut Infidelibus periculum, cum in iii<sup>o</sup> Concilio Toletano Arianismus ab Hispania penitus Exulasset.

II. Post recuperatam quoque de Sarracenis Hispaniam, idem factum in posterioribus Conciliis Provincialibus, quorum mentio aut in nostris Historiis extat, aut integra actorum Manuscripta Exemplaria apud Nos magno numero cum fide servantur. Nam in Compostellano Anno 876. adfuit Aldefonsus iiii<sup>us</sup>, Rex cognomento Magnus. Et in Ovetensi Anno 877. idem Rex cum Comitibus, quod scriptum reliquit Samperus Episc' Asturicensis, pervetustus auctor. In Legionensi Anno 1012 Aldephonsus V. cum Optimatibus Regni. In Pamylonensi

A. D. 1584. Anno 1023. Sanctius IV. Rex Navarra cum Optimatibus. In Cojancensi diœcesis Ovetensis, Anno 1050 Tredenandus Magnus. In Faccensi Anno 1063. Arragonia Rex Ranimirus cum Optimatibus. In altero Legionensi Anno 1090. sub Reverio Cardinali Legato Urbani II. Aldephonsus Rex VI. In Palentino sub Raymundo Archiepiscopo Toletano Anno 1129. Aldephonsus VIII. Calisti II. fratris filius. In Carrionensi Eodem Anno sub Huberto Cardinali Legato Honorii II. idem Aldephonsus VIII. Quod de his tribus posterioribus Conciliis memoriae prodidit in Historia Compostellana Munio Aldephonsiades Episcopus Mindonien- sis ejus Ætatis scriptor. His vero Omnibus Conciliis mores tantum Reformati Leguntur, hæresis nulla mentio.

Post id tempus rara apud Nos Provincialia sunt habita.

III. Similia Exempla recenti memoria habemus in his Conciliis Provincialibus quæ mox post finitam Sanctam Synodam Tridentinam Anno 1566 in Omnibus Hispaniæ Regnis sunt Celebrata. Nempe in Toletano superiore, Compostellano, Tarraconensi, Valentino, Granatensi, Cesar Augustano, Brocarensi, Ulyssiponen- si, & Eborensi: quibus legati regii semper interfuerunt.

IV. Eam ipsam Consuetudinem fuisse apud alias Nationes legeramus; ut in Italia, Gallia, Germania, & Anglia; in quibus Imperatores Occidentales & reges cum suis Optimatibus convenerunt ad Concilia Provincialia, in quibus Reformatio, non Causa fidei agebatur. De jure non disputamus: sed passim tamen Conciliorum Volumina & Historia id factum esse testantur. Ut exempli Causa in Suessionensi Anno 744. Pipinus adfuit cum suis Optimatibus. In Concilio apud Theodonis villam Anno 812 sub Carolo M. & Ludovico Imp. in fine dicitur "Imperatores & Gallia Principes subscripserunt, singuli singulas facientes Cruces. In Metensi, Comites & plures Nobiles. In Aquisgranensi celeberrimo Anno 816. Ludovicus Imp. In Meldensi Anno 845. sub Carolo juniore Canones repetuntur multorum Conciliorum quæ præsentibus regibus & approbantibus de reformatione essent habita. In Synodo quoque apud S. Medardum Anno 853. idem Carolus præfens fuit. Interfuit autem his ambabus Synodis magnus ille Hincmarus Archiepiscopus Rhemensis, Conciliorum gravis descriptor. In Triburiensi Anno 896. Arnulphus Rex cum Regni sui Principibus. In Ingelheimensi sub Marino legato Apostolico Anno 958. Otho Germanorum & Ludovicus Francorum reges affuerunt. In Viceliaco Burgundia, Anno 1145. Ludovicus Rex cum Regni principibus. In Parisiensi Anno 1187. Philippus Rex In Herbi-polensi Anno 1238. Rodolphus Imperator cum ducibus & Comitibus. Longum esset reliqua Numerare. Et tamen constat hos principes imprimis Catholicos, & libertatis Ecclesiasticæ vindices esse appellatos: quæstionem autem fidei nullam pœne his conciliis habitam. Tantum vero abest ut hi principes Invitados se venisse dicant, ut ipsi potius se Episcopos invitasse passim prædicent.

V. Referri quoque ab ipso Gratiano animadvertebamus Reges aliquos qui Conciliis hujusmodi interfuissent. Ut Conradum regem Concilio Alphesiano 31. q. 1. cap. Illud vero. Pipinum Regem Concilio Wermeriensi 29. q. 2. cap. Si quis ingenuus. Henricum Regem Concilio apud Erphesfort in Germania 15. q. 4. cap. Placita. ut in nova Gratiani Correctione habetur.

VI. Quorundam Conciliorum expressis Canonibus præcipi Videmus, ut Ea præsentibus Regibus haberentur, vel iudices Regii ad ipsa Concilia Provincialia convocarentur. Ut in Concilio apud Palatium Vernis Anno 755. præcipitur cap. 4. Ut singulis Annis mense Martio Synodus fiat in Regis præsentia. Et iii<sup>o</sup> Concilio Toletano, cap. 18. Ad Concilia (inquit) semel in Anno Episcopi congregentur: Iudices quoque locorum & actores fiscalium Patrimoniorum simul cum sacerdotali Concilio in Unum Conveniant. Et IV Toletano, cap. 3. Executor (inquit) a principe postuletur, qui cogat venire iudices seculares ad Synodum. Et in viii<sup>o</sup> Toletano Rece- vinthus Rex sic alloquitur Comites Palatinos: Vos etiam illustres Viros quos ex Officio Palatino huic sanctæ synodo interesse primatus Obtinuit, ac Nobilitas expectabiles honoravit, &c.

VII. Nunquam Pontificem aliquem Romanum, vel nostrum, vel Superiorum temporum memoria fuisse legeramus vel audieramus, qui aut Reges nostros interesse, aut Episcopos illos admittere prohibuisset.

VIII. Le:

VIII. Legatos Regis nostri modestissime hac sua præsentia usos in Conciliis omnibus superioribus accepimus: adfuisse videlicet tantum, non proposuisse, non sententias dixisse, nihil denique per Eos imminutam libertatem Ecclesiasticam. Ipsius autem Regis nostri Catholicam mentem & modestiam, Cum ex reliquis ejus actionibus, vitæque universa, tum ex his quas ad Concilium nostrum dedit literis agnovimus, quarum Exemplum iisdem verbis ad finem subjiciam. Et hæc quidem potissimum Causæ nos impulerunt ut regium legatum in Concilium admitteremus.

Extat quidem Canon ille xvii. Synodi viii<sup>e</sup> generalis Constantinopolitanæ quo Græcos Impp. Conciliis tantum generalibus interfuisse dicitur: Et in Eadem sententiam Cap. Ubinam legistis dist. 96. ex Epist. Nichol. I. ad Michaellem Imp. Neq; ignorabamus Glossam in cap. fin. De iisque fiunt a Prælato, &c. & in Capitulo Adrianus I. dist. 63. Et per multos Juris Canonici interpretes Glossæ auctoritatem secutos, Existimare, laicos Conciliis tantum Generalibus, quibus de Fide Agitur interesse posse: Provincialibus autem, nisi invitentur, non posse. Sed cum tam multa Contraria Exempla Reperiantur (fateor) aliquam aliam illorum Canonum fuisse sententiam sumus suspicati: nempe vel factum duntaxat superiorum temporum Narrasse, quod ita ad Eam diem acciderat ut Imperatores Orientales Synodis tantum Generalibus interfuissent, quibus semper hæreses aliquæ sunt profligatæ: vel Canonem illum Constantinopolitanum, & Epistolam Nicolai quæ Eodem tempore scripta est, frænare imprimis Voluisse Michaelis Imp. Audaciam, qui in Græcia Synodos aliquot Provinciales ad Ignatium Patriarcham deponendum, & Romani Pontificis auctoritatem minuendam paulo ante Congregaverat: vel certe quocunque modo is Canon intelligendus sit, in Occidente (quod multis Canonibus Græcis accidit) non admissum, & in Hispania præsertim contraria Consuetudine abrogatum: Cum tam multi Reges & Optimates nostris Conciliis Provincialibus interfuisse legantur, uti paulo ante e magno numero selectis Exemplis est demonstratum.

Hæc de priore Parte: Dicam nunc cur legati nomen ex Actis Concilii sine magnis Incommodis (meo quidem judicio) deleri non possit. Nam aut secreto id suaviterque faciendum est, ut Amplitudinis V. Illustrissimæ literæ significant, aut Publice. Secreto qui fieri poterit? Cum frequentissimo populo lecta sint in Templo ea Decreta, Regisque & Ejus legati nomen, tum in Principio, tum in Gratiarum Actionibus auditum? Cum Ecclesiarum Capitula ad suas Appellationes multa Exempla ejus Concilii describenda Curarint, Omniumque Oculis subjecerint? Cum Rex ipse ejus Concilii Exemplum per suum Legatum obtinuerit, & diligenter a se lectum ad S. D. N. miserit? Denique id Concilium Exequutioni mandari non potest, nisi de more typis excusum per Provinciam divulgetur. Hispaniæ autem leges imprimi quidquam non patiuntur, nisi Concilii Regii auctoritate probatum, & cum Originali Collatum fuerit.

Publice autem, & Contra Regis Voluntatem deleri legati nomen suaviter quidem nulla ratione potest. Nam Rex ipse Catholicus ut alioqui Religionis pietatisque est Observantissimus, ita juris auctoritatisque quam Sibi deberi existimat acerrimus propugnator esse Consuevit. Spoliari autem se inauditum moleste feret hac, quam a majoribus possessionem accepit, & qua ipse Etiam in aliis Conciliis est Usus. Deinde periculum est ne Reges, si se conciliis excludi videant incipiant variis artibus Conciliorum Provincialium Convocationes impedire, cum magno detrimento Ecclesiasticæ disciplinæ, ad quam vel instaurandam vel retinendam, antiquis vel recentibus Patrum decretis Eorum frequens Celebratio tantopere Commendatur: Quæ nunc etiam valde sunt necessaria ad sedis Apostolicæ Auctoritatem apud Reges & Populos tuendam.

Præterea hoc nostrum Concilium qualecunque est (quod magnis tamen laboribus Nobis constat) perpetua obruetur Oblivione; Et periculum est in posterum ne Concilii Provincialis Celebrandi mentionem quisquam nostrorum Episcoporum facere audeat, cum timeat Ejus Celebrationem Regem nostrum haud permissurum. Postremo, non puto defuturos Regi Consiliarios, qui ubi semel res in disputationem venire cæperit, non id permissu atque tolerantia Ecclesiæ, sed jam suo jure Regibus licere persuadere conentur. Non modo enim pugnabunt Exemplorum numero, & iis rationibus quas supra ad tolerandam Illorum præsentiam retulimus; sed Caussabuntur fortasse jure sibi posse timere Reges Hispaniæ a Conciliis Provincialibus, cum IV Concilio Toletano, Swinthila Rege vivente deposito, Sisenandus ejus hostis in Regem fuerit Confirmatus. Et nuper Anno

A. D. 1584. 1473. Concilium Provinciale ab Archiepiscopo & Episcopis Regi Henrico IV. ad versis in Oppido Aranda Celebratum, causa fuisse existimetur, ut Aranda Oppidum Eo ipso Anno, & Ejus Exemplum aliæ Urbes secutæ, a Rege deficerent.

Cavere quoque sibi Reges posse ne quid Patronatibus Regiis incommodetur, quibus diligenter Cautum est a Concilio Tridentino. Agi etiam sæpe in Conciliis Provincialibus de iis quæ ad Laicos pertinent, ut de Matrimoniis, & de aliis Causis Communibus: Quo eventu Laicos Conciliis interesse debere jura non prohibent, doctores non negant.

Multaque hujus generis Argumenta coacervabunt, quæ Regibus & Eorum Consiliariis in promptu erunt. Quod si maxime Causa cadant, cum ut res habet, & Amplitudo V. Illustrissima fatetur venire possunt invitati, curabunt semper se ab Episcopis invitari, quod haud difficulter obtinebunt.

Quamobrem cum Summorum Pontificum Prudentia in Regibus multa tolerantur, vel majoris Utilitatis parandæ Causa, vel majoris damni Vitandæ, (cujus rei multa Exempla proferri possent e nostra etiam Hispania petita, quæ fedi Apostolicæ maxime Obedientem se præbet) hoc certe tempore mihi toleranda videtur hujusmodi Regum præsentia, tam longa Consuetudine firmata; Ne Quæstio gravissima, & alto silentio hætenus sopita, si semel suscitetur, majora incommoda pariat, & Negotium Reipublicæ facessat.

Hæc sunt secreta Animi mei Consilia, quorum Ego neque Regem, neque quenquam ex Regiis ministris participem feci. Sed Ea quæ mihi de re proposita attente Cogitanti in mentem venerunt, his literis Exponenda putavi. V. Amplitudinis illustrissimæ erit Ea Omnia, aut Eorum Partem quæ maxime ex Usu esse Videbitur, ad SS. D. N. referre, ea Cautione quam rei magnitudo postulat, ne foras efferatur. Et quoniam a plerisque jam intellectum est remissum ad Nos ab Urbe Concilium Provinciale, idque ab Episcopis & Capitulis studiose Efflagitatur; publicari autem vel Executioni mandari, nisi hac difficultate sublata non potest, ut Me de suæ sanctitatis Voluntate quamprimum Illustrissima V. Amplitudo reddet Certiorem, precibus Omnibus Obsecro, Quam Deus Opt' Max' diu salvam fortunatissimamque servet. Toleti die 15 Novembris, MDLXXXIV.

thereupon, Anno 1605.*

JA M E S by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, A. D. 1605.
Defender of the Faith, &c. To all Men to whom these Presents shall come, Greeting. Whereas in and by one Act of Parliament made at Westminster in the five and twentieth Year of the Reign of King Henry the viiith reciting that Whereas the King's Humble and Obedient Subjects the Clergie of the Realm of England had not only knowledged according to the truth that the Convocations of the same Clergie were always, had been, and ought to be Assembled only by the Kings Writ, but also submitting Themselves to the Kings Majestie had promised in Verbo sacerdotii that they would never from thenceforth presume to Attempt Alledge Claime or Put in Ure or Enact Promulge or Execute any New Canons Constitutions Ordinance Provincial or Other or by whatsoever other Name they should be Called in the Convocation unlesse the Kings most Royall Assent and License might to them be had to Make Promulge and Execute the same and that the said King did give his most Royal Assent and Authority in that behalf; It was therefore Enacted by the Authority of the said Parliament according to the said Submission and Petition of the said Clergie, amongst other things, Book.

A. D. 1605. that They nor Any of Them from thenceforth should Enact Promulge or Execute any such Canons Constitutions or Ordinances Provinciaall, by whatsoever Name or Names they might be called in their Convocations in time coming, which always should be Assembled by Authority of the Kings Writ, unlesse the said Clergy might have the Kings most Royal Assent and License to Make Promulge and Execute such Canons, Constitutions and Ordinances Provinciaall or Synodall, upon paine of Every One of the said Clergie doing Contrary to the said Act, and being thereof convict, to suffer Imprisonment and make Fine at the Kings Will. And further by the said Act is provided that no Canons, Constitutions, or Ordinances, should be made or put in Execution within this Realm by Authority of the Convocations of the Clergie contrary or repugnant to the Kings Prerogative Royal, or the Customs, Laws, or Statutes of this Realme, any thing in the said Act to the contrary thereof notwithstanding. CHARLES R.

Most Reverend Father in God we greet you well. Whereas by our Commission under our Great Seale of England, bearing date the tenth day of June last, We did (amongst other things) give full, free, and lawful Liberty to you as President of the Convocation, and to Other the Bishops and Clergie for our Province of York, to Confer, Debate, Treat, Consider, Consult and Agree of and upon such Other Points, Matters and Things as We from time to time should deliver or cause to be delivered unto you in Writing under our Signe Manual or Privy Signet, to be debated, considered, consulted, and concluded upon, any Statutes, Act of Parliament, Proclamation, Provision, Restraint, Clause, Matter, or Thing to the Contrary notwithstanding: Our Pleasure therefore is, and according to the Liberty and Power reserved by our said Commission, We do hereby authorize and require, that you Review or cause a Review to be had and taken both of the Book of Common Prayer, and of the Book of the Form and Manner of Making and Consecrating Bishops, Priests, and Deacons; And after mature Consideration, that you make such Additions or Alterations in the said Books respectively as to you shall seem meet and convenient: Which our Pleasure is, that you exhibit and present unto us in Writing for our further Consideration, Allowance or Confirmation; And for so doing this shall be your Warrant. Given at our Court at Whitehall the 22th day of November 1661.

By his Majesties Command.

To our Right Trusty and Well-beloved the most Reverend Father in God Acceptus Archbishop of York.

The Archbishops and Bishops Letter to the Convocation.

Sirs,

YOU see the Contents of his Majesties Letters for the Review of the Book of Common Prayer, and Ordination of Bishops, Priests, &c. for the dispatch whereof his Majesty requires all possible Expedition. His Grace, and our selves sit in Consultation with the Bishops of the Province of Canterbury. And because the Time allotted for the dispatch of these things is so short, and an Act of Parliament for Confirmation of them ready to passe, the Ordinary Course of concluding them here first, then sending of them down for your Concurrence, and returning them up again, is so dilatory, that it will not be consistent with his Majesties Expectation. It is therefore our Desires and Request to you, that forthwith you would pass a Vote for a Proxie in behalfe of your whole House (wherein our Prolocutors are desired to concurr) to Dr. Henry Fearn Prolocutor, Dr. John Earles Dean of Westm. Dr. John Barwick Dean of Pauls, or to some other of the Lower House of Convocation there Con-junctim & Divisim, to give your Consents to such things as shall be concluded on here in relation to the Premises. This Proxie under your Dean and Chapter and your Chancellours Seale we earnestly desire may (if possible) be sent up by the next Post after this comes to your hands. This is all we have at present: We therefore commit you to the Protection of Almighty God, resting,

Your most Affectionate Friends,

To the Right Worshipful Dr. John Neile Prolocutor, and the rest of his Brethren of the Convocation Assembled for the Province of York.

The Archbishop's Letter to the Register.

Sir,
THE Enclosed to Doctor Neile your Prolocutor goes to him from All the Bishops of the Province, having in it a true Copie of another from his Majestie to my selfe. Deliver it I pray unto him presently (excusing my not writing unto him at present in particular) and hasten their Dispatch back according to the Directions therein with as much speed as possibly you can; for 'tis of Great and General Concernment. The Chancellour who hath been our Clerk herein will perhaps (if at leisure) say more! I adding only this here in the Close, that if we have not All from you by the End of next Week we are lost. And in Case the Convocation sit not, wish the Doctor presently to open the Letter as if it had been sent to himselfe only. Farewell.

Yours,

Novemb. 23.

They were first Assembled, (as I have before observed) in their several Diocesses about it. But they came to no Conclusion there; but desired that they might meet together by their Proctors in One Provincial Convocation for this purpose. Accordingly the Archbishop of Canterbury summon'd them to meet at London, a fortnight after Michaelmas. The Deans, and Archdeacons, or some Other Proctors, appear'd for the Clergy: So did the Religious by themselves, or their Proctors. They agreed upon a xvth of such of their Possessions as had not been charged to the xvth before.

Pag. 212. after l. 33. add. "To this famous Parliament only the Deans of some Cathedral Churches seem to have been summon'd. But to another which was design'd to have been held not long after, the Chapters were also called. So I find in a Writ dated at Gloucester, May the 15th. 1265. In which the King having recited his Intention to hold his Parliament with his Prelates and Great Men, June the 1st, requires the Church of York to send Two of their Body to appear there on their behalf, to Treat with the Prelates and Great Men aforesaid. “ them seem to have come to it.

Pag. 352. l. 27. r. confirms it. l. 46. del. After. Pag. 362. l. 11. r. now come.

Pag. 364. l. 30. r. with it. In this. Pag. 367. l. 1. be, r. have been.

Pag. 376. l. 24. after Provinces, add: so were some of the Canons under that Queen.

Pag. 400. l. 21. Thirty, r. Twenty. Pag. 412. The two last Columns are mis-placed.

Pag. 445. l. 44. r. some Power or Privilege which he had not a Right, &c.

Pag. 449. l. 26. Matter, r. Case. Pag. 460. l. 18. r. Where upon.

Pag. 469. Correct l. 12, &c. thus, “ but they began to omit these Forms as Matters “ of little Moment. Such was the Case of the two last Convocations of that Prince: In“ deed in the Reign of King James the 2d, the Archbishop, &c. Ib. l. 18. del. if of Electing.

Pag. 489. l. 29. Marg. Note. Since this was printed I find in one of the Dean and Chapters Books of the Church of Exeter this Minute: That on January the 29th. Capitulum constituit Magistros Jo. Chambron Praecentor, &c. Procuratores pro Convocatione Cleri. And this may seem to intimate that the Convocation was to meet with the Parliament at this time. But then, in those Books, Convocatio is often used for the Parliamentary Convention of the Clergy: And in the very next Entry of this kind we have an evident Proof of it.
Anno 1539. Martii 29. Tunc et ibidem Constituuntur Procuratores pro Capitulo in Convocatione prox. celebrand. 28 die April. prox. futur. Which was the Day that the Parliament, not the Convocation, was to meet.

Pag. 497. l. 45. r. Queens Chappel. fo 498. l. 1, 61. Pag. 499. l. 10.

Pag. 498. l. 56. Archbishops, r. Cardinals. l. 60. r. President of our Convocation.

Pag. 507. l. 52. add. “ after her Own Life. To most of those Constitutions the Archbishop “ and Bishops of that Province had probably both Agreed and Subscribed with Ours; And “ upon both these Accounts They were the less, &c.

Pag. 519. l. 3. after August 1679; instead of the next three Lines add, “ Which is all “ the Account I can with any certainty Give of it. For tho’ what is there said, came to Me from a Hand, which I thought I might have depended upon, yet I am since inform’d by One who was a Member of that Convocation, that there was a Sermon Preach’d, and a Pro- locutor Chosen; and have been Otherwise fully satisfied of the Truth of it. In the Other Convocation, which met the same Year, October the 18th, there was neither any Sermon preach’d, nor Prolocutor chosen, for a Twelve-month after it Assembled; nor can I learn that there was Any chosen afterwards.

Pag. 535. l. 36. for the One, r. These. Pag. 536. l. 27. r. Or which they did intend.

Pag. 566. l. 25. del. are. Pag. 618. l. 45. Provincial, add, or Synodal.

I have now taken such a Review of my Book as I am, at present, Able to do. I have Corrected every thing that either my Friends suggested to Me, or I otherwise thought to need an Amendment. I am not unsensible that Many of the Changes are of little Importance, and might well enough have been Omitted: But they will at least shew the Desire I have to be exact; and may encourage those who shall discover any more considerable Errours to communicate their Observations to Me. I shall not only very thankfully acknowledge their Favours, but take care to make that Publick Use which I ought to do of Them.
